The laws with reference to these matters have been more strictly enforced than ever before. This administration has deported 157 alien Communists in 3 years. In the previous 7 years of the Truman administration, only 95 alien Communists were deported.

The Congress has passed laws which more nearly fit the penalty for subversion and espionage, and has given our Justice Department the necessary weapons with which to deal with this entire matter.

But most important of all, we are making as sure as possible that none of these people will get back on the payroll again.

IV. When the people of the United States went to the polls in 1952, they had witnessed fiscal irresponsibility for 20 years. During that time they had seen only two balanced budgets—both by the Republican 80th Congress, in 1947 and 1948.

I am happy to report to you that on June 30, 1956, this administration will have balanced the budget and will have a modest surplus of between 1½ and 2½ billions of dollars.

Your Congress, with the support of the President, passed the Tax Revision Act of 1954. This was the first general overhaul of the tax structure of this country in 57 years. Under that act, we granted to the people of this country the greatest tax reduction in all history.

This tax cut amounted to $7½ billion.

Sixty-two percent of the entire amount went to individuals, including a 10-percent across-the-board decrease in income taxes. Thirty-two percent of this tax cut went to businesses of all kinds, including agriculture. A large portion of this tax reduction to business was responsible for the tremendous incentive to business to expand and has resulted in the unparalleled employment and prosperity in this country in the last 3 years.

V. When the people of this country went to the polls in 1952, they knew that for 20 years they had been watching a gradually decreasing dollar and that inflation was rampant.

In the last 3 years of the Truman administration the value of the dollar decreased 12 percent alone. From a 100-cent dollar in 1932 the previous administration had brought us in 1952 to a 54-cent dollar in purchasing power.

The factory mechanic, the white-collar worker, and the farmer were seeing whatever economic gains they made gradually disappear in the mirage of inflation.

During the past 3 years, this administration has halted the inflation spiral which threatened the economic gains of every group in America. The dollar today, in purchasing power, varies less than 1 percent from what it did in 1952.

VI. During the campaign in 1952, the opposing party went up and down the country saying, "Elect a Republican President, and you will see the greatest depression in history."

How many of you remember that?

Let us take a look first at the general business picture. In the past 3 years, retail sales, building construction, and personal income have set alltime records; 1955 was the greatest year in history for business and the worker.

The number of people employed in 1955 was the highest in history. This is in striking contrast with the administration during the previous 20 years. They were never able to produce maximum employment except from war or the after effects of war.

In 1940, which was the last peacetime year before World War II, after 7 years of boondoggling and leaf raking, there were four times as many people unemployed in America as there are today. In 1949, President Truman's last peacetime year before the Korean war, there were twice as many unemployed as there are today.

The proof of any pudding is in the eating. In my estimation, this proves that our policy of encouraging individuals to create jobs is better than the New Deal policy of relying primarily on Government to make jobs.

Your administration has not only given to the people the greatest prosperity ever known, but it has kept our economy on an even keel in all of its efforts.

The gross national product is $12½ billion more than 3 years ago.

We are currently employing between two and three million more people in America than was ever reached under a Democratic administration.

By wise labor policies, and more especially, due to incentive employment factors, strike losses are down 53 percent in 1955 from 1952.

VII. When the people of America went to the polls in 1952, our opposition said, "Elect the Republicans and you will get the most reactionary Government in our history."

I am convinced that a majority of Americans want their Government to be progressive and humanitarian—but they do not want it socialistic.

This has been a guiding beacon light in all that this administration has tried to do. Your Republican administration in Washington has these accomplishments to its credit:

1. Established the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare;

2. Extended Social Security to 10 million more people and liberalized benefits for all of them;

3. Extended unemployment insurance to 4 million Government and small-business workers;

4. Increased railroad retirement and unemployment benefits;

5. Set up a Small Business Administration to assist small business;

6. This administration has advanced the civil rights of minorities everywhere. This administration has done more in 3 years to reduce discrimination than our predecessors did in 20 years;

7. Your President has proposed to Congress programs for highway expansion; medical and health research; and aid to depressed labor areas; all of which are now pending before your Congress in Washington.

I wish to emphasize that all of this has been done without regimentation or centralization. In whatever has been accomplished by your party in Washington, it has reversed the trend of the previous 20 years toward regimentation and centralization.

I am sure the people want an administration which does not look to the past, nor is satisfied with the present, but one which by deeds even more than by words shows the way to new and greater hope for the future. I believe that this program, designed in the very best of American tradition, will keep America on the road to progress. True conservatism has always been progressive * * * and for this we could point to the great record of Theodore Roosevelt.

May I emphasize to my good friends in this convention that the choice this fall is not between the Eisenhower program and something more conservative, but between the Eisenhower program and something far more radical.

So, in conclusion, may I say that the Republican Party can return to the people this fall with an excellent record of stewardship and accounting in the National Government.

Your Members of the House of Representatives have given a good account of themselves. CHARLES HALLECK did an able job as your majority floor leader in the 83d Congress. Other Members, CECIL HARDEN, RALPH HARVEY, EARL WILSON, CHUCK BROWNSON, BILL BRAY, JOHN BEAMER, ROSS ADAIR, and SHEP CRUMPACKER have all stood to be counted on the difficult issues which have faced all of us in Washington. These Members have never surrendered on principle.

They have given your President and your Republican administration all the backing which they conscientiously could and have acquitted themselves to their constituents in excellent fashion. I could not let this moment pass without commending them to your good graces.

May I close this speech with a personal word—you who are here this morning are those who will be the frontline troops in 1956. This is a worthy cause. You will be fighting to continue in office an administration which has ended war—thrown out corruption and waste—and brought great security to the people of America. You can glory in that fight and you can win.

Let us all join the battle so that this cause, so great in its promise and so magnificent in its performance, will not fail, but shall be victorious.

Address of Hon. William Jennings Bryan Dorn of South Carolina

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. W. J. BRYAN DORN
OF SOUTH CAROLINA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. DORN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address to the graduating class of the Page School on June 11, 1951, in the Ways and Means Committee room in the New House Office Building:

Mr. President, members of the graduating class, ladies and gentlemen, I consider it an honor to have been invited by the members of this class to make the address on this occasion. It is a genuine pleasure to participate in these exercises on this memorable night in the lives of these young men.

Members of the graduating class, this is a serious hour in the history of America, and a critical period in your own lives. I would suggest to you, and to the youth throughout the land, that you set a goal in life—a goal toward which you must constantly strive. The earlier we set for ourselves a goal of accomplishment, the more likely will be our chances of success.

I remember hearing a story about a young boy who was employed as a carpenter in the new building which was to be the meeting place of the Supreme Court of Oklahoma. This young lad was observed by his foreman to put forth special interest in the chair in which was to sit the chief justice of the supreme court. The foreman asked this young boy, still in his teens, why he spent so much time on this particular chair. The lad replied, "Someday I will sit in this chair as the chief justice of this State." Years later this young man did become the chief justice of the supreme court in the great State of Oklahoma. He set for himself, early in life, a high goal and worked toward that end. It is no small wonder that his ambition was crowned with ultimate success.

I hope the youth of America today, seeing the shortcomings of this generation, will set for themselves the goal of rectifying the chaos we find in the world today. I hope you young men, in facing the menace of foreign ideologies, and "isms" which would enslave the world, will be bold and aggressive, and that you will have no fear. The foreign policy of our great country tonight seems to be predicated on what Russia might or might not do. Fear hysteria is sweeping the country. Fear cannot solve the problems of this great Nation.

The Bible says the things which we greatly fear will come upon us. As you face the future, with its stupendous task of arriving at lasting peace, I know you will face those tasks with the same type of fortitude that our forefathers had when they founded the early American Republic. They were afraid of nothing, except to do wrong.

The motto of the late Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia, is found on the monument at his resting place in Crawfordville, Ga. This motto reads: "I am afraid of nothing on the earth, under the earth, or above the earth, except to do wrong. In the path of duty I shall ever endeavor to walk, fearing no evil and dreading no consequences." And what a wonderful motto that would be for the youth of America today.

France and England, in the years preceding World War II, contributed to the outbreak of that war by being afraid to stand on principle and back up the little nations who desired freedom. They were, by their policy of fear and appeasement, just as guilty of starting the war as were the aggressor nations. A bold, determined stand by these two nations for righteousness and the sanctities of treaties in 1938 could have prevented World War II. Whenever any nation surrenders principle for a temporary respite or fleeting expedience that nation later will pay a terrible price in blood.

America has reached the coveted position it occupies in the world today because of its belief in God and in freedom of opportunity. Our forefathers were builders. They gave us, on a silver platter, this land as we know it today. We have the highest standard of living any people in world history have ever enjoyed. Our educational systems are comparable to those of any other nation. The masses in America have a far greater opportunity for an education than those of any other nation.

When I was in the Far East in April, I was told that 83 percent of the Chinese people are illiterate; that eighty-plus percent of the people of India are illiterate—they cannot read or write. Our literacy rate, in America, is higher than the illiteracy rate of these two countries.

I enjoy living in America. I am proud of my American citizenship. We should be grateful to God and the Founding Fathers of our Republic for the great America we see every day. No civilization has ever excelled ours in religious tolerance or freedom from class hatred. Minority races of people have advanced further here than in any other country. Strong moral and spiritual beliefs have always placed our Nation on the side of right and principle as opposed to tyranny and oppression. Our democratic form of government has created an American citizen who is tolerant, self-reliant, intelligent, and conscious of his rights and the rights of others.

The American system of free enterprise has given to the American people more automobiles, television sets, more telephones, more washing machines, more of the luxuries of life than all the rest of the peoples on this globe combined. Think of it—150 million people have more of these modern conveniences than all the other 2 billion people in the world. This is a tribute to our democratic way of life, to our free-enterprise system, and to the individualism of the American people. We cannot maintain this great era of accomplishments by tearing down or by socializing the system which has made this era possible. The youth of our Nation must work, in the years ahead, to guarantee the preservation of our system of government with its equal opportunities.

Booker T. Washington was born a slave in Virginia. Never knowing who his father was, he went from that humble beginning to establish Tuskogee Institute, one of America's greatest colleges today. I visited this college, in the "black belt" of Alabama, not long ago. It is a monument to the character and perseverance of Booker T. Washington. He could have accomplished this only in the United States.

Abraham Lincoln was born in a one-room log cabin in the backwoods of Kentucky. With little formal education, he gradually ascended the ladder of fame. He was defeated for Congress and for the United States Senate. He did not become disillusioned and embittered. Instead he continued onward and became the President of the United States.

Alfred E. Smith was born in the East Side of New York City. He worked in the fish markets and, as he grew up, saw little of the world except the slum sections of that great city. But Al Smith was four times elected Governor of New York State and was the Democratic standard bearer for the Presidency in 1928.

Immorality in government and among the American people is today posing as a great threat to true democracy. This threat is paralleled by complacency and indifference on the part of the American people. If we are to preserve democracy, we must use democracy. If freedom is to grow, we must use that freedom.

In 1948, 93 million Americans were eligible to vote in the Presidential election. Only approximately 47 million voted. Forty-six million did not vote at all. They did not evidence enough interest to exercise the sacred privilege of casting their ballot for whomever they pleased.

How many people today exercise the privilege of publicly stating their views on the state of the Nation? One-half of the American people are members of no church of any denomination whatsoever. Yet, America was founded and has prospered on Christian principles and a belief in God.

I do pay special tribute tonight to the press and radio for exercising the sacred privilege to write and discuss the things which they believe.

If any man, woman, or child in this audience tonight were to go home, get in bed, and lie flat on your back for a year without exercising the limbs, you would lose the use of arms and legs. We maintain the physical limbs of our body by constant use and exercise. So it is with the "four freedoms" and our democratic way of life. If we do not use them, we will surely lose these sacred privileges.

You members of this graduating class, as you face the many problems of today, are probably thinking of the obstacles of seniority. You are probably thinking that you will have to wait many years before you can serve your community, your State, or your Nation. You are probably thinking that youth and lack of experience will be a stumbling block.

Remember the words of Benjamin Franklin: "Fools learn by experience; wise men through the experience of others." In the 4th chapter of First Timothy, the 12th verse, we find these words: "Let no man despise thy youth." These words are taken from Paul's letter advising the young minister, Timothy, as he went out into the world of men. Youth is your greatest asset. You have all the history of the past centuries to draw from. If in this modern age, with its libraries and great teachers, we have to learn in the bitter school of experience, then we are indeed very foolish. If we must put our hand in the fire to learn, by experience, that we will be burned, then we are what Benjamin Franklin said of those who learn by experience—very foolish indeed. We can turn back through the pages of history, or we can look at our contemporaries in the various fields of endeavor and find that youth has played an important role.

I am thinking tonight of scientific advancements. The men who made the atomic bomb were but little older than you who sit in this graduating class tonight. The average age of the members of the American Association of Atomic Scientists is 29 years.

Let us turn to the field of literature. William Cullen Bryant began writing poetry at an early age and wrote until he was past 80. Yet the greatest poem he ever wrote was Thanatopsis, written at the early age of 17. Byron, Keats, and Shelley, of England, were all young men when they wrote their masterpieces.

In the realm of government and politics, William Pitt was Prime Minister of Great Britain at the age of 24. He is acclaimed by most historians as the greatest Prime Minister Britain ever had, greater even than Winston Churchill. William Pitt saved England in the great Napoleonic era of world conflagration.

In America, Thomas Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence when he was 33 years of age. Alexander Hamilton, the father of the American currency and one of the founders of the American Constitution, was adjutant to Gen. George Washington at the age of 20 and helped to plan the campaigns which made this country independent. Madison and Monroe were both young men when they fought for the American Constitution. John C. Calhoun, who once represented the district it is now my honor to represent in Congress, was elected to the House of Representatives at the age of 28 and in a few months was one of the outstanding leaders of the country. Henry Clay was United States Senator at the age of 29. A few years later on the same day he took his oath of office as a Member of the House of Representatives. He was elected Speaker of the House, at the age of 34.

In the field of music, Mozart was playing publicly at the age of 6 and composed his first symphony at the age of 9.

In military science and tactics, the greatest generals the world has ever produced were young men, little older than you. Alexander the Great conquered the world before he was 33 years old. Napoleon Bonaparte was a lieutenant general at the age of 27, and dominated Europe at the age of 31. Hannibal was commander of the Carthaginian Army in Spain when he was 25. Gustavus Adolphus was commander of the Norwegian Army at the age of 19. These four men are credited by most historians as being the greatest military generals of all times. They were at their best when they combined their great intellect with the vigor and imagination of youth.

The members of this graduating class are all young men—but we must not forget the ladies. Joan of Arc was a French leader while in her teens. Florence Nightingale also made great accomplishments early in life.

Jesus Christ hung on Calvary's cross at the age of 33, after He had started a movement which is still growing today and has hundreds of millions in its ranks. And today a young evangelist in America—Billy Graham at the age of 32—has won hundreds of thousands of Americans to the cause of Christianity.

We are never too old nor too young to serve our country. Let no man ridicule you for your youth.

I hope you will pardon this personal reference. I received no encouragement when I ran for the legislature of my State of South Carolina at the age of 22, but the people of my county elected me. Two years later, at the age of 24, I received no encouragement when I ran for the State senate, but I was elected over two opponents. I was advised by many not to run for Congress in 1946 because I was what they termed too young, but still the people elected me to the House of Representatives.

Let us not be discouraged by the cynics and those who would have us wait while America may be passing through its hour of greatest danger. Our country needs us today. Tomorrow may be too late. The past generation has failed to give us, the youth of today, the peace that they promised, the security that was to be ours. Let us not make the same mistake and pass on to the next generation a world of chaos, of war, of fear, and of apprehension. We must act now, before it is too late, to save our country in this hour of crisis.

A story is told of Napoleon Bonaparte when he was being defeated by the Austrians at the Battle of Austerlitz. He had done his best and defeat was staring him in the face. As his veterans fell back in disorder, he rode up to a little 14-year-old drummer boy, and the great general said, "Son, beat a retreat." The little boy looked up at his great commander and said, "Sir, I don't know how. You never taught me how to beat a retreat. But, sir, I can beat a charge on this drum that will wake the dead on this battlefield." Napoleon thought for a moment and then said, "Beat it, then." The old guard, seeing the courage of this little boy and hearing his stirring notes on the drum, rallied and won for Bonaparte the greatest victory in French history.

The great minds of America may fail to solve the present-day problems. Just remember the great General Bonaparte and all of his commanders had given up that day in the Battle of Austerlitz, only to see defeat turned into a great victory by a 14-year-old lad. The youth of America today, like the little drummer boy, might save this country after our leaders have done their utmost.

I wish you great success in the years ahead. May you serve your community, your State, and your Nation as well as yourselves and your families. God bless you, each of you.

Congressman Dollinger's Annual Report

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. ISIDORE DOLLINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. DOLLINGER. Mr. Speaker, the promises made by the President and his administration were fine—they followed the entire Democratic program of Roosevelt and Truman—but that is as far as they went; they remained idle promises. As soon as the administration's purposes and aims were announced, the Republicans started to chip away, bit by bit, every promise that had been made or to evade it entirely, whenever they could get away with it. The comparatively few bills, in the best interests of the people, which finally became law never would have seen the light of day if it had been necessary to rely on Republican support.

For 3 years the administration lagged in making recommendations on many vital issues and definitely opposed numerous liberal measures and programs. However, in this election year the President and the Republicans have done an about-face and now pretend to favor many programs they opposed in the past. Furthermore, they try to take full credit for helpful measures passed by the Democratic 84th Congress, although the record shows that not one of the major accomplishments during this administration would have been possible without the Democratic majorities in the House and Senate. The Democratic Congress has, as always, been the protector of the people's welfare.

REPUBLICANS' BROKEN PLEDGES

The administration's boast of prosperity is an empty one. We find that areas of chronic unemployment exist in 24 States and Puerto Rico; in some areas more than 12 percent of the working population is jobless. The administration broke it's pledge to deal with the unemployment problem in depressed areas and has shown no real concern for our millions of unemployed. The wage earner cannot meet increased living costs which have reached an alltime high, but the President and the Republicans opposed the Democratic fight for a decent minimum wage. The Democrats fought for a minimum wage of $1.25 but the administration was insistent upon 90 cents, so a compromise had to be accepted setting the minimum at $1. The fate of small business is tragic under the Republicans, for the administration favors big business and has remained heedless to the needs and problems of small business. Small-business failures are up 36 percent and many thousands have closed their doors. So, we ask, prosperity for whom?

Tax relief was promised, but we find that the Republican "trickle-down" tax philosophy still holds full sway. In the 83d Congress, tax relief amounting to millions was given to corporations and the rich but when the Democratic Congress attempted to give a $20 tax cut to the ordinary taxpayer, the action was termed "irresponsible" by the administration.

Civil rights has always been one of my major concerns. There was never any doubt that a good civil-rights bill would pass the House. Although the President promised a civil-rights program at the beginning of his administration, it took his Attorney General 3½ years to make his recommendations. The administration knew that by stalling on the issue so that it would come before the House in the closing days of the session, the Senate would never act on it. Had the President asserted his leadership and kept his promise, the bill would have come before us long ago; there would have been ample time to overcome the threatened filibuster in the Senate and the Senate would have ultimately acted on the bill. The debate in the House indicated clearly that Republican strategy was to capitalize politically on the issue; in my opinion the Republicans had no sincere intention to allow the measure to become law.

Although Candidate Eisenhower said: "We need to rewrite the unfair provisions of the McCarran Immigration Act" they are still law; the administration took no action for 3 years and then proposed several futile amendments, worthless when we consider the cruelty and inequities of our present immigration laws. Attempts by me, as well as by many of my colleagues, to correct this sad situation have been in vain because of strong opposition by the administration.

The President, in 1952 and 1953, stated that he was in favor of amending the Taft-Hartley Act. This pledge was also broken, and the administration's record shows it to be against labor and the American worker.

The Federal school-construction bill was killed in a shameful debacle because of the Republicans' failure to support the President. It is to the best interests of our country that we have a literate and trained citizenry; it is important that our children have adequate and safe school facilities. It is a tragedy that the children of this Nation must now suffer danger and inadequate school facilities because of the refusal of some of our lawmakers to meet their true responsibilities when the bill came before us.

It is appalling that in a country of our great wealth, tremendous numbers of our people should be poorly housed, forced to live in slums, or homeless. Many campaign promises were made by the Republicans that the need for low-income public housing would be met. The Democrats passed the Housing Act of 1949 which has been wrecked through the years by the Republicans. This year the Senate passed a bill authorizing 135,000 units, while a bill approved by the House committee would have provided for 50,000, annually for 3 years, but this was termed "unrealistic, excessive, and ill-conceived" by an administration spokesman. Because of strong Republican opposition, the housing bill as finally passed provided for only 35,000 units annually for 2 years.

Social security was bitterly opposed by the Republicans in the beginning but they also give this Democratic program their approval now in order to save themselves politically. They point with pride to the social-security amendments passed this year, but it is well to remember that this beneficial legislation was not passed during the first 2 years of the Eisenhower administration when Republicans were in control; the Democratic 84th Congress is entitled to full credit.

Space does not permit my covering all important legislation. The foregoing are only a few of the instances which show failure of the President and his administration to keep promises made to the people in an effort to win votes.

LEGISLATION

In my 1955 report to constituents, I discussed in detail the numerous bills I had introduced which would be beneficial to the people I represent and the Nation, so I shall not repeat that information now. I am continuing my efforts for civil rights, aid to consumers, aid to Israel, unification of Ireland, employment for older workers, as well as many other matters.

I feel that my neighbors in the 23d District of New York would like to know how I voted on major bills which came before us. I voted in favor of the Mutual Security Act; extension and liberalization of the Social Security Act; reduction of individual income tax and excise taxes; admission of 200,000 refugee immigrants; Housing Act, providing for additional public-housing units; Federal aid for highway construction; Federal aid for school construction; increased benefits for veterans; broadening of unemployment compensation program; pay increases for postal workers and other Federal employees; increase in minimum wage; statehood for Hawaii and Alaska; St. Lawrence Seaway development; reciprocal trade agreement extension; civil-rights bill; civil-service retirement bill; railroad retirement bill.

I opposed and voted against: The Tidelands Oil giveaway bill; the Dixon-Yates contract; the natural-gas bill; the shipment of arms to Arab States; the reduction of the Air Force budget; the curtailment in building veterans' hospitals; the increase in first-class mail rates; the disposal of Government-owned synthetic rubber plants.

In addition to my legislative duties, I have had the opportunity to try to help many thousands of my neighbors with their individual problems, and I am pleased that they feel free to call upon me for assistance.

BRONX CONGRESSIONAL OFFICE

I maintain a congressional office at 938 Simpson Street, Bronx, which is open daily. My constituents are invited to call there and to take up any problems they may have. I also invite them to write me so that I may have the benefit of their views and suggestions regarding legislation.

It is a pleasure and honor to represent the people of the 23d District of New York. They have my pledge that I shall continue to extend my best efforts in their behalf.

Congressional Unit of Department of Agriculture Wins Well Earned Citation for Superior Service

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ELFORD A. CEDERBERG
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. CEDERBERG. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to call to the attention of the House an outstanding award recently made within the Department of Agriculture to one of its branches of which the Congressional Inquiry Unit is a part. The awards to individuals and units within the Department of Agriculture were a part of the William A. Jump Memorial Foundation citations.

Without doubt the outstanding service rendered by the Congressional Inquiry Unit to Members of Congress contributed materially to the record which caused the Inquiries and Distribution Service, headed by Richard A. Hollis, to be singled out for this citation.

The citation declared that the award was "for transmitting information about Department services and the results of its work to Members of Congress and the public with outstanding efficiency, marked initiative, and exemplary teamwork."

In connection with the awards, Hon. Ezra Taft Benson, the Secretary of Agriculture, said:

> Service to our fellow men is a source of great satisfaction. This satisfaction compensates for long hours of work, patient waiting, and sometimes tedious effort. It is an earned satisfaction. And it explains, in part at least, the dedication to service which is so characteristic of so many Department employees.

The Congressional Inquiry Unit of the Inquiries and Distribution Service is headed by Miss Mary I. Parrett and is the unit with which congressional offices must frequently come in contact with the Department. This branch is the traffic manager for our congressional inquiries and I sometimes marvel at the expeditious manner in which requested material is dispatched to our offices for reference use, for use as speech material and for use in answering letters from our constitutents making specific and often complicated requests for agricultural information.

It was indeed appropriate that the Department of Agriculture should include in the unit citation program a place for an award to Mr. Francis J. P. Cleary, retired, and presently of Woodstock, Va., the organizer and first chief of the Inquiries and Distribution Office. The setting up of the Congressional Inquiries Unit within the Information Office assigned exclusively to handling congressional inquiries, was an idea originating with Mr. Cleary. At the unit award program he was given a gold 50-year service pin for his more than 50 years on active duty with the Department.

The staff members of the Inquiries and Distribution Service who worked together to make this superior service award possible for the unit deserves individual mention. I have previously mentioned that the branch is headed by Mr. Hollis. His assistant is Fred L. Zimmerman. The other units participating in the citation and their personnel follow:

Adminstrative Service Unit: Thomas L. Cullinan, chief; Edna B. Davis, A. Sidney Frye, Caroline M. Gray, Rudolph A. Stewart and Martha E. Ridgway.

Congressional Inquiries Unit: Mary I. Parrett, chief; Clara J. Irwin, Thelma H. Brown, Ann S. Steuer, Lois I. Bruce, Arthur R. Garner, Beatrice V. Carthorne and Harry W. Hart.

Government and Public Inquiries Unit: Vitura P. Sanders, chief; Martha J. Mount, Cleopatra S. Caras, Barbara A. Barnes, Mabel E. Heinecke, Lydia Bell Jones, Julia L. Johnson, Hilda B. Norris and Katherine A. Cook.

Mailing List Unit: Gretchen W. Costello, chief; Ann Rogers Hickey, Alice G. Cobert, George M. Brown, Ann B. Smith and Sarah L. Pruitt.

General Inquiries and Publications Unit: Eleanor W. Clay, chief; Harry L. Reed, Roby W. Stehr, Alice M. Shoemaker, and Ella J. Green.

Warehouse Unit: Edward Buck and Clarence O. Irby.

Lt. Gen. Samuel Dent Sturgis, a Great American Soldier and Engineer

OF
HON. JAMES T. PATTERSON
OF CONNECTICUT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Armed Services Committee of the House of Representatives, I have had some opportunity to observe how the impact of the atomic age has affected the United States Military Establishment. I could say much about the changes that have occurred since World War II, and are still occurring, in planning, organization, and operations in all branches of the services.

At the very heart of military technology, at least insofar as the Army is concerned, is the Army's Corps of Engineers, which bears much of the brunt of modern-day changes in military concepts. The engineers must keep abreast of rapid changes in their own increasingly complex technical field. They must keep abreast of changes made in the Army of which they are a part. Finally, they bear much of the burden of helping all arms and services adapt themselves to technological change. For every new development in any branch is likely to bring about new requirements in the way of base construction, transportation, bridging, or dispersion, and it is largely up to the engineers to meet these requirements.

The Nation has been fortunate in having, at this critical stage, a chief of engineers whose capability and experience outstandingly fit him to direct the Corps of Engineers through its present crucial period. He is Lt. Gen. Samuel Dent Sturgis, Jr., the most distinguished scion of a family that has been famous in American military history for more than a century. His grandfather attained the rank of major general in heroic fighting during the Civil War, and afterward helped pacify the West. An uncle was killed with Custer. His father also reached the rank of major general and commanded the 87th Division in World War I. The traditions of this outstanding family of military leaders reached a climax with the career of the present General Sturgis, who has achieved higher rank than even his illustrious forebears.

We of the Connecticut Valley were greatly impressed with the invigorating forcefulness with which General Sturgis helped to direct the rescue and rehabilitation effort during the dark days of the flood in 1955. The floods of that year in the New England and North Atlantic States were among the greatest natural disasters of American history. While the waters were still raging, General Sturgis appeared in person to help coordinate the efforts put forth under the overall direction of the Civil Defense Administration. Army engineer personnel and resources were mobilized and rushed to the spot from all over the eastern United States within a matter of not days, but hours. Bulldozers and emergency bridging appeared; roads, railways, and communications were reopened; relief and repaid supplies began to flow into the area; and basic utilities were restored. It was the Army engineers who made available the bulk of the emergency funds, and under their auspices contracts for reconstruction work were let in record time.

I am in a position to know that the forcefulness manifested by General Sturgis on that occasion is typical of his every effort. He has brought the same qualities to bear in helping the Nation's Armed Forces adapt themselves to the complex problems of modern technology, and in hammering his own corps into a well-trained combat arm and a technical service of unparalleled efficiency.

The man who holds the position of Chief of Engineers, United States Army, holds one of the biggest and most important executive jobs in the world. It is a job to test the mettle of a man like General Sturgis. I know of no better way to pay him tribute than to describe that job, and then examine the way in which he has measured up to it.

The Chief of Engineers must be, first and foremost, an outstanding soldier. It is his job to counsel the Army's high command on all matters in which engineering is concerned—and in these days, when it has been truly said that modern warfare is engineering warfare, that function alone makes him one of the key commanders of the Nation's Military Establishment.

He is the general in charge of the training of 10,000 engineer officers and 100,000 enlisted men who are deployed all over the globe—which means that he is responsible for providing the Nation with some of the world's most highly skilled soldiers and making them ready to face the toughest and most intricate tasks of modern warfare. Their mission spans the entire field of war from the munitions factories at home up to and beyond the front lines of battle action. He heads a redoubtable intelligence operation and the world's largest and most scientific mapping activity, which turned out 500 million vital military maps during World War II. He directs a far-flung research effort and a vast supply organization handling $2.5 billion worth of military stocks.

He is in charge of the biggest peacetime military engineering and construction program in history—a job which has reached its climax during the tenure of General Sturgis as Chief of Engineers. This program embraces the complex design and construction of the almost infinite range of facilities required by the Army and the Air Force, to the amount of about $1.5 billion a year, at some 700 different locations scattered from the Arabian desert to the frozen wastes near the North Pole.

But all this is only half of the job of the Chief of Engineers. Entirely apart from his military function, he has the job of directing the United States Government's rivers and harbors and flood-control programs; and in carrying out this job he is responsible not to his military chiefs but directly to the Secretary of the Army. The civil works part of his job alone would make him among the more important executives in the world. For the program calls for the expenditure of over a half billion dollars a year. It embraces the construction and maintenance of all the Nation's seacoast ports and harbors, all its Great Lakes ports, and all its inland waterways, which now total some 28,000 miles and carry an important and increasing proportion of the Nation's total tonnage of freight. It also involves responsibility for the national flood-control program, including the construction of hundreds of large and small dams, thousand of miles of levees and floodwalls, and a vast array of other engineering works. As an incidental part of the job, the Chief of Engineers is responsible for electric-power installations with a combined generating capacity of more than 4 million kilowatts—one of the greatest power-development programs in the world.

Taking his military and civil functions together, the Chief of Engineers directs the world's largest construction program and in addition to his 110,000 engineer soldiers, is boss of 55,000 civilian employees. As part of his job, he is required to conduct the world's largest real-estate operation. The acreage under his charge is the equivalent of the combined areas of New Jersey, New Hampshire, Vermont, Maryland, and Delaware, and with improvements has a value of more than $25 billion. The variety of this real estate is astounding. It includes almost every kind of property one can think of—military bases, reservoir sites, experimental areas, farms, forests, towns, factories, utilities, highways, railroads, bridges, and even cemeteries.

Such is the job. Now what of the man who holds this job?

General Sturgis' long career has covered a truly remarkable range. He has held every kind of assignment that can normally be held by an engineer officer. This personal acquaintance of all aspects of the works of his command—combat, construction, staff, and civil works—has been one of the main assets contributing to his outstanding record as Chief of Engineers.

Born in St. Paul, Minn., in 1897, Samuel D. Sturgis was graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1918 and was promoted through the ranks of second lieutenant, first lieutenant, and captain all in 1 day. Though he trained with troops, World War I ended before he could be shipped overseas. He then served as company commander and received further training in military and engineering subjects, after which he taught for a time at West Point.

In 1926, young Sturgis went to the Philippines, where for a time he commanded the 14th Engineers. During the period he carried out strategic studies which were invaluable to him 18 years later, when, as Chief Engineer for the Sixth Army, he participated in the reconquest of the Philippines. As a part of these studies, he participated in the mapping of the island of Luzon and initiated work on the defenses of Bataan.

Next he was assigned to Company A, Ninth Engineers, Mounted, at Fort Riley, Kans. It was here that he outstandingly displayed the qualities of enterprise and imagination that was later to manifest on larger and more important fields. Far ahead of his time, and ahead of many of his fellow officers, Sturgis comprehended the revolution that motorization would bring about in military operations, and conceived the necessity of the modern engineer mechanical equipment that would be needed to keep military engineering abreast of mechanized warfare. He applied for and received the first such equipment made available to any engineer troop unit of the United States Army. Under his direction, this became the pilot test which resulted in the provision of bulldozers, diesel shovels, air compressors, and other modern construction equipment which played such a vital role in opening the jungles and beachheads of World War II.

It was the first, but by no means the last, time that Samuel Sturgis was to play a leading part in helping keep the Military Establishment abreast of technological change.

During the mid-1930's, Sturgis was assistant to the district engineer in charge of the Passamaquoddy tidal power development. After the disastrous, record-breaking Ohio River flood of 1937, he was sent to Huntington, W. Va., to serve as executive officer in the intensive flood-control and navigation construction effort which followed. Later, after a period in the Army War College, he became district engineer at Vicksburg, Miss., where he not only initiated work on the revised flood-control program for the lower Mississippi Valley but directed a $200 million construction program to build essential installations as part of the pre-World War II preparedness effort—installations which later contributed to rapid mobilization and the successful conduct of the war.

World War II saw him in the South Pacific as chief engineer of the Sixth Army. He directed engineer operations in a theater where his commander, Gen. Walter Kruger, said that warfare was "one-third engineers, one-third Air Force, and one-third everything else."

Under the all but impossible conditions that prevailed in the area, Sturgis manifested the qualities of initiative and resourcefulness that were to lead him to the highest command in his corps. The problems he overcame during the New Guinea, New Britain, Admiralty, and Philippines campaigns might well have overwhelmed a man of less force. Operating at the end of an immensely long supply line, helping plan operations in mud and jungles and across vast stretches of sea, fighting on little-known islands, he and his engineers had to lead the way across beaches, build all-important airstrips under fire, cut roads through jungles for the troops to follow, then build depots, hospitals, harbors, and facilities for the staging of other invasions to follow.

After the war he was the chief engineer of the Air Force until that service was separated from the Army. Then there followed other important commands. For a time he was division engineer in charge of work on the great program of dams and reservoirs for controlling and developing the Missouri River. Later, he was commanding general of the Sixth Armored Division at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. In 1952 he was appointed commander of the communications zone, United States Army, Europe, with headquarters in France, and commander of all Army Forces in France. In this post, it was his duty to prepare the entire fighting and supply line from French ports and across France to meet any threat of attack from the East. He was recalled from Europe to take his present position of Chief of Engineers.

This was the period when the Korean war had alerted our Nation to the need for worldwide defenses against the aggressive power that had come within a hairsbreadth of unleashing world war III. America had taken the initiative in building a ring of strategically located bases around the free world. The construction job—a job totaling about $10 billion—was given to the Army's Corps of Engineers. This program was still developing when General Sturgis was appointed by the President to head the Corps. Fresh from the arduous emergency construction job in France, he brought his experience and skill to bear on the problems of the worldwide effort.

As the Nation knows, he has carried it through triumphantly. At the same time, he has carried out some of the largest annual civil-works construction programs in the 132-year-old history of the Federal rivers and harbors enterprise. He coped with great floods not only in the North Atlantic area but on the west coast.

While carrying out the responsibilities of his position, he has also provided the armed services with outstanding inspiration and leadership in discerning and grappling with the problems of this age.

He has been among the foremost of the Nation's leaders in focusing attention upon the need for survival power in case of future national emergency, whether it be a natural disaster like another great flood, or the terrible disaster of war. It has been part of his doctrine that it is not enough to be able to strike heavy blows at an attacker; that America must be organized to get back on its feet after taking the heaviest blow that the enemy can strike, and go on to outslug him. General Sturgis has not only preached this doctrine, but taken a leading part, insofar as his authority and responsibility permitted, in setting up emergency procedures to be followed in case of need.

Similarly, he has hammered away at the importance of technology in warfare. Sometimes at the risk of antagonizing his superiors, he has insisted on subjecting every theory and doctrine to the test of its technical practicality. He has pointed out the ever-increasing construction requirements imposed by new weapons, new plans, and new military concepts, and demanded that the engineer and technician be given a voice in all decisions from the highest strategic level on down. Having seen and experienced in actual warfare both the disastrous cost of failure to heed engineering principles and the remarkable achievements made possible by taking full advantage of engineering resources, he has applied his experience to the problems of the present and the future.

To help make the Army engineers into a crack force ready for any test, he has strengthened the combat effectiveness of the engineer soldier both by insistence on thorough training and by constantly seeking to improve combat engineer equipment. Under his direction, light, stripped-down bulldozers, shovels, and other heavy engineer machinery have been developed that can be dropped by parachute, and thus enable engineer assault units to carry out complex missions if necessary behind enemy lines. The search for quicker and stronger methods of bridging, of transport, of fuel supply, and of storage and supply, has been initiated and stepped up to keep pace with the modern concept of widely dispersed, highly mobile military operations.

General Sturgis has been as effective in the civil-works side of his job as in the military side. He has provided outstanding leadership in maintaining and strengthening the Nation's water-resources development programs in a troubled period, when, under the pressure of economy and the stresses of necessary reorganization and reorientation, all Federal programs were being subjected to the strictest scrutiny. He took the lead in the movement to better coordinate the many old and sometimes conflicting Federal conservation policies and agencies—the movement which led the President to appoint his Advisory Committee on Water Resources Policy. And he has been one of the first to point out growing problem of water supply—a problem which some authorities consider the Nation's No. 1 natural resources problem of the future—and to suggest means of meeting it.

Finally, few men have been as effective as General Sturgis in calling attention to the vital problem the Nation faces in its shortage of engineering and technical manpower. Not content with discussing this problem before congressional committees and high-level bodies of engineers, he has gone before young people themselves in schools and colleges to urge them to develop their talents, to explain the rewards of hard work and patriotism, and to point out what the Nation needs and expects from its youth.

It goes without saying that a man who has accomplished so much both as a commander and an administrator is no ordinary personality. Not only his Army chiefs and the Nation's leaders, but the many ordinary citizens who have worked with him, know Gen. Sam Sturgis to be not only a man of great virility and ability but a man of great integrity and sincerity. One of his proudest boasts on behalf of his corps, along with its record of construction and achievement, is that it has had the courage and integrity to reject 55 percent of the project proposals brought before it, on ground that they did not represent good investments for the American taxpayers.

When he was appointed Chief of Engineers, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch spoke for most of the people who knew him when it headlined the story: "General Sturgis Man of Action, No Stuffed Shirt." When he spoke his mind in opposition to a bill favored by many Congressmen and some of his superiors, the Lincoln (Nebr.) Star, on the other side of the fence on that particular issue, praised him for his ability and sincerity. In an editorial headed "This Man Sturgis," it said:

> Maj. Gen. Samuel D. Sturgis * * * is no table thumper. A man of great competence, outstanding ability, real understanding, and high purposes, it has been our own personal experience with General Sturgis that when he thinks a thing is right, he says so. And he speaks softly and persuasively.

Another newspaper reporter said of him:

> Like many dedicated soldiers, Sturgis eats, sleeps, and talks the Army. A rugged 6-footer, he drives himself and others hard, and on his many inspection trips (1 year he flew 125,000 miles) often stops to go deeply in the details of a construction project or to make a careful spot check of some engineer troop unit.
> He likes to move fast when walking, driving, or flying, and nearly all his efficiency reports refer to Sturgis' "boundless energy and enthusiasm." A bit of a Spartan, he takes a social drink and smokes occasionally. Once he startled the bartenders at a reception in Michigan by asking for a chocolate soda.
> Sturgis' hobbies are golf, reading military history (his "escape" reading) and doing math problems (he taught mathematics at West Point).

But perhaps the most fitting tribute and accurate summing up was made by President Eisenhower 2 years ago at the dedication of McNary Dam, the great structure built by the Army engineers on the Columbia River. The President of the United States told his audience:

> When I first met Sam Sturgis I was detailed as a young officer to coach a football team and a young hopeful lieutenant showed up. I made him an end and he worked pretty hard under me for some weeks and months. Today I think that all of you would like me to speak for you in commending him as the brilliant head of a great organization which not only here but throughout our land has built up these great works in flood control, in drainage, in water conservation, and power development, an organization of which not only the United States Army but which America is proud.

Congressman Young Supports Civil Rights

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLIFF YOUNG
OF NEVADA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, as one of those Members of Congress who voted in favor of President Eisenhower's civil rights proposal, I would like at this time to outline it briefly for the people of Nevada.

In recommending the creation of a bipartisan civil rights commission, President Eisenhower said in his State of the Union message:

"It is disturbing that in some localities allegations persist that Negro citizens are being deprived of their right to vote and are likewise being subjected to unwarranted economic pressures. I recommend that the substance of these charges be thoroughly examined by a bipartisan commission created by the Congress."

The six-point program advocated by President Eisenhower contained these provisions:

First. Establishing a six-man bipartisan Commission on Civil Rights with subpena power to investigate voting rights abuses and unwarranted pressures aimed at denying basic rights.

Second. Providing new post of Assistant Attorney General to head a special Civil Rights Division in the Justice Department.

Third. Allowing Federal prosecution of individuals—as well as officials—who try to intimidate voters in any election for a Federal office.

Fourth. Allowing Justice Department to seek Federal injunctions on behalf of United States or persons deprived of civil rights.

Fifth. Permitting private citizens access to Federal courts in civil rights cases without exhausting State steps.

Sixth. Permitting Justice Department to bring civil suits against civil rights conspiracies like hooded gangs and so forth.

Although we were successful in passing this proposal through the House, it was defeated in the Senate by the southern chairmen of the key committees.

These same gentlemen will continue to control Congress and to bottle up civil-rights reforms unless Republicans are elected in November.

President Eisenhower has taken the lead in making democracy apply to everyone. The greatest civil rights gains since the Civil War have occurred under the Eisenhower administration. Equality of treatment is being achieved by deeds and action, not empty talk. President Eisenhower has carried out his campaign pledge to use all the power of the Chief Executive to work toward elimination of segregation and discrimination.

Here are some specific points of antidiscriminatory action taken under President Eisenhower and his team:

First. Elimination by ICC of "Jim Crow" in bus and interstate travel.

Second. Abolition of segregation in schools on military posts by executive action.

Third. Elimination of discrimination among civilian employees at naval bases.

Fourth. Completion of end to segregation in the Armed Forces, VA hospitals, and so forth.

Fifth. Establishment of a Committee on Government Contracts—headed by the Vice President—to help prevent discrimination in Government contract jobs and a President's Committee on Government Employment Policy to assure nondiscrimination in Government jobs.

Sixth. Requirement that new contracts for services to the District of Columbia must include pledges of no discrimination in employment.

Seventh. Elimination of segregation in the Nation's Capital by executive action.

Eighth. A new era of equality has begun through Supreme Court decisions outlawing segregated schools and providing equal access to other public areas.

Agriculture in 1956

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM S. HILL
OF COLORADO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, today the most important single fact is that this Nation is at peace. Peace has been achieved and maintained under the courageous leadership of President Eisenhower.

Peace, prosperity and progress under his administration are spelled out by the fact that more Americans are at work today, earning more, producing more, building more and investing more than at any other time in history.

Inflation has been halted. The savings, the insurance policies, the pension rights of our people are no longer being whittled away by advancing living costs. A dollar saved in 1953 is still worth as much as it was then. A dollar saved in 1940 was worth only 52 cents by 1952.

Under the Eisenhower administration, the Nation as a whole is enjoying higher earnings, lower taxes and stable living costs—all at the same time.

The saving, rather than the spending, of a dollar has again become a respectable objective in Washington. Reductions in Government expenditures have made possible the greatest dollar tax cut in history—$7.4 billion annually. That is the equivalent of $180 a year for every family in America. Along with this record tax cut, the Federal budget has been balanced.

Stifling bureaucratic controls over the national economy have been eased.

The Nation has the strongest and most efficient Armed Forces in all its peacetime history. A tax dollar is buying a dollar's worth of defense.

This administration is determined that farmers shall share fairly in this unprecedented national prosperity. A concentrated attack upon price-depressing surpluses is underway.

There has been a sharp upturn in the general level of farm prices during recent months. Since January farm prices, as an average, have increased by about 11 percent. During the first 6 months of 1956, net farm income was running at a rate of half a billion dollars higher than for the last 6 months of 1955.

The parity ratio, which measures prices received by farmers against those they pay for goods and services, moved from 80 in January to 86 in June. This is in marked contrast with farm price trends during the last 7 months of the Truman administration when the parity ratio dropped 7 points. In fact, during the final 23 months of that administration, the parity ratio tumbled 19 points in one of the sharpest farm price declines of record. This happened despite the fact that the country was at war throughout the entire period.

A substantial part of the general improvement in farm prices has come in hogs and beef cattle. These two items account for approximately 30 percent of farmers' total cash receipts nationally—more than all of the six basic commodities.

In recent months top quality hogs have been bringing $17 to $18 in the principal markets. The 8 percent reduction in spring pig farrowings would indicate strong prices in the year ahead.

Beef cattle prices have strengthened about 10 percent since January.

The current political controversy over Government farm policies involves a clash of two basic philosophies. The 1956 elections will determine whether American agriculture is to remain free or be driven down the road of regimentation and State control.

The position of the President and the Republican Party on this fundamental issue is clear-cut. We believe that the role of Government in agriculture should be that of a helpful partner, never a master. We believe that Government can and should assist agriculture in such important fields as research and education, grading and inspection services, market expansion and development and credit. We believe that Government should—as it is doing—carry forward commodity loan programs and direct purchase operations which protect farmers against undue price declines but at the same time permit our abundant production to move into consumption rather than into storage.

We believe, too, that while Government should help farmers to do the things that they cannot do individually, the hand of Government must never replace the hand of the farmer in the operation of his own farm. Farmers must remain free to make their own management decisions. They must be permitted to be competitive in both the domestic and foreign market places. They must not be shackled by burdensome controls and regulations which deny them the opportunity to make the most efficient use of their production facilities. Not only farmers but all Americans have a stake in a free agriculture.

Farmers realize that the primary cause of their present problems is surpluses—surpluses of food and fiber piled up under wartime programs continued too long after the need for vastly expanded production had passed.

This administration is vigorously attacking the surplus problem on two major fronts. The soil bank is being ance with demand and at the same time placed in operation as a means of bringing current production into better balbuilding up the fertility of the land against future needs. This program could have been applied on a much broader basis this year had not the Democrat leadership dawdled and delayed action until farmers had planted their spring crops.

The surplus problem is also being met through a program of greatly expanded farm exports.

The Republican administration got to work at once to regain and expand our shrinking export markets. In fiscal year 1954, the dollar value of farm exports went up 7 percent; in fiscal 1955, they went up another 4 percent; and for the fiscal year 1956, they will be up still another 9 percent.

The Republican 83d Congress enacted the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 to help dispose of farm surpluses without unduly disturbing markets. Since July 1953 we have moved into use more than $5.5 billion worth of surplus agricultural commodities. Gains in exports are apparent this past year in all major crops except cotton. Excluding cotton, exports this year are expected to be the highest of any year for the past 30 years.

Here are some of the commodity highlights:

Wheat up 20 percent from last year.

Feed grains up 84 percent from a year ago.

Soybeans up 37 percent from last year and a new record.

Soybean and cottonseed oil up 52 percent and another record.

Lard up 31 percent and the largest of the last 4 years.

I would list these other accomplishments of the past 3½ years:

When this administration came to Washington in 1953, it found prices controlled, grading of beef compulsory, and prices going down. Government restrictions were removed. A vast beef purchase program was undertaken to help stop the decline in prices.

Government worked with industry to market beef vigorously—and not only beef but dairy products, vegetables, pork, and other plentiful foods. In the past 3 years, the American people have been eating more per person—more beef, chickens, and turkeys than ever before.

Under this administration we have had the biggest expansion of grain storage facilities in all history.

We have moved swiftly to give aid to farmers hit by floods, drought and other disasters.

We have developed a program for upstream protection of watersheds, to conserve soil and water, to help prevent floods and to preserve our precious national heritage for future generations.

School lunch programs have been expanded to serve 11 million children.

We have sought to use every appropriate and effective means to enlarge markets so that farmers can produce and sell their output, increase their incomes and enjoy an improving level of living.

A Great Plains program was developed to provide a stable, profitable agriculture for the farm families of this vast region.

A prosperous, expanding and free agriculture is important not only to farmers but to all of us.

We have measured our farm policies on the basis of what is good for the farmer and the Nation. Farmers know they have in the White House a friend who is concerned with their problems and is determined that they shall share fairly in our unprecedented national prosperity.

Congress Fails To Do Its Duty

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. USHER L. BURDICK

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, a case has recently been brought to my attention which is an example of rank injustices inflicted upon Federal employees because of the failure of the Congress to do its duty. Instead of writing out and setting its own rules and regulations governing the dismissal of employees working for the Government, Congress has allowed the Civil Service Commission to make its own.

In this case a young woman who has 18 years of creditable work behind her was involuntarily retired because of disability. She has been denied access to the personnel files, records, reports, and statements made by her supervisor, and was not given a chance to refute or explain them. She was sent to a psychiatrist, with the lasting stigma which that act implies, and was not able to obtain the files and reports sent to the Public Health Service, nor copies of them.

In the rules and regulations set forth in chapter Z1 of the Federal Personnel Manual, section 29.11, Disclosure of Information (a) (1), there is this provision:

> Files, records, reports, and other papers and documents pertaining to any claim filed with the Civil Service Commission, whether pending or adjudicated, will be deemed privileged and made in confidence, and no disclosure thereof will be made except as provided herein (p. 342).

I have been told that this regulation continues:

> Except to a claimant or to his duly authorized representative in matters concerning himself alone when such disclosure would not be injurious to the physical or mental health of the claimant or be regarded as a breach of confidence. Determination as to when disclosure of information would be injurious to the physical or mental welfare of a claimant will be made by the Medical Division.

Under the same section—11—it is stated:

> Copies of papers, records, etc., the furnishing of which would be prejudicial to the interest of the Government; copies of reports of examining surgeons; or copies of records of departments and other confidential matters, will not be furnished.

Why should not a person dismissed for disability be informed as to what is allegedly the basis for his dismissal?

If there is anything in Russia that can beat this for absolute denial of the rights of our citizens to be heard in their own defense. I do not know about it. As reported in the Evening Star of July 12, 1956, in another similar case, the United States Court of Appeals for the District held that—

> Federal employees retired for disability are not entitled to see civil-service medical files on their cases, nor are they entitled to hearings.

For over a year this woman has been beating her head against the stone wall of bureaucratic secrecy and unconstitutional withholdings of information, and there are undoubtedly numerous similar cases which have so far not been brought to public attention.

If we are to retain any semblance of our Bill of Rights, it is high time that Congress passed a law taking away from the various bureaus and agencies in Government the right to make their own rules and regulations without the right of hearings or appeal and see to it that the rights of our citizens are protected.

These regulations refer to physical and mental health of employees. That gives the Civil Service Commission ample leeway to hold back information on the ground of mental health. There may be nothing wrong with an employee as to mental health, and how does it come that the Commission is the sole arbitrator of this delicate question?

This woman has lost her job, and she does not know what the reasons are. While the stigma of being sent to a psychiatrist remains, she cannot get a job anywhere. This Commission has taken away from this employee a thing of the highest value. Shakespeare said:

> He who steals my purse steals trash, but he who robs me of my good name steals that which does not enrich him, but makes me poor, indeed.

Are we in the United States carrying on a gestapo in the question of mental health? Are we to make the Commission the supreme ruler over the very lives of Federal employees? In this case the employees cannot get work while this resort to mental health, secretly applied, with no chance for the victim to vindicate himself, remains, and, finally, the victim will be robbed of life. Is that the authority Congress has given to bureaucrats? I would like to know.

A Report to the People of the Second District of the State of Washington

OF

HON. JACK WESTLAND

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WESTLAND. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I would like to take this opportunity to look back over the 84th Congress, evaluate and reiterate some of the legislative progress that has been made, and to point up some of the benefits the Second Congressional District has received during this period.

As the House lights dim and the spotlight of campaign activities picks up each Member of the House of Representatives, I feel it a fitting time to pause briefly to sum up just what we have done in this, the 84th Congress, and to point up some of the problems, and solutions to them, I have had while representing the second district in this Congress.

A Congressman has three broad fields of work in representing his district. One is on the national scene where overall programs and policies are enacted by the Congress. Another is in the operation of Federal agencies which affect his district. And the third is the personal problems of constituents which can be solved by action of governmental offices or by remedial legislation.

I would like to outline a few of the highlights of the past Congress, and developments, which I think are of significance to the Second District in each of these fields.

As we return to the cool climate and warm friendship of our home districts, we Republican Members of the 84th Congress carry with us a mixed sense of satisfaction and frustration. Satisfaction over the solid progress we have been able to make in some fields, and frustration over the political bickering and shameful flaunting of the Nation's welfare by the opposition party in the closing days.

Nationally, we are enjoying a day-to-day standard of living unequaled in all history. President Eisenhower's program for the people of this Nation has provided us with burgeoning economic development, a secure outlook for the future, and a calm sense of trust in our National Government.

The 84th Congress passed a monumental piece of legislation in the highway bill. This measure will link our 48 States together with thousands of miles of broad, smooth highways—which will facilitate movement of goods from region to region and provide fast arterials for passenger-car travel.

We have passed social-security legislation which will provide benefits at age 50 for those who are disabled, and will lower the retirement age for women to 62.

For the first time in many years we are ending the fiscal year with a surplus in the Treasury and with prospects for a balanced budget for the year ahead. This money will be applied to reduce the national debt—a sum which requires that every family in the Nation pay $14 per month just for interest payments each year.

We have appropriated $66 billion this year. The Department of Defense will receive around $35 billion. The interest payment on the national debt will take $7 billion. Benefits to veterans will take $5 billion. Foreign aid will take about $3.7 billion. Agricultural programs will get nearly $2 billion. The operation of governmental agencies will take the rest.

It is a sobering thought that what might be called the price of peace is $50 billion of our tax money annually. I am sure that we in the second district feel we can well pay the price for the guaranty of continued peace and the security of knowing we are discouraging aggression by being strong and ready.

The 84th Congress passed the soil-bank plan, which will not have a major effect in the second district, but which will benefit the Nation's agricultural picture. Administrative changes in farm policies have bolstered the dairy scene in recent months and the road ahead looks brighter for our milk producers. The tax on gasoline used in farm implements was removed. We have extended the brucellosis eradication program, and the school milk and lunch programs which will consume more farm products.

In the field of governmental operations, we have continued under the Eisenhower administration to combat waste. We have required that the Defense Department call for bids on all contracts over $2,500 to secure the best price.

We have launched a general program of efficiency. By passing constructive legislation establishing benefits for career Armed Forces personnel, we have cut the new recruit training needs and kept experienced military men in the service. The Army alone has upped reenlistment rate from 47 to 67 percent. At a cost of $5,000 to train each recruit, the 30,000 men who came back for another hitch represent a saving of $150 million for the taxpayer.

Our shipping has benefited from the launching of the largest peacetime building program in history, which should stimulate and enforce our shipyard economy. The Bellingham yard has been successful in participating in the Navy's minesweeper construction program—a part of our defense expenditures, of $2.7 billion for modernization of the naval fleet.

Increased funds for health and medical programs will mean more research on disease prevention such as the Salk polio vaccine. This Congress has appropriated more money for health and welfare than any other in our history. This is an integral part of President Eisenhower's program and we took great satisfaction in earmarking $184 million for research.

Last year we acted on pay increases for postal workers and other governmental employees, to bring salaries more in line with those offered by private industry. We have improved the civil-service retirement programs and have added incentives to keep talented people on the job in agencies where efficiency can save money for the taxpayers.

We have appropriated $3.7 billion in foreign aid. I supported this bill after it had been trimmed from its original $4.9 billion request. I feel this program, since it is mainly military aid, is in reality a part of our defense budget. It has only about a billion for economic aid. I believe the entire program should be reevaluated and some thought given to tapering off and eventually ending this wartime emergency program.

Where have we failed? I regret deeply the demise of the school construction bill. Any honest evaluation of the sinking of this bill leads to the inevitable conclusion that sectionalism and stubborn refusal by the Democratic majority to make the program workable led to its death. President Eisenhower's incentive plan would have made it a fair program to the taxpayer. States would have received maximum Federal aid in return for maximum State effort. The sorry Southern tactics of endless amendment, brick-wall resistance to civil rights, and the failure of Northern Democrats to support the incentive plan doomed this needed legislation from the start.

We however, did pass a school-aid bill which will mean thousands of dollars to our district. The Federal-impact area school construction and operation program affects a great number of our districts. We appropriated $378 million for this program.

The President's overall program suffered from studious neglect by the leaders of the majority party. Obstructions to Government economy were voted, such as the crippling bill to halt closure of Government installations without specific permission from Congress. The atomic peace ship, atomic electric power development, civil rights, Fryingpan-Arkansas project, Alaska-Hawaiian statehood, putting the Post Office on a sound fiscal basis—all these were blocked by one means or another.

The Second District has fared well under the Republican administration during the past 2 years. I have received a minimum of complaints about conduct of Federal offices, and many agencies are proving to be of more assistance than ever before to residents of the district.

The economy of the district is flourishing. We have been able to get more appropriations for roads and trails in the national forests. More timber sales personnel will mean smaller units and more opportunity for small bidders. Our Mission 66 program will mean millions of dollars worth of roads and campgrounds for Olympic National Park during the next 10 years. Eight major oil companies are interested in establishing refineries in our district. It has been my pleasant privilege to talk with the leaders of these firms, and to assist them with information and introductions to governmental procedures relevant to preliminary arrangements for these plants.

Our farmers have been hard hit by the weather. We have been able to secure disaster loans at low rates of interest and an emergency feed program. The weather has been more cooperative in recent months and the outlook now is for alleviation of a threatened feed shortage throughout our farming area. I am in hopes that my dairymen's self-help plan will be adopted eventually by the Congress, as I believe it will stabilize the dairy industry at a high income level.

Our marine industries are off on a development program unparalleled in our history. The seven harbor projects for which I was able to get authorization in the 83d Congress, have received much attention during the past 2 years. Funds to start construction on Everett, Bellingham, Blaine, Anacortes, Neah Bay and Quillayute Harbors have been approved, and promises extended for action on Port Angeles next year.

In addition, we authorized the Port Townsend Harbor project this year and the Sammamish River flood control plan. I plan, if reelected, to push for funds for these projects next year.

Navigational surveys will be undertaken on three of our major rivers due to action I was able to secure this year. The Skagit, Stilliguamish and Snohomish Rivers will be studied by the United States Army engineers to determine the feasibility of navigational improvements.

My mailbag has brought a host of letters outlining individual problems requiring consultation and negotiation with governmental agencies. Many of these were settled to the satisfaction of the party which sought the help of my office. I am grateful that so many residents of the district have written to express opinions on legislation, in answer to the questionnaire I sent out this year, and in requesting help for specific problems.

As we leave Washington for the political battlefield, I would like to extend to my colleagues in the House my appreciation for the cooperation and fellowship I have enjoyed. I'm sure it is the hope of all of us that we are saying, in the words of the old song "Au Revoir," but not "Good Bye."

House Proves Friend Indeed to Veterans of War With Spain

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. BARRATT O'HARA

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, as the minutes run out on the 84th Congress and I glance over this historic Chamber, gladdened by seeing dear faces on both sides of the aisle, saddened by the thought that all will not be returning, I feel that I should speak what deeply is in my heart.

Close to six decades have passed since the 55th Congress in its second session decreed that Cuba should be free and that Spanish rule on this hemisphere should cease. Since then there have been 29 Congresses. In these a total of 98 veterans of the war with Spain have served as Members of this body. As the last of this number I have sought, as best my opportunity and diligence would permit, to represent the spirit and the interest of the survivors and the widows of survivors of the faraway war that started our United States of America on the road to world responsibility.

From the bottom of my heart I thank my colleagues on both sides of the aisle for the understanding and the help they have given. I could not let the 84th Congress slip into history without saying what is in my heart. The leadership on both sides, the membership of the House without a single exception, have shown a friendship for the Spanish War veterans and their widows that I shall never forget, that will not be forgotten as long as life and memory remain with any in that group.

HOUSE PASSED MORO BILL

By unanimous vote in the first session you passed the so-called Moro bill, intended at long last to give recognition to the few who remain of that valiant army that carried on in hostile Philippine provinces with great sacrifice and loss after the arbitrary cutoff date of the Spanish-American War.

HOUSE PASSED LAMBERT BILL

By unanimous vote in the second session you passed the measure placing the name of Gustaf Lambert, soldier of the war with Spain and hero of the yellow-fever experiments in Cuba, on the honor roll where it should have been many, many years ago. Also you adopted, by unanimous vote, an amendment to an appropriation bill providing money for the gold for a medal for Gustaf Lambert.

HOUSE SAVED THE "OLYMPIA"

You were not deaf to my expression of the sentiment among my comrades of the war with Spain for the preservation as a historic shrine of the warship Olympia, Dewey's flagship in the naval battle in Manila Bay and that bore to our shores the Unknown Soldier of World War I for burial in Arlington National Cemetery. As a result I am assured the Olympia, instead of being junked, is on the list of the historic battleships of our country to be preserved.

HOUSE PASSED WIDOWS BILL

By unanimous vote you passed a bill for an increase in the pension for our Spanish War widows. God's blessing will reward you for this action. There are not many widows of Spanish War veterans. There are fewer every month. They are too old to work. For the most part they receive no social-security assistance. They are in dire need. Trying to stretch out a piteously meager pension, many of them are unable to buy the medicines they so badly need. The Spanish War veterans asked nothing for themselves, only that these widows be provided with minimum pensions of $75 a month. To its everlasting glory, the House responded.

THANKS TO YOUNGER VETERANS

To all my colleagues in this body again and again the thanks of the gentleman from Illinois and all his comrades. You have been magnificent. Most of you are veterans of World War I or World War II or both. You have given a helping hand to the lone Spanish War veteran remaining among you in this Chamber in the finest expression of comradeship. When the time shall come that among the many veterans of World War I and of World War II but one remains a member of this body, it is my prayer that from his younger colleagues this last surviving veteran will receive in full measure of richness the understanding and the help you have given the last of the Spanish War veterans in this body.

CREDIT TO GREAT LEADERS

During the 1st session of the 84th Congress the commander in chief of the United Spanish War Veterans was the Honorable Lloyd Thurston, who came to Congress as a Representative from the State of Iowa the year our beloved minority leader, JOE MARTIN, was a freshman. He served for many years with great distinction, being a member at different times of the Rules, Appropriations, and Ways and Means Committees.

Commander in Chief James H. Johnson, serving as head of the United Spanish War Veterans during the 2d session of the 84th Congress, is a veteran of the war with Spain, of World War I, and World War II. He is a great soldier and a great American. His military record is outstanding.

Past Commander in Chief William J. Otjen as chairman of the legislative committee of the USWV, working side by side with Mrs. Hattie B. Trazenfeld as cochairman, has done a prodigious job in the promotion of worthy and patriotic legislative causes. He has been as tireless as time itself, and even at this moment when adjournment is near and hope is fading he is at the post of duty and of honor on the other side of the Capitol striving to get action on our widows' bill by the other body.

OTJEN'S TESTIMONY IN FULL

Mr. Speaker, I am extending my remarks to include the testimony of Past Commander in Chief Otjen before the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs, as follows:

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I am William J. Otjen, of Enid, Okla., past commander in chief of the United Spanish War Veterans and chairman of the national committee on legislation and its administration of that organization.

I have with me Mrs. Hattie B. Trazenfeld, a past national president of our auxiliary and cochairman of the auxiliary legislative committee.

Of course, we have given due study to the proposals incorporated in the measure before this committee. We do not question the major portion of H. R. 7089, which is apparently designed principally for the relief of dependents of career personnel. We are in complete accord, especially with the objective of increasing death compensation rates for service-connected dependents of the honored dead.

With that thought in mind I wish to confine my remarks in considering the objectives of H. R. 7089 to a proposed amendment which has been introduced by Senator GREEN, of Rhode Island, and which is before you, and I understand that an amendment is to be introduced by Senator COTTON, of New Hampshire, for the same purpose. They are both similar in character and the efforts of both meet the same objective.

These objectives are that for reasons which I hope to be able to describe in full, intended to request that surviving widows of deceased veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Philippine Insurrection, and the Boxer uprising be included within the terms of the Hardy bill as service-connected and at the proposed rates defined under that bill.

As we are advised, at this time the rolls of the Veterans' Administration will show 334 Spanish War veterans as service-connected; they show 1,193 dependents as service-connected. They show as of December 31, 1955, 56,019 non-service-connected veterans nd 80,903 such dependents. We do not dispute the rolls of the Veterans' Administration, but we certainly know that this tabulation of figures does not do justice to the veterans of the Spanish War. Let me emphasize that embraced in the Spanish War veterans are the veterans who served during the official period of the Spanish War in 1898. Also embraced are those who served until July 1, 1902, either in the Boxer Rebellion or in the Philippine Insurrection. Our tabulation shows that 61 percent of the Spanish War veterans—covering this period—served overseas.

There are Members of this honorable body, Senator Martin, of Pennsylvania, Senator Green, of Rhode Island, Senator Neely, of West Virginia, and of those who have recently retired, Senator Tom Connally, of Texas, and Senator Gillette, of Iowa, all of whom were Spanish War veterans, and who have vivid recollections of what was faced by that volnuteer army of 1898.

They were all volunteers; they enlisted for the meager pay of $13 per month. They drilled in heavy blue uniforms, ate hardtack, and food which was supposed to be left from the Civil War. The food was such, the facilities of the camps were such—lack of sanitation, lack of medical supplies, lack of proper food—that sickness became abnormal. It could not be coped with. These men drilled in their blue uniforms with sticks instead of muskets. Disease was rife and the death rate very high. Scarcely any hospital records were kept. The senior Members of the Senate will remember the tales of Montauk Point where sickness became almost unbelievable. It was appalling.

Of that terrible period of the Spanish War, no adequate records were kept, no hospital records available. When the regiments were mustered out, the men were simply glanced at with no physical examination, and they returned to their homes. They had no benefits of the present GI training which we think that Congress can be greatly commended for putting into effect. None of the Spanish War veterans had the advantage of college training—it would have meant much to them. They had no benefit from loans for business purposes; they had no bonuses except in a few States, but in their declining years, the thing which is worse for them is that there is no record of hospitalization, no record of service-connected disability. That is the reason why so few are shown as service connected.

In my own experience in the Philippines my company lost one-half of its men, but men of that company shot and wounded grievously were—and are—carried on the Veterans' Administration rolls as nonservice connected.

The Veterans' Administration—and I say this without criticism—just does not have a tabulation of the living Spanish War veterans who were service connected, nor does it have a complete tabulation of the deceased Spanish War veterans who were service connected. If it had such records, those records would doubtless show that many of the veterans of 1898–1902 would have disabilities directly resulting from armed service. However, the absence of such records is the reason why the vast majority of the Spanish War veterans are receiving the pension rates, and that is why I am appearing before this committee.

We feel that considering the advanced age of Spanish War veterans, their increased death rate—1,367 of our veterans passed away during the 3 months ending December 31 by VA computation—that something must be done immediately about the widows of these veterans. As for the widows, the maximum number has been reached. The rolls fluctuate just a little from month to month now, but the roll will decrease steadily. We think it only just and fair, and we advocate strongly that the dependents of the Spanish War veterans be included in H. R. 7089 as presumptively service connected.

I would like to call attention at this point to a brief colloquy that took place on the floor of the House last July 13, when the Hardy bill, H. R. 7089, was being considered.

The reference is to a question asked by the Honorable BARRATT O'HARA of Mr. TEAGUE, of Texas. Congressman O'HARA is the last surviving veteran of the Spanish-American War serving in the House of Representatives, and, as this committee well knows, Mr. TEAGUE is the chairman of the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs and was a most important member of the select committee which drafted and approved the Hardy bill.

"Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take the 5 minutes. I am not accustomed to criticizing committees. I think this committee has worked hard and has come before us with a bill that has much merit. The members of the committee are outstanding in ability and in knowledge of veteran problems. I doubt, however, that we have had sufficient time to read the bill and to study its provisions. I regret that the bill comes to the floor under a closed rule. It would have been more quieting to our concern in guarding against inadvertencies if the rule had been open. I am speaking especially for the Spanish-American War group. My colleagues will appreciate my position as the last remaining veteran of that war of the 96 or 97 who have served in this body. Among our Spanish-American War veterans, there is some concern. We feel that the House could have quieted that concern if there had been an open rule, and it had been permissible to present an amendment that in substance would have recognized that in the Spanish-American War there were no records kept. Now, I know how difficult it is for younger veterans to appreciate conditions at that time. So that it may be made clear in the record, I have requested this time to ask one who knows, the great chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, the gentleman from Texas—Mr. TEAGUE—to make comment on that phase.

"Mr. TEAGUE of Texas. I would certainly agree with the gentleman that the records kept during the Spanish-American War and during World War I and World War II are altogether different. The records are very poor, when we find any record at all, so far as the Spanish-American War veterans are concerned.

"Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. So that it would be impossible for a Spanish-American War veteran or his widow to prove that the veteran had service-connected injuries?

"Mr. TEAGUE of Texas. That is so in practically every case."

This status has been recognized officially by our Government on two occasions. You Members of the Senate will recall the Economy Act that was passed during 1933. Two years later, the Congress restored the pension payments to Spanish War veterans and their dependents, and when President Roosevelt approved the restoration bill, he issued a statement which called attention to what could be termed a great difference between the services rendered by Spanish War veterans and those rendered in subsequent wars.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to read the text of the White House statement explaining the reasons which actuated the President in signing the bill restoring these pension rights. It follows exactly:

"The President, in signing today (August 13) H. R. 6895, a bill reenacting laws dealing with pensions granted to veterans and the dependents of veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Philippine Insurrection, and the Boxer Rebellion, made clear the definite distinction between legislation relating to veterans of early wars and the veterans of the World War.

"The Congress on many occasions has recognized that because of the complete absence of any system or policy initiated during or immediately following the Civil War, the Indian Wars, and the Spanish-American War, and because of lack of adequate medical care from the point of view of modern standards, the veterans of these earlier wars could be compensated and taken care of only through some form of pension system.

"In the case of the World War, however, the Congress at the very beginning of the war adopted an entirely new system of care and benefits. This new system applied to all who fought in the World War, extended to them additional compensation if they had dependents, as well as insurance, hospitalization, vocational rehabilitation, and the adjusted service certificate (the bonus).

"The veterans of the Spanish-American War now approaching an average age of 62 years, had none of these advantages except hospitalization in recent years. Their case therefore, cannot be compared to the case of World War veterans. For the same reason the approval of this bill establishes no ground or precedent for pensions for the World War group; theirs is an entirely different case.

"There are some inequalities involved in this legislation but the President recognizes the fact that the Spanish-American veterans were once on the rolls, under prior legislation, that they are approaching advanced age, that their disabilities are increasing.

"The President's action is taken appropriately on the anniversary date of the occupation of Manila by the American forces."

Later, in 1951, the Congress passed the bill known as our outpatient treatment bill, which was vetoed by the Chief Executive. It was passed by both Houses of Congress by an overwhelming vote over the veto. That bill provided that because of lack of hospital records and service-connected records, Spanish War veterans should be presumed and considered as service connected for outpatient treatment purposes. So, we think this is a just measure which will not cost the Government of the United States much for the reason that our ranks are so rapidly thinning.

The veterans of the Spanish War are asking no increase in pension for themselves in this Congress, but the pension of $54.18 which is paid the elderly widows of the Spanish War does not provide a decent living expense. We feel that this amendment would be a just recognition of the incomparable service of these aging veterans and aging widows. Every elderly man and woman realizes the high cost of living and the high cost of medical treatment for the aged. Our people are no exception.

We veterans of the Spanish-American War are inclined to boast that ours was the last war this country has won in which the peace treaty did not give away the benefits obtained. The achievements of the Spanish War veteran added to this great country of ours Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines. They made us a world power. Ours was the only war in which this country has been engaged in which returns to this country were far greater than the cost. The Spanish War opened up the markets of Asia and the Far East to the United States, and increased the trade of the Nation enormously. You gentlemen know that the period following our war was commonly referred to as "The golden era."

We feel that it would be but just compensation to that volunteer army of 1898–1902 to adopt our requested amendment to H. R. 7089, which would provide that the death of a veteran shall be conclusively presumed to have resulted from disease or injury incurred or aggravated in line of duty while so serving.

I might suggest, Mr. Chairman, that a member of the Hardy committee suggested that we present this amendment.

Mrs. TRAZENFELD. As cochairman of the legislative committee for the United Spanish War Veterans, may I say that our organization—and I speak for the 80,000 widows that this amendment would affect—concurs completely in the statement rendered by our chairman, Mr. Otjen, and we feel that should this committee in their deliberations find it within their hearts to grant this request, a great injustice of long standing could be corrected, and that much happiness and much good and at very little cost would be accomplished.

Appropriations Made in the 2d Session of the 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN TABER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the permission given to me, I am submitting a table showing the appropriations made in the 2d session of the 84th Congress.

It will be seen that, without the cuts in the mutual security setup, the Congress on direct appropriations appropriated more money than the budget asked for by $523 million. In addition to the direct appropriations, there were reappropriations involving very large sums of money, probably at the very least $500 million.

One of the worst things that we have to contend with is that so many of the expenditures are provided for in different acts which permit expenditures from public debt receipts. That authority is outstanding as of July 1 last, according to the estimates that have been furnished us, in the amount of $19,772,000,000. This is almost one-third of the direct appropriations made by the Congress, so that the availability of funds is in the neighborhood of $19,772,000,000, plus obligated and unobligated balances that are carried forward, plus the authority to spend from public debt receipts, and the management and revolving funds which run to a total of about $74 billion carried over from the 30th of June 1956. You add to that the $68 billion of new money available on July 1, and you have $142 billions.

We have been fortunate in that, notwithstanding about $72 billion withdrawals from the Treasury, we had net deposits of $77 billion; and, although the actual surplus is only about $1.8 billion, the cash balance picture is quite a lot more. With these $19 billion of authority to spend from public debt receipts, there is no possible way for the Congress to keep a tight control upon funds.

With the advent of the new highway bill and the trust fund proposal, the gasoline tax receipts and that sort of thing will not appear as Treasury revenue, but will go into a trust fund. The withdrawals will not be labeled a charge against the Treasury. For the fiscal year 1957 the charge for this trust fund is $800 million. The story of the appropriations no longer means the control over appropriations that we had 30 years ago.

Comparison of estimates and appropriations, 84th Cong., 2d sess.

Report to the District

OF

HON. HARRIS ELLSWORTH

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I have always considered it one of the duties of a Representative in Congress to keep the people of the district he represents informed about his activities and about the work of Congress. While Congress is in session, I send a letter from Washington to the newspapers of the district which is printed in most of them. During this Congress I have also made frequent radio and television reports. This year, as I have done before at the conclusion of a term of Congress, I have prepared a summary or report on this, the 84th Congress, and have included in it a summary of my own activities. In addition to presenting this report to the House now, I shall have reprints of it made which will be circulated as widely as possible in the Fourth Congressional District of Oregon, which I represent.

A DIVIDED GOVERNMENT

During the 2 years of this Congress the authority and responsibility for the operation of the Federal Government is divided. The executive branch of the Government which must administer the laws passed by Congress and operate the numerous executive agencies is headed by a Republican President, Dwight D. Eisenhower, with a Republican Cabinet. The Congress is controlled by the Democratic Party. Although the margin of control is only 1 vote in the Senate and 29 votes in the House, these majorities mean that all committees are not only headed by Democrats, but the committees are dominated by Democratic majorities. For example, the Rules Committee, of which I am a member, has 8 Democratic members and 4 Republicans. Although this is the largest majority control of any committee, the others have majorities sufficient to insure majority control.

As a practical matter then, with Congress controlled by one party and the administration by the other party, the element of politics inevitably becomes a part of most of the important actions of the Congress.

At the beginning of each Congress the President presents it with a statement of his ideas as to what legislation should be enacted. These suggestions are known as the President's program. When the President's party controls Congress, as it did in the first 2 years of this administration, the Republican Congress could and did go ahead and enact into law most of the President's program.

This Congress apparently could not, as a matter of practical politics, give such wholehearted support to an opposition administration. The record shows that it did not do so.

PARTS OF PROGRAM PASSED

On the other hand, in spite of the sharp party and political battles over legislation to carry out the President's program, the record of this Congress is fairly good. As I look over the record of the accomplishments of this 84th Congress, it is pleasing to note that many of the important items in the President's program were enacted into law. It is true that practically none of the recommendations of the President were followed exactly. In many instances the legislation which was passed, although dealing with the same subject, represents quite a different approach to the problem from that suggested by President Eisenhower.

For example, the President suggested a big, long-range highway improvement and construction program. The big program was approved by Congress, but in a completely different form which involves heavier taxes which will pay for the construction program as it is completed. The political battle over the highway bill, which failed of passage in the first session, caused a delay of more than a year in the beginning of the program.

The President suggested a farm program designed to reduce the enormous surplus of farm products which the Government owns and to withhold from production land which had been forced to produce food for war. It was necessary for the President to veto the first bill passed by this Congress. The final version which he accepted did not fully represent the program he recommended. The political struggle over the farm bill caused delay which was costly to the farmers.

Most of the President's program having to do with foreign policy was given bipartisan approval except the request for foreign aid.

The President recommended $4.9 billion, which was reduced by a billion in both the authorization and the appropriation bills.

A few of the President's recommendations were passed without material change. The Housing Act revision was quite similar to the President's request. The upper Colorado River reclamation project was authorized. The Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was extended. The minimum-wage law was amended to increase the hourly rate. Disaster assistance legislation which he recommended was enacted, including a flood-damage insurance program. The 10-year improvement and expansion program for the national parks, known now as Mission 66, was immediately approved, both with additional legislation and with appropriations.

Several recommendations made by President Eisenhower were not approved. He urged Federal assistance to help local school districts construct classrooms, to be in the form of credit support and grants-in-aid on a limited basis in distressed areas. After struggling with this recommendation for most of both sessions, a bill, which did not represent the President's recommendation but provided a large program of outright grants to all States irrespective of need, was rejected by the House.

Although the much discussed aid-to-education bill failed to pass, this Congress voted to continue two school assistance programs which have been very helpful in our congressional district. One provides money assistance for operation and maintenance to those districts where the school population has been swollen because of some Federal activity such as a large construction project, a military camp or logging in the national forest. The other program provides construction money for such districts. The Congress authorized a total of $368 million for the two programs during the present and next fiscal years.

His proposed health-insurance plan, which would make available to more people a prepayment plan for medical care, was not even taken up for consideration in this Congress.

OTHER LEGISLATION REJECTED

The administration recommended that Congress increase postage rates as a means of decreasing the huge deficit from operating the Post Office Department. The annual loss is about $500 million. The House passed a bill which, among other rate increases, would have boosted the charge for mailing a first-class letter from 3 cents to 4 cents. Although the Senate committee held hearings and had the bill prepared for action, it was not taken up by the Senate before adjournment. There will be no postage increase this year.

A large irrigation and reclamation project in Colorado known as the Frying-pan-Arkansas project, which had the approval of the administration, was killed by the House in a close rollcall vote.

The much discussed Hells Canyon high-dam proposal was rejected by the Senate by a vote of 51 to 41. It was not taken up for consideration by the House. A careful reading of the extensive Senate debate on the Hells Canyon bill reveals that many of the facts claimed as compelling virtues for the high-dam project were not facts at all. The waterpower resource of that stretch of the Snake River is being developed under a license issued to a power company by the Federal Power Commission. Most hydropower in the United States has been developed on that same basis. Such development has never before been referred to as a "giveaway" which is the political cry against the Hells Canyon decision.

In the closing days of Congress an attempt was made to pressure through the House a bill directing the Atomic Energy Commission to proceed at once on a program involving the expenditure of $400 million to build large atomic reactor plants for the purpose of producing electricity on a full-scale commercial basis. This scheme was opposed by the administration, by our military people, by the Atomic Energy Commission, and by several atomic scientists. It was urged only by one outstanding scientist and the Joint House-Senate Committee on Atomic Energy. On a rollcall vote the House sent the bill back to committee—in other words, killed it.

MY LEGISLATIVE ACTIVITIES

Much of my own legislative activity was in the general field of conservation. The destruction of the fish runs in the Rogue River because of the lack of proper screens for the turbines and ditch outlets at Savage Rapids Dam has been a serious and costly problem for several years. The project was too big to be undertaken under State law and since the dam is not strictly a Federal dam has not been eligible for the appropriation of Federal funds. To solve this problem I worked out proper authorization language and an appropriation item of $208,000 and was able to get both the authorization and the appropriation made in the 1957 public-works appropriations bill when it passed the House. Construction of the fish screens will begin soon.

For several years, since the value of standing timber on Government-owned land has increased so sharply, I have been endeavoring to secure the passage of legislation which would separate surface and subsurface rights on mining claims. In other words, the timber on a mining claim should remain the property of the Government when a mining claim is filed. My first success in this endeavor was with a bill of mine approved in 1948, when Congress enacted such a law protecting the timber on Oregon and California railroad grant lands in Oregon. In succeeding Congresses I worked in cooperation with other Members of the House in an effort to enact similar legislation for the protection of national forests and other public-domain lands. Until last year, when conflicting interests were brought together and an acceptable bill was passed, our efforts were plagued by conflicting committee jurisdictions and by a very sharp conflict between the mining industry and conservationists. The 1955 act is the first important change in the Federal mining claim laws to be made since 1872. It is one of the most important pieces of conservation legislation passed by Congress in many years.

Other conservation legislation included increased appropriations for forest recreation areas; authorizing legislation and appropriations for the Nation Park Service Mission 66 program; the creation of the position of Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Fisheries and Wildlife; and a bill to authorize a research program on forest range and watershed management. Another piece of conservation legislation which I was glad to support was the bill which became Public Law 660, to increase Federal research grants to States and an expanded program for water-pollution control.

Legislation which I sponsored and which was passed by the House included the transfer of surplus land at the Veterans' Administration hospital in Roseburg to the city of Roseburg for use as a park. A bill for a comprehensive survey of the Rogue River Basin which I introduced in the House was incorporated in the omnibus flood-control bill but with slightly different language from that contained in my bill. A bill to convey a historical old house and its contents in Roseburg to the city of Roseburg for the Douglas County Historical Society was passed by the Congress.

PUBLIC-WORKS PROJECTS

We have numerous flood control, navigation, and irrigation projects in our Fourth Congressional District which must be constructed with Federal funds. During this Congress, as in previous years, I have worked diligently toward securing appropriations for these needed public works. Some of these projects are discussed in the following paragraphs:

Talent irrigation project: For 10 years or more the previous administrations worked on a survey of an irrigation plan for the Rogue River Basin. When the Eisenhower administration took over, the Department of the Interior Reclamation Bureau was directed by Secretary Douglas McKay to prepare and send to Congress a project report for the Talent division of the Rogue River reclamation survey. I immediately introduced a bill to authorize this $22 million project and in 1954 fought it through to final passage in the House, winning on a rollcall vote by the narrow margin of 19 votes. An appropriation for completion of the planning of the project was passed in 1955. The first big appropriation for construction of the project, $2,400,000, was budgeted by the President and approved by the Congress this year.

Coos Bay Harbor: Soon after the end of World War II, I sponsored the legislation necessary to deepen the inner harbor at Coos Bay and increase the depth over the bar to 40 feet. This legislation was passed promptly. Subsequently, the necessary appropriations were made by Congress and the project is now completed with the exception of the Charleston Small Boat Harbor, for the completion of which funds have been appropriated this year.

Harbor at Gold Beach: My bill to authorize the construction of a harbor at the mouth of Rogue River was passed by Congress in 1954. That project is needed badly as a water shipping outlet for the products of the Curry County area. It is now eligible for appropriations. I am making every possible effort to get planning and construction money for the Gold Beach Harbor included in the next budget.

Green Peter Dam: One of the three urgently needed dams for the Willamette Basin flood-control project, the Green Peter Dam on the South Santiam, is an alternate site for a main stem dam authorized in 1938. That authorization was for flood-control construction only. A better benefit-to-cost ratio could be obtained by redesigning the dam and including power, so in 1954 my bill to authorize the dam as a multiple-purpose project including power was passed. Planning of this dam under the new authorization is partially completed. In the public works appropriation bill this year $200,000 was included for that purpose.

Cougar Dam: The Cougar Dam on the McKenzie has substantially the same status as the Green Peter Dam. It, too, is an alternate dam for one authorized in 1938. Cougar Dam was also authorized for power in 1954 in legislation which I introduced and passed through the House. Planning for this dam has been completed. It is now under construction with $1,650,000 in the public works appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957.

Partnership plan for Cougar and Green Peter: Three major units of the Willamette project are either under construction or in the advance planning stage—Cougar, Hills Creek, and Green Peter. The total estimated cost of these 3 projects is:

Cougar	$37,400,000
Hills Creek	32,300,000
Total	128,065,000

Since these dams are to be constructed almost simultaneously, it means that very large amounts must be appropriated annually for the next several years. In fact, the amounts necessary to complete construction of these projects at a maximum rate would be so large that they would tend to unbalance the annual public works appropriation bill in favor of the one river basin in Oregon, as compared with appropriations for projects in the other 47 States. It is evident, therefore, that if non-Federal money can be used on these projects along with appropriated funds, we stand a far better chance of having the projects completed at the earliest possible moment than if we are compelled to depend entirely upon annual appropriations made by Congress. For this reason, as well as because of the soundness of the partnership plan, I introduced in 1954 bills which would authorize the Federal Government to contract with local utilities in the Cougar and Green Peter areas for the construction of power facilities and the necessary reregulating dams for the Cougar and Green Peter projects.

In 1954 the partnership bill for Cougar passed the House without a dissenting voice, but was blocked in the Senate. The Green Peter partnership bill, which came up late in that year, did not reach House action in 1954. In 1955 I again introduced the partnership legislation, this time incorporating both Green Peter and Cougar Dams in one bill. The Flood Control Subcommittee of the House Commitete on Public Works favorably reported my partnership bill to the full committee. It was stopped there by political pressure.

The opposition is endeavoring to make of this partnership proposal a public power versus private power issue. They evidently think they can brainwash the people with the emotional appeal of the magic phrase "low-cost Federal power" in order to make votes in this election. The truth is that there is no public versus private power aspect to the Green Peter-Cougar partnership proposal. Regardless of how the dams are built, people will purchase their power from the same utility that they do now and at the same rates. All power produced in the Pacific Northwest goes through the Northwest power pool so that there can be no question of harming or disturbing the overall Northwest power program by the adoption of the partnership plan. Facts in both House and Senate committee hearings show that the publicly owned power system at Eugene, through partnership, would get power cheaper than it can be purchased from Bonneville.

Chetco Small-Boat Harbor: Several years ago I succeeded in getting a bill passed to authorize the construction of a small-boat harbor at the mouth of the Chetco River at Brookings. This year $225,000 was appropriated for its construction.

Amazon project in Eugene: The growth of the city of Eugene has made necessary the control of Amazon Creek which runs through the city in order to prevent great annual damage from the flooding of this stream. I have been working on this project for several years. A substantial part of it is now completed. A new unit of it is under construction for which $100,000 was included in the public works appropriation bill this year.

Willamette Valley flood control project: The gigantic flood control project for the Willamette Basin which was first authorized in 1938 was somewhat delayed by World War II. Since I have been a Member of Congress, Dorena, Detroit, Fern Ridge, and Lookout Point dams have been constructed. As stated above, Hills Creek and Cougar are now under construction and Green Peter is in the planning stage. A total of $180 million has been appropriated for this project since I have been in Congress. I have worked each year for appropriations to keep the rate of construction on these projects at a high level.

Coos flood-control survey: My bill, H. R. 8074, in the 83d Congress, was passed, providing for a water use and flood control survey in the Coos County area. Protective works are needed but their nature and extent can only be determined by a proper survey. This year I have worked toward increasing the appropriation for such surveys.

APPROPRIATIONS THIS SESSION

This year the final appropriation figures for projects in our Fourth Congressional District are as follows:

Amazon Creek (Eugene)	$100,000
Chetco River Harbor	225,000
Coos Bay	300,000
Couger flood-control dam	1,650,000
Green Peter flood-control dam	200,000
Hills Creek flood-control dam	2,125,000
Holley Dam	100,000
Savage Rapids Dam fish screens	208,000
Talent irrigation project	2,400,000
Willamette River bank protection	300,000

In addition to the above appropriations for specific projects by name, the bill carries funds for flood-control surveys, rehabilitation money for two of the older irrigation districts in the Talent project, harbor maintenance money, and funds for small projects to be allocated by the Army engineers.

POWER DISTRIBUTION

Allocated for expenditure in the Fourth District for the current fiscal year by the Bonneville Administration for additions and improvement of transmission facilities is $4,158,000. This is the largest share of the Bonneville funds for any of Oregon's congressional districts. As I have consistently done in the past, I appeared before the House Appropriations Committee requesting these funds and others to improve power availability in Oregon.

To further distribution of power through rural electric cooperatives and for telephone cooperatives, the past Congress authorized appropriations for fiscal years 1956 and 1957 in the amount of $665,735,000. This makes a total of more than $2 billion in loan funds for REA that I have voted for since coming to Congress.

Allocations of funds to electric and telephone cooperatives serving the Fourth District from January 1955 to July 1956 were as follows:

Douglas Electric Cooperative (2 loans)	$150,000
Douglas Electric Cooperative	184,000
Coos-Curry Electric Cooperative	2,000,000
Lane County Electric Cooperative	339,000
Benton-Lincoln Cooperative	1,830,000
Pioneer Rural Telephone Cooperative	90,000
Pioneer Rural Telephone Cooperative (2 loans)	432,000

THE POWER ISSUE

Briefly stated, my policy, which is also administration and Republican policy, regarding Northwest power development is that far more generating capacity is needed in the Northwest than can or will be built entirely at Federal expense. Approximately $100 million annually, or 20 to 30 percent of the entire Federal appropriations for multiple-purpose power development has been approved by Congress for the Pacific Northwest States. At least three times this amount must be spent annually to provide additional power. We favor the construction of power generators with capital from all sources—Federal-State, local REA's public-utility districts or individuals. Unless the economic development of the Northwest is to come to a halt, we must have more electrical energy at the rate of 500,000 kilowatts of new generating capacity each year.

I, and Republicans generally, have supported appropriations for the Bonneville system, for the Big Columbia River Dams, for the Hills Creek, Lookout Point, Detroit, and other Federal project dams which include power. The partnership proposal for Green Peter and Cougar is merely designed to provide $40 million in supplemental local funds available to speed completion of these projects and relieve the people of the average annual $2 million in flood losses.

ACCESS ROADS

An expanded program of timber access road construction is sorely needed for the proper management of the national forests in our district. I have been battling on this subject every year. The first favorable break came in the passage of the Highway Construction Act of 1954 by the 83d Congress. That law not only increased the authorization for access roads—Forest Service roads and trails—to $22,500,000 but permitted funds to be obligated over a 3-year period, thus permitting fairly long-range planning.

When the Public Works Committee had the highway bill under consideration last year and again this year, I urged that the authorization be increased to $25 million with that sum earmarked for construction, plus another $10 million for annual maintenance. The previous authorizations have not separated construction and maintenance. The House committee did not go all the way, but it did increase the total figure to $27 million. It passed the House in that form.

The Senate committee struck out the House increase and sent the bill to the Senate floor with the 1954 figure unchanged. Fortunately, Republican Senator BARRETT, of Wyoming, supported by other Senate Republicans, was able to secure the passage by the Senate of an amendment which restored the House access road figure and added to the amount for forest highways. The Barrett amendment increases were approved in conference and the higher figures are in the law.

MINING DEVELOPMENT

With the establishment of the Bureau of Mines Electrometallurgical Laboratory which former Senator McNary and I were able to have located at Albany, there has been an expanded interest in the development of mining and smelting in our district. The Albany laboratory developed the first commercially successful method of production of zirconium metal, essential in atomic industry. Private production of zirconium for the Government continues to provide employment for people in Albany. Two new industries now employing hundreds of men are in operation: The Hanna Co., at Riddle, mining and smelting nickel from the low-grade ore of Nickel Mountain; and the Apex Manufacturing Co., at Springfield, which is reducing aluminum from native clay.

Had it not been for congressional interference almost to the point of persecution under the guise of a committee investigation, I believe the old Buzzard Mine, in Jackson County, now known as the Al Sarena Mine, might be in production on up to a 10,000-ton-a-day basis and providing considerable employment.

For more than 50 years the area in which the Al Sarena property is located has been known as a mineralized area yielding gold, silver, lead, and zinc. Reliable estimates place the ore body of the Al Sarena Mine at 150 million tons or more. Some $200,000 has been spent on development of the property in tunnels, buildings, and mining equipment. A 100-ton mill was installed to make experimental runs to determine the ore values. I am informed that the owners had intended, when the patents were granted and financing could be arranged, to spend several hundred thousand dollars in core drillings and "blocking out" the ore body, whereupon, according to usual mining procedure, the financing of some $5 million for the major development could be done. The mineowners were made the victims of a vicious political attack, aimed at the administration, which slandered and maligned them. They were compelled to temporarily abandon their plans for commercial development, thus delaying into the future a needed payroll industry for Oregon. The congressional investigation served only to prove the falsity and fiction of so-called "charges" and their political origins.

It is possible that the attack on the Al Sarena people may have created a climate in Oregon which might make other potential development in doubt.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

The House of Representatives passed a number of bills to provide adjustment in payments to veterans to make such payments more in line with the present value of the dollar. These bills would have increased payments for non-service-connected veterans who are unable to support themselves and would have likewise increased payments for veterans who suffered service-connected disabilities. Spanish-American War veterans' widows' pensions were also increased in legislation passed by the House.

The Senate failed to act on any of these veterans' bills before the adjournment of Congress, thus none of them became law.

SOCIAL SECURITY

As finally passed by both Houses and sent to the President, amendments to the Social Security Act added compulsory coverage for osteopaths but left doctors and Government employees as the only major groups not covered under the social-security law. The new law would also permit women to draw reduced benefits at the age of 62. Widows at that age would receive full benefits. Provision is also made for payments for total disability at age 50 and after.

The payroll tax levied on the first $4,200 of annual income, now 2 percent for employer and employee, will be increased January 1 to 2¼ percent. The tax on self-employed will be increased from 3 percent to 3⅜ percent.

OTHER LEGISLATION

In all, a total of 16,782 bills were introduced in this 84th Congress. Of this number about 1,900 were passed by both Houses and sent to the President. In this report it is not possible to discuss dozens of other items of beneficial legislation, but I shall be glad to answer inquiries concerning any of these bills.

ATTENDANCE RECORD

During this session of Congress the roll has been called 132 times in the House of Representatives. Fifty-nine of these rollcalls were simple quorum calls and 73 were record votes on legislation. My attendance record is one of the best of any Member of the House. I missed only one vote and it was on a bill having to do with the District of Columbia. I missed only 3 of the 59 quorum calls.

I had first thought to include the details of my voting record in this report, but space will not permit. However, I shall be glad to furnish such information to anyone who desires it.

TO NATO CONFERENCE

Your Congressman received a nice honor which was announced just a few hours before Congress adjourned. Speaker SAM RAYBURN named me as one of nine House members who, with nine Senators, will represent the United States Congress in the parliamentary conference of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization member nations. The conference will be held in Paris beginning November 19. Our delegation is being sent to this conference pursuant to a joint resolution passed by Congress a few weeks ago. The future course of NATO is a matter of very serious consideration in all of the member governments. The Paris Conference promises to be one of considerable importance.

YEAR-ROUND SERVICE

The Washington office of your Congressman is kept open year round whether Congress is in session or not. Our office is a busy place. Mail will average about 50 letters a day. Many people from Oregon visit my office every year. We are always glad to see them because they bring news from home. I have been called upon many times for assistance by our State, county, and local officials and by veterans and others in connection with their problems with the Federal Government.

I am always glad to be of help in any way that I can. I welcome letters commenting upon legislation and expressing opinions. I hope the people of the Fourth Congressional District of Oregon feel free to call upon me at any time if they think I can be of help to them. While I shall have an office at 217 Pacific Building in Roseburg during adjournment, letters will always reach me if addressed: Congressman HARRIS ELLSWORTH, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Seizure of Suez Canal

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. W. J. BRYAN DORN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. DORN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the action of dictator Nasser in seizing the Suez Canal is another example of our ridiculous policy of buying friends with money. If any nation should be grateful to America, that nation is Egypt. When Rommel was knocking at the gates of Cairo with his Nazi and fascist legions, it was America and Britain who came to her rescue. Since the war, the United States has poured millions into Egypt in the form of economic and military aid. Now, because we did not advance the money to build the Aswan Dam on her terms, Dictator Nasser is ready to join up with Russia and possibly start another world war. If the United States had not sent her a single dollar, I believe she would be much more friendly to us today. The same will eventually be true of the whole free world. One by one they will kick us in the teeth when they find out that our money is running out.

Korea should be an example to our policymakers. How many friends came to our aid in Korea? The whole effort was negligible outside of the United States and South Korea. Mr. Speaker, with our billions and billions, we have only bought hatred, distrust, envy, and jealousy. We have helped others at the expense of our own solvency and national security.

There are many ill fed and ill clothed people throughout the world. We as a nation of surplus commodities can and should help these people but this should be done through the Salvation Army, Red Cross, church groups, and international relief organizations. These organizations are free of politics and are trained and equipped to administer aid directly. The people receiving this aid would know that it was not politically inspired and was not sent as a selfish means of helping America but sent through brotherly love and from the heart of our people.

In opposing foreign aid, I have always urged that we adopt an alternative plan, spend our money on a giant air force, guided missile program, research and development. If we had done this the last 10 years, we would have friends in every section of the world. We would be strong and powerful and nations throughout the world would be anxious to be our allies. Yet we have followed this policy of buying friends and we have failed. We have failed at the expense of our own security. The Russians are turning out more technicians than we are, which is the key to the cold war. It is not too late yet to divert our money to science, engineering, training for technicians, guided missiles, and overwhelming airpower. If we lose the battle of research and development, we will lose the war. By pouring out our money to other nations, we are contributing to their eventual downfall by contributing to our own weakness. The only protection the free world has is a strong America developing annually superior weapons and superior technicians to any other nation. If we scatter these resources all over the world, we will weaken ourselves and weaken the free world.

Mr. Speaker, let us at the next session of the Congress abandon this policy of spending and appeasement, and initiate a strong offensive policy that will win the respect and admiration of the whole world.

Mackinac Island

OF

HON. VICTOR A. KNOX

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, as we adjourn the Congress and return to our respective homes many will be seeking a rendezvous where complete rest and relaxation may be found before entering the fall campaign.

Foremost among the historic shrines of the world and equally as outstanding as a vacation spot is Mackinac Island in the straits of Mackinac just off the tip of Michigan's lower peninsula. Wonders of nature, scenic splendor, historic sights everywhere, and an alluring quaintness provide interests for all.

The island is a State park in which historic places and scenic beauty have been retained. Cars are prohibited, and in their place are horse-drawn carriages of various types and a variety of self-propelled cycles, all of which provide a rare atmosphere of carefree enjoyment.

Fort Mackinac, built in 1780 by the British and used as a stronghold in their battle to retain America in the Revolution and again in the War of 1812, stands in its original state, high above the waters of the straits, but visitors have replaced the warriors that paraded across its grounds more than 160 years ago. Over the years the island has been held by Britain, France, and America.

Here on Mackinac Island you will find the new rearmament assembly center, which has just been completed. Also, you will find the nationally known Grand Hotel, claiming the longest porch in the world, offering elegant accommodations.

In behalf of Mackinac Island I extend an invitation to each and every Member of Congress to seek this beautiful island as their rendezvous.

Detroit Airport Situation

OF

HON. GEORGE MEADER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MEADER. Mr. Speaker, recently the House Government Operations Legal and Monetary Affairs Subcommittee, under the able chairmanship of the Honorable ROBERT H. MOLLOHAN, of West Virginia, held 17 days of hearings and issued a report on the Government's handling of aviation problems.

Included in those hearings was an examination of administration of Federal airport aid funds in the Detroit metropolitan area.

At my request the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics prepared a table showing allocation of funds to various airports in the State of Michigan for a 10-year period, 1947 to 1957. For those interested in aviation matters and particularly for my colleagues from Michigan, I incorporate that tabulation at this point in my remarks, together with the cover letter from C. J. Lowen, Administrator of Civil Aeronautics, dated July 20, 1956.

Mr. Speaker, it is noteworthy that one airport in the State of Michigan received in that 10-year period $6,011,472, or 49.4 percent of the total of $12,146,227, which the whole State of Michigan received in that period. This is more remarkable when it is realized that only one scheduled air carrier has been using the Detroit-Wayne major airport, the recipient of this Federal bounty, namely, Pan American World Airways, which within the last 3 years has commenced scheduled flights, never exceeding one a day, into the Wayne County landing field.

Meanwhile Willow Run Airport, which has served for the past 10 years as the air passenger terminal for Detroit, has received $150,031—1.2 percent—of the Michigan total for that decade.

Mr. Speaker, the question naturally arises, under what philosophy of Federal aid has the bulk of Michigan's allocations of airport aid funds gone to an airport which has practically no scheduled airline traffic?

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
CIVIL AERONAUTICS ADMINISTRATION,
OFFICE OF THE ADMINISTRATOR,
Washington, July 20, 1956.

Hon. GEORGE MEADER,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MEADER: In accordance with a telephone request from your office to Mr. Merle W. Hemphill, Deputy Director, Office of Airports, there is enclosed a summary by years and locations of the Federal-aid airport program in the State of Michigan for fiscal years 1947 through 1957.

If we may be of further service to you, please do not hesitate to call upon us.

Sincerely yours,

C. J. LOWEN,
Administrator of Civil Aeronautics.

Senator Tom Wofford

OF
HON. W. J. BRYAN DORN
OF SOUTH CAROLINA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. DORN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I cannot leave for South Carolina without paying tribute to South Carolina's junior Senator, the Honorable TOM WOFFORD. Gov. George Bell Timmerman made a wise choice in his selection of TOM WOFFORD to represent South Carolina since the resignation of Senator Thurmond in April. Senator WOFFORD in these short months made many friends and admirers on both sides of the Capitol and in both political parties.

Senator WOFFORD ably upheld the principles, ideals, and traditions of the Founding Fathers of this Republic and the great leaders of South Carolina history. He was most cooperative and worked with the other members of the delegation as a team. Senator WOFFORD in his service here was modest, did not seek the headlines, but worked quietly and efficiently for his State and his country.

I hope Senator WOFFORD will not retire from public life but will again someday offer his service to our people. I wish him, his splendid wife, and lovely family the best always.

Need for Thorough Study of the National Banking Act

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ABRAHAM J. MULTER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, anyone who has the slightest familiarity with the Federal statutes regulating national banks must agree that it is high time that all of those statutes were reviewed, clarified, and brought up to date.

Since January 1953, under the aegis of the big banking interests of the country, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency, there has been a constant whittling away at the Federal statutes so as to strike down many of the safeguards written into the law after the bank holiday of 1933.

All of the bad practices that were disclosed as a result of the depression and the bankruptcies which came in and after that period are again being encouraged. In the last few years, under the sponsorship of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency, laws were enacted affecting the qualifications of national bank directors; lessening the number of required bank examinations; lifting the requirement for the filing of stockholders lists with the Comptroller of the Currency; and extending and broadening the lending authority of national banks.

A review of the testimony and reports of these Government officials in connection with those bills, together with that which came from them with reference to the bank holding company bill and the attempt to enact S. 256 to eliminate cumulative voting, plus their resistance to regulation of bank stock proxy solicitation, supports the conclusion that this is all part of a pattern to weaken our national banking system and to vest complete control thereof in the hands of the big moneyed interests of the country.

On July 7, 1955, I introduced House Resolution 303, calling for a study of all of these matters. It has received no attention. On July 20, 1956, I offered a motion in executive session of the House Banking and Currency Committee for the appointment of a subcommittee to study all of these problems. The motion was pending at the time the executive session was recessed and there has been no executive session of the committee held since.

Today I wrote to the chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee as follows:

JULY 27, 1956.

Hon. BRENT SPENCE,
Chairman, Banking and Currency Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Several of the members of our committee are very much concerned, as I am, that we have failed to investigate the activities of the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency and of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is managed by a bipartisan Board of Directors of three members. By law, the Comptroller of the Currency is one of those Board members. Since 1953, the Comptroller of the Currency, Ray M. Gidney, and the Chairman of the Board, H. Earl Cook, have been members of the Republican Party, and the third member, Maple T. Harl, has been a Democrat.

It appears to us that the FDIC has been dominated by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Chairman of the Board. On several occasions, the Comptroller of the Currency and the Chairman of the Board have made statements on behalf of the FDIC without consulting the third member of the Board.

This matter needs thorough investigation to determine to what extent this has occurred. Our attention has been directed to other very serious violations of the law concurred in, or acquiesced in, by Comptroller Gidney and Chairman Cook. To mention but a few—

1. The discharge of an attorney who had tenure resulting in a lawsuit brought by that attorney which has been settled by the payment of $22,500.

2. The employment of not 1, but 2, outside firms of attorneys to defend that suit while at the same time using counsel and attorneys of FDIC to do the same thing.

3. Waste of FDIC funds in that connection.

4. Continuance of an employee, to wit, the chief examiner, on annual leave beyond the time permitted by law.

5. Authorizing, if not instigating, the collection of a substantial fund from employees, for a gift presented to the chief examiner, in violation of law.

6. The waste of funds by giving of cocktail parties and dinners to bankers at the expense of FDIC. We are told that there has been at least one such function in each of the years 1953, 1954, and 1955.

7. The reorganization of a national bank in Chicago by forcing the sale of the stock to the Illinois State auditor who in turn placed his dummy in charge of the organization as the president, as a result of which he was able to cash State checks, improperly drawn to fictitious payees, converting the funds to his own use.

8. Operating the offices of Comptroller of the Currency and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for the benefit of big bankers and big banks, forcing smaller banks out of business by sale of assets or merger into the largest banks, and preventing the merger of smaller banks which seek to compete with the larger banks.

9. Violating the law by permitting corporations to organize banks, using dummies as individual stockholders.

10. The Comptroller of the Currency, ever since his appointment as comptroller, has been drawing his full salary of $17,500 per year while at the same time time drawing a pension from the Federal Reserve System in excess of $12,800 a year.

We have every reason to believe that the foregoing charges hardly begin to scratch the surface.

We ask that you immediately designate a subcommittee to investigate all of these problems.

Sincerely yours,

ABRAHAM J. MULTER.

These matters are all of extreme importance and they should be inquired into without further delay.

Report to the People

OF

HON. FRANK. T. BOW

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, as the elected Representative of Ohio's 16th Congressional District, it is my duty once again to report to the people of Stark, Tuscarawas, and Wayne Counties on my activities in their behalf and in behalf of good government. With the close of another session of Congress, I want to thank the thousands of citizens who have sent me their views on the many important issues Congress has considered. Government is everybody's business and our system of government works best when every citizen takes an active interest in its operations, voting in each election and expressing his opinions to his representatives for their guidance and the guidance of the Republic. Sixteenth District citizens have demonstrated that they appreciate these facts.

This report calls attention to the complexity of our district as it is reflected in the work of the Congressman. We have the richest agricultural county in Ohio, the largest concentration of clay industries in America, one of the Nation's most important centers of diversified industry, splendid coal resources, one of the world's outstanding watershed conservation projects, and many other interests that bring us into daily contact with the operations of the Federal Government. Almost every Federal activity has an effect on our progress and prosperity and must be of interest to the 16th District Representative.

AGRICULTURE

Dairying is a primary factor in our farm income and therefore in the income of all 16th District residents. During the past 2 years I have worked with dairymen, their organizations and the Department of Agriculture to make adjustments in price formulas that have added some $3,500,000 to the income of area farmers. The latest such adjustment eliminated the seasonal reduction in the marketing order on a statewide basis, meaning $10 million to $14 million additional income this year for Ohio dairymen.

These accomplishments were of importance to city people, too. They helped to secure an ample supply of wholesome milk without the interruptions and violence experienced in some other regions. The increased farm income is reflected in the sales and salaries of the city people with whom the farmers do business.

My dairy self-help bill would permit dairy farmers to take over from the Government the entire milk-marketing program and operate it themselves. I also introduced legislation to permit the sale of Government feed grains to farmers, and fought for an amendment to remove controls on grain grown solely for use on the farm.

In late spring I introduced the President's soil-bank bill. Though delayed by partisan squabbles and finally enacted in modified form, this program has had a good effect in our district and Wayne County has an especially high record of participation. Farm prices have strengthened and farm income is on the upgrade.

SMALL BUSINESS

As a member of the Appropriations Subcommittee providing funds for the Small Business Administration, I have taken an active part in its work to strengthen the competitive position and financial stability of small business. In our district where diversified industry predominates, worthwhile and necessary loans have been made, considerable advice and counsel has been offered, and a number of Government contracts have been secured through the assistance of this new agency. Established at the request of President Eisenhower, it is the first permanent independent agency devoted solely to the interests of small business, the backbone of our free-enterprise system.

Under this program small business has enjoyed an increasing share of Government contracts and its competitive position relative to larger enterprises has steadily improved. This is reflected in a better profit outlook, a high rate of new business firms, and a relatively low rate of business failure.

Ohio is enjoying a remarkable expansion of business and industry, reflected in more jobs and better wages in our district as well as others.

POSTAL SERVICE

No Government agency is closer to the people than the post office, and I have made every effort to improve postal service in the 16th District. In addition to improvements in a great many post-office quarters, new buildings are completed or under way at Apple Creek, Doylestown, East Canton, and Navarre. Rittman is soon to have our first post office constructed under the 83d Congress lease-purchase law. Other places are under consideration.

Progress is being made also to provide city delivery wherever local conditions meet minimum requirements. City delivery has been established in Orrville and Navarre and is expected soon in East Canton. Doylestown is under consideration, and others are making preparations for this improvement.

Rural routes have been extended in a number of areas and many individuals have benefited.

AKRON-CANTON AIRPORT

Expansion and improvement of Akron-Canton airport has been a special concern. This spring we secured CAA approval of the first $400,000 Federal matching grant toward a $2,020,000 3-year program that will include a new terminal building and improvements to existing facilities. The Federal airport program authorizes CAA to provide about one-half the funds.

Military construction at Akron-Canton also was authorized this spring and will amount to almost $3 million in the next 2 fiscal years. A new hangar for Air National Guard use will be constructed, with supporting facilities. Other military contributions toward making Akron-Canton a first-rate air terminal are under consideration.

Efforts also are being made to improve service into Akron-Canton and New Philadelphia-Dover, both by the major scheduled airlines and by Lake Central, our local service carrier, the only employee-owned airline in the world. Lake Central is now seeking extension of its routes to connect our area with Buffalo, Erie, and Detroit.

My appropriations group also handles CAA and CAB funds, and I take a personal interest in these activities. I am working now to establish a Commission on Air Safety to provide a coordinated and comprehensive attack on this problem, and have introduced the necessary legislation. President Eisenhower has recognized the need for such work and has appointed a special consultant on aviation.

MUSKINGUM CONSERVANCY DISTRICT

The Muskingum Conservancy District, with headquarters in New Philadelphia, is receiving this year the final payment on the debt of the United States for properties acquired by the Corps of Engineers many years ago. I was able to overcome opposition to the appropriation of $425,000 for this purpose, thereby making it unnecessary to levy special assessments against the thousands of property owners against whom benefits assessments have not been made for many years. We are proud of the conservation accomplishments of the district, and it is a privilege as your Representative to be able to help so many who are affected by this appropriation.

BALANCED BUDGET

Three years of diligent effort on the part of the Appropriations Committee, cooperating with the administration, brought us this year a balanced budget. As a member of the committee, this has been my objective through the years and it is an accomplishment that holds promise of further reductions in taxes as well as continued stability in the cost of living. I think the achievement particularly noteworthy when we consider that it has been done despite a tax-reduction program in the 83d Congress that saved the Nation's taxpayers $7.4 billion. It shows what thrift and good management can do.

My own Subcommittees on Commerce, State, and Justice made total savings of $227 million this year, more than enough to pay all of the expenses of the Congress for over 18 months.

INDIVIDUAL PROBLEMS

Many hundreds of 16th District citizens have brought me their individual problems arising out of dealings with the Federal Government. Veterans, servicemen, and those on pensions make up the largest number. There are many immigration and passport problems with which I have been able to help. I have made it a point to give immediate attention to every such request, and have a staff of experts in such matters in my Washington office. My Canton office is open every weekday to receive such calls. Your Congressman is as close to you as your telephone whenever problems arise.

During the past Congress I have been able to help several individuals with personal problems that required legislation. Because she was more than 10 years old, little Mary Mancuso had to be left behind in Italy when Mr. and Mrs. Paul Torcasio, of Canton, adopted her two little brothers. She was able to rejoin the family in Canton by virtue of a special act of Congress which I introduced. The same 10-year-old age limit in the Refugee Relief Act made it impossible for Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lemmo, of Canton, and Mr. and Mrs. Bernardino Nasci, of Alliance, to bring their adopted daughters to this country. By virtue of special acts of Congress this spring, both little girls should be with their new families in Ohio soon. These humanitarian measures make a Congressman's work doubly rewarding.

Other bills have been sponsored to help groups of individuals who are in difficulty, such as farmers who are opposed to compulsory social security. I am pressing for action on my bill to make this insurance optional for farmers.

GENERAL LEGISLATION

Designation of the week of September 17 to 23 as Constitution Week was an act of Congress in which I had a part. For the past several years I have urged designation of September 17 as a national holiday in honor of the Constitution. Opposition to additional national holidays made this effort very difficult, but designation of the period as Constitution Week will serve to call attention to the document that makes our Republic the most successful association of free men in the history of the world.

I also sponsored the House resolution on treaty law which in its Senate version is known as the Bricker amendment.

During the past session I have made the status of forces agreement, giving jurisdiction over our servicemen to the nations where they are stationed, my principal interest in foreign affairs. My resolution to modify or denounce this treaty is winning support in every State in the Union, including the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Daughters of the American Revolution, and many other fine organizations.

VOTING RECORD

Any man who seeks office as a Representative in Congress is duty bound to remain on the job at all times to cast his vote in behalf of the people whom he represents. Occasionally official business in his district may cause him to miss a vote. I am glad to report that your Congressman missed only 4 votes this year for that reason, and that I have a record of voting on 96 percent of the rollcalls during my entire service here. Few can equal that record.

As a guide in legislative work, I have sent a congressional questionnaire to the residents of the district each year. The response is helpful, and I was glad to observe that on most issues the views of the majority who respond are the same as my own.

Following is my voting record on some of the major rollcall votes of the 84th Congress:

Alaska Tuberculosis Deaths Drop

OF

HON. E. L. BARTLETT

DELEGATE FROM ALASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, a dramatic chapter in American medical history has been written in Alaska in the last 10 years. Great strides have been made in conquering tuberculosis. It is still a dread disease in Alaska, a veritable plague and a killer; but the degree and rapidity with which it is being brought under control are almost miraculous.

Only the other day Dr. Charles R. Hayman, Acting Alaska Commissioner of Health, announced that deaths in Alaska from tuberculosis in 1955 dropped to a new low of 50.

On the other hand, new cases of the disease continue to be discovered at a high rate. The average was 80 a month with a total of 955 for the calendar year. In making this report Dr. Hayman emphasized that there may be many undiscovered cases.

The splendid progress which has been made is emphasized by the fact that in 1950 with a total population just over half what it was in 1955, total deaths from tuberculosis numbered 234. The death rate 6 years ago per 100,000 population was 181.9. Five years later it had been reduced to 43.3 per 100,000. Despite all the good work that has been done much remains to be accomplished because the death rate for Alaska is almost four times that in continental United States.

For the first time in history, a concerted effort to gain control over this devastating disease, which has made such terrible inroads in Alaska, was begun about 10 years ago. Then the Federal Government began to make appropriations for hospitals dedicated to the care of the tubercular. Then it was that the women of the Methodist Church took over some abandoned Army buildings at Seward and opened a sanatorium there which has had an instrumental role in the fight against tuberculosis. A fine, new hospital was constructed at Anchorage with 300 beds for the care of those ill with tuberculosis. Navy facilities on Japonski Island adjacent to Sitka were taken over by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, including a hospital building. There are other hospitals where beds are available for the care of those ill with this disease. Eleven years ago there was not a single hospital bed designed or used specifically for the treatment of Alaska's tuberculosis patients. Now there are close to a thousand available in Alaska and the States for Alaska patients.

The most dreadful ravages of tuberculosis are among the native population, the American citizens living in Alaska of Indian, Aleut, and Eskimo blood. They have been the hardest hit and they cannot be made healthy in a day. Indeed, it will be difficult if not impossible to effect complete control until their economic conditions and housing are improved.

However, the gains made have been so significant as to cause rejoicing among all concerned with the problem. The Federal Government through Congress and through the executive department has provided funds and personnel so sorely needed. The people of Alaska have played their part too through their legislature which has appropriated ever-increasing amounts to the Alaska department of health in the fight against tuberculosis. And the people of Alaska in their individual capacities, too, have worked hard and successfully.

The battle, for such it is, has included case finding, hospitalization and what is known as the ambulatory-chemotherapy program. This program, which is under the general control of the Arctic Research Health Center, is said to be remarkably effective and holds out great promise for the future.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the work which has been done by a devoted little group of women at the small Kuskokwim town of Aniak. Not too long ago I came into possession of the first annual report of the Aniak health council. Normally one would not expect a community as small as Aniak to create a health council which has functioned so splendidly as has this one. Mrs. Ernest Begin was president, Mrs. Norman Potoski was secretary, and Mrs. David Leach was secretary-treasurer for the period for which the report was made. As Mrs. Begin stated in opening the report:

You may wonder why a small group like the Aniak health center presumes to publish its activities and why this report is being mailed to you.

First, it gives us the opportunity of expressing our appreciation to the various official and lay organizations and individuals who have helped us during the past year. It records the council's activities, it accounts for the moneys raised and spent; it outlines plans for the coming year, and by the practical examples given throughout the report we hope that other Alaskan communities, similar to ours, will be encouraged to organize health councils.

For those of you who may not be familiar with the Kuskokwim area and for whom Aniak may be merely a pinpoint on the map, I would like to explain that our village is typical of hundreds of native villages throughout the Territory.

Our predominantly Eskimo population fluctuates between 300 and 400 during the year. Transportation of people is by dog team or plane since there are no roads. Supplies travel from Seattle by ocean freighter and river barge, making manufactured goods costly.

Aniak's economy and health level are roughly the same as those of scores of villages in the Kuskokwim and Yukon Deltas and in Bristol Bay, which is to say, it is poor.

We believe if Aniak can support a health council, other Alaska villages can do the same.

Aniak has no doctor or nurse. As the report states:

In the case of illness about the only thing that could be offered was aspirin and the hopeful assurance that the patient would be all right in a few days.

Then at the suggestion of Mrs. Wayne House, wife of the United States commissioner, a money collection was made. Two Eskimo children carried an old cigar box about the village asking for donations to buy medicines for the village people. Seventy-six dollars was thus raised. With that money a community medicine kit was purchased.

That was the inspiration for the Aniak Health Council. Seventeen people gathered at the first organized meeting. Sometimes in the meetings it was necessary to use an interpreter because some Aniak people are not skilled in English.

During the first 10 months of work 22 patients received emergency first-aid treatment for serious accidents or injuries. In serious cases the nearest physician, at Bethel, Alaska, gave advice by radio.

The report of the Aniak Health Council states in simple but eloquent words the situation regarding tuberculosis there:

TUBERCULOSIS IN ANIAK

Until recent years, there has been a hopelessness about tuberculosis in our village. Nobody knew for sure how many active cases existed, relatively few stood a chance of being hospitalized and TB attacked at will. TB was a scourge; born in poverty, bred in crowded, unsanitary homes and maturing right in the village.

In truth, many people never knew they had tuberculosis. There were vague symptoms, a lassitude often mistaken for laziness, occasionally chest pain, sometimes hemorrhage, but a lot of tuberculosis was lived with, and died from, without the formality of a diagnosis. The tragic consequence was that tuberculosis spread.

BACKGROUND NOTES

As near as we can determine, the first X-raying for tuberculosis in Aniak dates back to 1948. After that, there was a period of 6 years with no case-finding by X-ray until the winter of 1954, when Dr. Wendell Matthews, medical officer for the Civil Aeronautics Administration, made a field trip to Aniak for the purpose of checking and X-raying CAA families stationed here.

Dr. Matthews offered to X-ray people from the village, and despite the short notice and severe temperatures, 106 people were X-rayed in 1 day. Unfortunately, many people were out trapping and therefore were missed, but in July of the same year (1954), Dr Ferger and a technician made a 1-day field trip to Aniak and 135 X-rays were made. There still was no baseline survey for the whole village but the tuberculosis picture was beginning to fill in.

CHEMOTHERAPY

Earlier in this report, reference has been made to the daily radio schedules held by ANS hospital physicians and it was a chance interception of such a radio hour that brought information to the council that a new tuberculosis program was to be inaugurated.

Over a period of about a week, Dr. Ferger made the same announcement daily to all who might be listening to the effect that two new tuberculosis drugs were to be given to all known and suspected tuberculosis cases in the Kuskokwim villages. (Later the program was extended to other parts of the Territory.) ANS teachers and lay people in villages where no ANS personnel were stationed were requested to send in names of such cases to augment lists that were being compiled from hospital records.

It was explained that drug treatment at home was not intended to replace hospitalization but that chemotherapy, as it was called, was considered to be the best possible treatment for those who were forced to wait many months before hospital beds became available. The most important result of taking the drugs was said to be that there would be a decline in the TB bacilli produced by active cases. The byproduct of this would be that there would be less TB spread to members of patient's immediate family and close associates.

THE COUNCIL PARTICIPATES

The Aniak Health Council offered to participate in this program so that our village could receive the obvious benefits. Names of all known and suspected cases were submitted on preliminary forms and soon we received dosage sheets and a shipment of two different TB drugs. We agreed to be responsible for dispensing the medicines, for weighing the patients at certain intervals. We also supervised the mailing in of sputum specimens, watched the patients for adverse drug reactions and kept accurate, confidential records.

Later the program became more formalized, and today the ambulant chemotherapy program functions as a tri-agency program with the Alaska Department of Health, United States Public Health Service and the Alaska Native Service as participants. Each agency plays a certain part and at the end of the chain is the chemotherapy aid. In Aniak, this person is Mrs. Wayne House, who devotes many volunteer hours to this important work.

In January 1955, Aniak was visited by a full chemotherapy team composed of Dr. Kenneth Momeyer (USPHS), and Miss Marilyn Porter, supervising nurse. On loan from the Bethel ANS Hospital were Miss Jacqualine Firebaugh, staff nurse, and Mr. S. Crump, X-ray technician. Another X-ray survey was run, standard chemotherapy forms replaced the old, preliminary sheets, files were set up for each patient, home calls were made and several more cases added to the roster. Shortly thereafter free vitamins were supplied regularly to all those on chemotherapy.

One more X-ray survey was to follow when Dr. Matthews returned on his yearly field trip. By this time, the Aniak TB picture was complete. We have been told by workers from the chemotherapy program that Aniak is far from a hot-bed of tuberculosis, yet at this writing, 23 of our people are on chemotherapy, 9 Aniak people are in TB hospitals, and more are waiting for a bed to become available for them.

CONCLUSIONS

It is perhaps too early to evaluate the effectiveness of the chemotherapy program, and this is a matter for the professionals. On the local level, we who have worked with the TB picture, have seen great improvements in many cases. After being on drugs for a while, the people look better and they feel better. They are hopeful of shorter hospital stays and complete cures eventually.

We believe the chemotherapy program is coping with our village's most dangerous health problem, that of the tubercular person. After many years of stagnation as far as case-finding is concerned, this part of the TB program is receiving adequate attention in Aniak. We still have tubercular children of tubercular parents, but at least there is hope for their future.

With about 1,000 beds accommodating the most seriously ill, with Federal and Territorial agencies cooperating and with individual citizens such as the women of Aniak doing their part, there can be no doubt that tuberculosis, which once was a virtual death sentence for thousands of Alaskans, will in time be subdued and conquered.

Report to My Constituents on the 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. A. L. MILLER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, it has been my practice for the 14 years that I have been a Member of Congress to make a report near the end of each session to the people I represent. I want them to know how I voted and how

I view all public questions. This is their right and my responsibility.

NEWSPAPER AND RADIO REPORTS EACH WEEK

It is the duty of every Member of Congress to keep in close touch with the people he represents, to know their wishes, and to keep them informed. I have tried to do so this year, just as I have done in years past. I write a weekly news letter that goes to approximately 90 newspapers, 14 radio stations, and many individuals in the Fourth Congressional District of Nebraska. I tape a weekly radio program entitled "What's Happening in the Nation's Capital" that has been carried regularly over the years by all of the radio stations in the district, and I have made several television films which were carried by the stations that reach into western Nebraska during the past year. The newspapers and the radio and television stations have been kind enough to use these efforts as a public service. I deeply appreciate their help in bringing these reports to the people.

VISITS ALL 100 TOWNS

When the Congress is not in session I am out in the 38 counties of the district, talking with as many people as I can at county fairs, service clubs, church groups, farm meetings, and other gatherings of all kinds. Last year, just as I do in each off-election year, I held a government clinic in each of the 38 courthouses for the purpose of discussing problems of government with my constituents. The first hour of these 2-hour meetings is devoted to a Youth Wants To Know forum with high-school students. The second hour is given to the public at large. These meetings have been extremely helpful in discovering the problems that are bothering the people at home, and they enable me to better represent my district.

FIRM LEADERSHIP—THREE YEARS' PEACE

We are entering the fourth year of a world at peace, an era that began with the end of the Korean war in 1953 and that progresses day by day toward a more permanent, enduring, and solid structure for world conduct. The Communist world, Russia and nations under its domination or in its camp, has grown since 1939 from a population of 170,467,000 to 928,488,000, while the free-world population has declined from 2.23 billion in 1939 to 1.7 billion at present. In recent months we have seen substantial evidence that Russia is losing control over its subject nations; that resistance is developing just as it always has when the inherently free nature of the individual is made to yield to the will of a tyrannical master. Poland has signified that its resistance has progressed to an active stage. Russia's hold on the people of East Germany has become uneasy. More nations and more individuals are ready to seek means of lifting the Iron Curtain.

Our leadership has been firm. We have not jumped from crisis to crisis; instead, we have consistently demonstrated to the nations of the world our sincere desire for peace by positive and constructive acts and needs, insisting on the same course of conduct on the part of the Soviet Union. We have not accepted the new behavior in Russia as evidence of any significant change in attitude so long as the inspection program and disarmament proposals submitted by President Eisenhower go unheeded by the Kremlin.

This era of world peace, tense though it might be, has given us a prayerfully welcome respite from the slaughter and destruction of two major wars.

ADVOCATES FOR "GLOOM AND DOOM" WRONG—EMPLOYMENT HIGHEST; UNEMPLOYMENT LOW

The transition from war to peace has not brought about the depression predicted several years ago by some of the advocates of "gloom and doom." On the contrary, the Nation, industry, and labor enjoy the highest and best level of prosperity in our history.

There are more than 66 million Americans gainfully employed, and the number of people without jobs is reassuringly low. Individual income soared to more than $320 billion in the past year, with an average income per family of $5,520. Twenty-three million American families had incomes above $5,000, and because the Republican 83d Congress gave them a $7.4-billion income-tax cut, and because sound fiscal policies have stabilized the dollar, the average family is able to save and invest more than ever before.

The Government is also prosperous. The administration has successfully carried out one of its most important promises—to balance the budget. The Federal Government closed its books on June 30, 1956, with a credit balance of $1.74 billion. This is the second time in nearly 20 years the Treasury has been able to show a surplus on hand at the close of the fiscal year and for the first time in many years a payment on the national debt will be made.

GOOD FARM PROGRAM

There have been several notable changes in the law and governmental policies that relate to agriculture. Farmers, caught in the squeeze between falling commodity prices and rising costs, did not share in the general booming prosperity of other industry and labor. A number of factors contributed to this hardship. Tremendous stores of supported commodities, continued overproduction of surplus crops, and centralized drought conditions tended to reduce the farmer's gross income, while at the same time his net income has been shrunk by high operating costs.

Recognizing that the major ills of agriculture have been caused by an unwise and shortsighted program that induced market-depressing surplus crops, the Congress and the administration have developed legislation and policies that strike directly at these problems. The first part of this new program is the soil bank law, establishing an acreage reserve and a conservation reserve. Many hundreds of farmers, within a matter of days after the law went into effect, are now participating in the program and benefiting from it. To assist stock growers in drought areas, the administration is permitting the use of reserve acres for grazing purposes.

Realizing that the Government itself was contributing to the surplus crops by long established policies which permitted their production on millions of acres of public lands, President Eisenhower on May 21, 1956, issued an order putting an end to this practice. This order implements legislation which I introduced during this session of Congress.

The soil-bank law and the order restricting public land use effectively attack crop surpluses from the production end. Other legislation and other administrative actions deal with disposal and marketing problems. The administration is selling more and more agricultural commodities to foreign countries in exchange for their currency, under Public Law 480 of the 83d Congress, introduced by Congressman HARRISON, of Nebraska. More farm products are being consumed through an expanded school-lunch program, and still more are being channeled into a relief program for the needy of our country.

One of the most important provisions of the Agricultural Act of 1956 is the section establishing a Commission to prepare legislation dealing with further industrial use of grains and other farm crops. More than 1.5 billion bushels of grain that now goes into Government warehouses could be converted into industrial alcohol to be blended with gasoline or used in the production of butadiene, one of the components of synthetic rubber. We know that ingenious American scientists will discover other potentialties out of a wedding of industrial and agricultural processes. I was privileged to join with Nebraska's Senator CARL T. CURTIS in sponsoring this legislation.

These and other measures will in due time cure the problems that have been created by the Government's regulation of a normally free agriculture.

To help in bringing farm price back in line with operating costs, the President increased the support levels on most of the basic crops and Congress raised the parity prices on feed grains and dairy products. In recent months, hog prices have shown a strong recovery from last year's slump, and the cattle market has been firm, even though it has never recovered from the rollback ordered in 1952 by former President Truman.

When all of the political thunder that accompanied the veto of the first farm bill died away, the President and the American farmer emerged victorious with a constructive and forward-looking agricultural program. Farm prosperity is sure to follow.

NEBRASKA SHARES IN 41,000 MILES OF HIGHWAY

In one of the largest public works measures ever presented, Congress passed and the President signed a law authorizing a 13-year road-construction program. A 41,000-mile Federal interstate highway, to be constructed on a revenue basis from increased gas, fuel, rubber, and other related taxes, is the most significant part of this new legislation. Additional grants will be made to States and local subdivisions to construct and improve non-Federal primary and secondary highways. Total Federal cost of the program is pegged somewhere in the neighborhood of $35 billion.

SOCIAL SECURITY BROADENED AND MORE LIBERAL

Both Houses of the 84th Congress adopted extended and liberal social-security legislation. Following the example set by the House last year, the Senate recently passed the bill bringing practically all vocations and professions under social security, lowering the retirement age of women to 62, and making totally disabled persons eligible for benefits at age 50.

FARWELL-AINSWORTH IRRIGATION PROJECTS

Legislation I introduced in this Congress has cleared many of the necessary hurdles. Some of these bills have become law. For example, the Ainsworth irrigation unit was authorized for construction by the Department of the Interior when the bill I introduced was signed by President Eisenhower on May 18, 1956.

The bill authorizing construction of the Farwell project on the Middle Loup River has been passed by both Houses and will undoubtedly be signed by the President.

The Gering Valley flood-control project became a part of the Flood Control Act of 1956, with the splendid assistance of Senators ROMAN L. HRUSKA and CARL T. CURTIS.

Two bills I introduced for extending farm loans under the Bankhead-Jones Act were included with other provisions of the farm-credit bill passed by the House.

The bill I introduced to prohibit the production of surplus crops on Government-held lands was made a part of the President's order of May 21, 1956, and will take effect on or about August 18, 1956; while the bill establishing a Commission to draft legislation for industrial use of agricultural commodities became a part of the Agricultural Act of 1956.

Some progress has been made toward establishing a partnership between the Federal Government and the Nebraska Mid-State reclamation district, although it is still incumbent upon representatives of both groups to resolve important differences in the engineering and financial concept of this irrigation, reclamation, and power project.

Other legislation I introduced would have been passed, I am sure, if my political party were in control of the Congress. But with the opposition in charge, conscious of the approaching elections, a high priority has been given to Democrat-sponsored bills almost to the exclusion of all others.

SOUR NOTES ON POLITICAL CONGRESS

The Democratic-controlled 84th Congress has distinguished itself in two ways, neither of which is commendable. First, it has the distinction of being the most obstructionist Congress in recent history. Second, it has been the most political Congress in my memory.

These obstructionists tactics have been manifest in two major ways: First, Congress has refused to act on many bills that were a fundamental part of the President's legislative program; second, the administration bills that were acted upon were either amended so as to be unpalatable or rewritten beyond recognition. Many bad bills were prevented from becoming law only because the President had the courage to use his constitutional veto power.

This Congress has spent hundreds of hours and millions of tax dollars to prove that the Eisenhower administration and its top-level officials have been guilty of giving away the natural resources of America. Investigating committees have probed into mineral and timber transactions, atomic energy ventures, electrical power contracts and policies, reporting volubly that these investigations established the giveaway charge. However, no responsible or constructive action has resulted from these inquisitions, which many times have taken the form of ancient star-chamber proceedings.

Congress has the unquestioned right to investigate, and it is dutybound in many instances to do so. But this power is restricted to a legitimate legislative purpose, and the proceedings must at all times be governed by additional considerations of candor and fair play. I am afraid the committees have not kept these fundamental principles in mind. Instead, they have been driven by the desire to unearth, if possible, or manufacture if necessary, political issues upon which to base a political campaign that will elect or reelect members of their party.

Vote trading, back scratching, and logrolling have been all too prevalent in the Congress during the past year. This has been especially true in the field of reclamation and power legislation, where many worthwhile projects have failed to go forward because their sponsors did not yield to the pressure for other less meritorious projects. In one of the most shabby melodramas of congressional history, I was made the villain of a plot to kill the Fort Randall-Grand Island transmission line appropriation. Although I have supported 98 percent of the public power, reclamation and flood-control projects that have come before Congress in my 14 years—some 371 all told—I was branded as an enemy of public power, ostensibly because I had voted 5 years ago, when the Korean war was going badly and our budget was running some $14 billion behind, to trim all appropriations 5 percent. On that vindictive basis a public power project recommended by the Eisenhower administration was killed by members of the political party that holds itself out as the public power champion. I later learn, however, that I can redeem myself by supporting a package deal of 5 or 6 Federal power projects, which would cost more than $1 billion, and in return the proponents of this billion-dollar blackjack would support the $8 million Grand Island transmission line. Many other Congressmen have been given the same alternative, with their projects assuming form as the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow.

Politics has been inherent in the conduct of most functions of Government during election years, but the party in control of the Congress this year has surpassed in flagrance and disregard for orderly process any performance I have previously witnessed.

I plan to return to Nebraska just as soon as the Congress adjourns, and I am looking forward to meeting and talking with as many old and new friends in the Fourth District as time permits. I will attend many county fairs and group meetings. A report giving unbiased election facts shows only 5 Republicans who received over 70 percent of the vote in the general election of 1954. Thanks to many friends I was 1 of the 5. Believe me I will continue to do the best job I can.

Background Information on United States Citizens Released From UNESCO

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HUGH SCOTT

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I would like to insert the following statement containing background information on the seven cases of United States citizens released from UNESCO:

BACKGROUND INFORMATION ON THE SEVEN CASES OF UNITED STATES CITIZENS RELEASED FROM THE UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC, AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION

During the course of 1954 and first half of 1955, seven United States nationals employed by UNESCO were separated from the Organization. In all seven instances the employees had failed to appear for a hearing by the International Organizations Employees Loyalty Board of the United States Civil Service Commission. The Board subsequently advised UNESCO that on the record before it, there was reasonable doubt as to the loyalty of these people to the United States. Four of the employees had fixed-term contracts expiring at the end of 1954 or the beginning of 1955. The Director General allowed these contracts to expire. Three of the employees had indeterminate appointments. In these latter cases the Director General found that on the basis of all the facts, they did not possess the degree of integrity required of an international civil servant. Their appointments were therefore terminated.

Owing to the immunity of international organizations from suit, international employees cannot appeal to national courts when they consider that their contracts of employment have been breached. As a consequence, special tribunals have been set up to hear their cases. The specialized agencies of the U. N. located in Europe, as a matter of economy and convenience, use the long-established Administrative Tribunal of the International Labor Organization.

Exercising the rights under their terms of appointment, all seven United States nationals separated from UNESCO employment appealed their cases to the Administrative Tribunal of the International Labor Organization and asked to be reinstated or awarded damages. In all seven cases, the Administrative Tribunal of the International Labor Organization held that the Director General had acted illegally in separating the employees. If reinstatement was not possible, damages amounting to approximately $74,000 were ordered to be paid.

The Director General refused to reinstate any of the employees. In addition, he urged the Executive Board of UNESCO to challenge the ruling of the International Labor Organization tribunal in the four fixed-term contract cases. (In order to gain more support for this course of action, he did agree, however, on the grounds of hardship, to advance these four persons one-third of the amount allowed by the ILO Court, pending the final outcome of the challenge, provided they undertook to make full refund should the challenge prove successful.) The Executive Board of UNESCO, with strong United States support, agreed with the Director General that there were grounds warranting a challenge of the ruling of the tribunal by asking the International Court of Justice for an advisory opinion in accordance with the provisions of the tribunal statute. The final outcome in these four cases will not be known until the issues involved have been reviewed by the International Court of Justice. The past few months have been devoted by UNESCO to a careful and thorough preparation of briefs, which, along with those of the former employees, are being submitted for the actual oral hearings scheduled to take place in the near future.

In the three cases involving termination of indeterminate contracts, however, the Director General considered that on the record made before the tribunal, the grounds provided in the tribunal statute for an appeal to the International Court of Justice did not make it possible to challenge the tribunal ruling. While the United States member of the UNESCO Executive Board disagreed, the remainder of the Board considered that there were not adequate grounds on which to take the tribunal ruling to the International Court. Therefore, awards amounting to approximately $23,000 were authorized to be paid out of past savings of the Organization, since the Director General did not intend to reemploy the individuals.

Statement on the Area Vocational Technical School Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD J. THYE
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement by me on the area vocational technical school bill.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

My desire to cosponsor this bill stems from the experience and firsthand information about the need for an adequate supply of skilled workers when I was governor of Minnesota. The permissive legislation for area vocational technical schools in Minnesota was passed and approved while I was governor.

A study by the State commission on vocational and higher education, published in 1953, shows very clearly that we are falling short of trained workers for just the normal replacement of retiring personnel.

Although we have eight area vocational schools in Minnesota, we have waiting lists for enrollment in many of our trade classes, both in public and private vocational schools.

For example, Dunwoody Industrial School in Minneapolis has received applications for enrollment from 1,200 persons for the school year 1956–57. The facilities will accommodate only 400. This same situation is occurring in public area vocational schools. We are unable to supply the demand for skilled technicians needed for the new plant of Remington Rand and International Business Machines, who are now constructing new plants in Minnesota.

This bill, I am sure, would give needed impetus to the specialized training that is needed not only in Minnesota but throughout the country, and in turn would be a step forward in training technicians needed in this age of atomic energy and automation.

Swiss Independence Day

OF
HON. RICHARD E. LANKFORD
OF MARYLAND
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, August 1, 1956, represents the 665th anniversary of the founding of the modern Swiss Republic; more than 6½ centuries ago the Swiss people struck off the shackles of despotism and tyranny and began the long ascent toward governments in which the rule of people is supreme. The Swiss philosophy of democracy fired the revolutions against despotism in France, Italy, and elsewhere. It set the framework for constitutional democracy in the United States.

Today Switzerland's people, of German, French, and Italian ancestry, live, work, and prosper together, solving their problems in the open, democratic tradition.

Many of the world's modern humanitarian projects—such as the Red Cross and the World Health Organization—have originated and make their home in that country. Similarly, other agencies in the service of mankind have located there. For example, the League of Nations, the first world peace organization founded on the plans and ideals of Woodrow Wilson, made its headquarters in Switzerland.

Throughout America today we find the descendants of the hardy Swiss immigrants. One of their sons was Albert Gallatin who served as Secretary of the Treasury and represented the United States abroad on many diplomatic missions. He was an early and vigorous proponent of increased foreign trade for the United States.

Modern-day Switzerland is one of the most constructive forces in the promotion of world trade. Because she is poor in land resources, ores, metals, and other raw materials, Switzerland has concentrated on science, skill, and industry upon which to found one of the most vigorous trade economies in the world today. In this manner, Switzerland has become the world-acclaimed source for the highest quality watches, textiles, precision instruments, and other commodities. Relying totally on free competition in a free market, they have won an excellent market in the United States for their products. By so doing they have also enriched American export economy because the Swiss have invariably permitted the United States to acquire a surplus in our trade with that country. Today, after 20 years of Swiss-American reciprocal trade, a concept fathered by Cordell Hull, the United States has accumulated a trade profit in form of a surplus of more than one-half billion dollars.

Among those who benefit from trade with the Swiss are the tobacco farmers of southern Maryland whom I have the honor of representing in Congress. In fact the Swiss are the largest and the very best cash customer for high-grade Maryland export tobacco. That is why we are disturbed by the Republican administration's series of decisions which harassed Swiss-American trade by increasing tariffs on Swiss products, including watches and watch movements which constitute the lifeblood of Switzerland. I am pleased to note that the recent report by the Joint Economic Committee of the 84th Congress stated that these Republican trade restrictions represent an undue burden on consumers, on other industries, and on the trade of the free world. I hope every Member of Congress, as well as the President and the members of his administration, have an opportunity to read this report.

Letter to Chairman of the Platform Committee of Democratic Party

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. W. J. BRYAN DORN
OF SOUTH CAROLINA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. DORN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, in the extension of my remarks I wish to include a copy of a letter I wrote today to the Honorable JOHN W. MCCORMACK, chairman of the platform committee of the Democratic National Convention:

HON. JOHN W. MCCORMACK,
Chairman, Platform Committee,
Boston, Mass.

DEAR MR. MCCORMACK: The Democratic Party since the time of Thomas Jefferson has consistently fought for the welfare of the laboring people. Today many thousands of workers are being laid off and the working week of others curtailed because of an influx of Japanese textiles. Employees in the chemical, glassware, bicycle, tunafish, coal, and other industries are likewise threatened by excessively low tariffs and unfair trade practices.

The Democratic Party has traditionally been the party of free trade and low tariffs. We still are staunch advocates of world trade, but the Democratic Party has never advocated tariffs so low or trade practices that placed the American worker at an unfair advantage. The Democratic Party has taken the lead in improved working conditions and raising our standard of living.

I urge you with all the sincerity at my command to prevail upon the platform committee to adopt a plank against tariffs so low as to cause unemployment among American workers. I also urge your serious consideration of import quotas in those industries seriously affected. You represent in the Congress a great textile State. You are familiar with the disaster facing many American workers due to competition with low-wage countries. You have fought long and hard for many years to improve the lot of American labor. I have great confidence that you will make every effort in the platform committee to offer some hope to the American textile worker and other industries so affected.

With kindest personal regards and best wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

WM. JENNINGS BRYAN DORN,
Member of Congress.

We Should Settle Native Land Claims

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. E. L. BARTLETT
DELEGATE FROM ALASKA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, contrary to an impression that seems to be rather widely held, the decision of the Supreme Court made on February 7, 1955, in the so-called Tee-Hit-Ton case did not bring a judicial and final conclusion to the important matter of Alaska native land claims.

It is true that the majority of the Supreme Court in that decision narrowed the issues. Justice will not be served and there will not be full knowledge of land ownership in Alaska until another and concluding step is taken. This must be by congressional action. In an effort to achieve this, I introduced H. R. 11986 in the House of Representatives on June 27, 1956. It is my hope that the executive branch of Government and particularly those Departments chiefly concerned—Justice and Interior and Agriculture—will examine this proposed legislation carefully during the period of congressional adjournment so the bill may be considered should it be reintroduced, as I hope will be the case, early in the 85th Congress. It was not offered with the thought that it represented legislative perfection. Rather it was intended to serve as a guideline, as a point of departure.

As Mr. James Craig Peacock, Washington attorney who represented the Tee-Hit-Ton group before the Court of Claims and before the Supreme Court, said in explanatory notes prepared in connection with H. R. 11986, this bill may be considered as a modernized version, giving effect to the Tee-Hit-Ton decision, of the latest committee print on this bill which was before the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee of the 83d Congress. There is a dual need, as Mr. Peacock has pointed out. There is a need for the sake of the Indians and Eskimos and Aleuts and their white brethren in Alaska to settle those land claims. At the same time, there is a need to accord to the natives what the Supreme Court has called their moral deserts. It is correct to note that the Supreme Court found that native possessory rights cannot be maintained under the act of May 17, 1884, or the act of June 6, 1900. But, as the majority opinion went on to say:

> No case in this Court has ever held that taking of Indian title or use by Congress required compensation. The American people have compassion for the descendants of those Indians who were deprived of their homes and hunting grounds by the drive of civilization. They seek to have the Indians share the benefits of our society as citizens of this Nation. Generous provision has been willingly made to allow tribes to recover for wrongs, as a matter of grace, not because of legal liability.

And again:

> Every American schoolboy knows that the savage tribes of this continent were deprived of their ancestral ranges by force and that even when the Indians ceded millions of acres by treaty in return for blankets, food, and trinkets it was not a sale but the conquerors' will that deprived them of their land. The duty that rests on this Nation was adequately phrased by Mr. Justice Jackson in his concurrence, Mr. Justice Black joining, in Shoshone Indians v. United States, a case that differentiated "recognized" from "unrecognized" Indian title, and held the former only compensable.

Certainly the concluding paragraph of the Supreme Court's decision in the Tee-Hit-Ton case provides ample evidence that the conclusions of the Court are not to be interpreted as meaning that the native people of Alaska are to be foreclosed from seeking justice at other places:

> In the light of the history of Indian relations in this Nation, no other course would meet the problem of the growth of the United States except to make congressional contributions for Indian lands rather than to subject the Government to an obligation to pay the value when taken with interest to the date of payment. Our conclusion does not uphold harshness as against tenderness toward the Indians, but it leaves with Congress, where it belongs, the policy of Indian gratuities for the termination of Indian occupancy of Government-owned land rather than making compensation for its value a rigid constitutional principle.

Mr .Speaker, we have delayed too long in settlement of this issue. Our tardiness should weigh heavily upon our collective conscience. I sincerely hope that the 85th Congress will act.

President Eisenhower Should Have a Republican Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, in the closing days of Congress it has become more and more apparent that if President Eishenhower is to accomplish all that he expects, and is expected to do, he should have a Congress that is in full accord with his aims and purposes and willing to help.

There have been times when the President has had the help of the Democrats in Congress in some matters. However, more often he has not had their help and cooperation. In consequence of this, much that the President has desired to do has not been done at all, or, in such a manner that the compromise bore little resemblance to what the President had asked for. Thus, although the President had prescribed a worthwhile program to promote the welfare of all our people, he was unable to accomplish it in its entirety because his party—Republican—was not in the majority and consequently could not direct congressional action.

There are many who do not understand the necessity of a President having a Congress in control of his own party. Too often it is thought that the election of a President is all that is necessary. It would seem that many such people overlook the fact that the President has no power to put into effect the program upon which he conducted his candidacy. His program even though most worth while and desirable remains nothing more than a group of suggestions for legislation unless and until the Congress enacts them into law. It is only when this has been done that the proposed law comes before the President for his approval or disapproval. Thus, it can be readily seen that whether any such legislation is passed or not, or whether in satisfactory form to the President, depends upon whether the Congress is one that is willing to carry out the President's wishes. Hence the necessity for the President to have a Congress wherein his own party has control.

I have gone into this detailed explanation to show that President Eisenhower, if he is to accomplish all that is expected of him, should have a Congress that is in full accord with his viewpoint. To deny him such leaves him handicapped and makes highly uncertain his ability to fulfill in entirety his promises and the program he has advocated.

I am well aware that the people of this Nation have a high degree of confidence in President Eisenhower. They are certain of his high purpose and desire to be helpful to our people in every walk of life. They like what he has done. They are in favor of what he seeks to do, and they expect him to do it. But too often they overlook the fact that in the final analysis it is the Congress that must enact the legislation that will make effective the program of the President.

Why do I emphasize so strongly the importance of President Eisenhower having a Congress with a majority of his own party? First, because it is necessary if he is to accomplish all that is expected of him. And, second, because so many people who have confidence in him and desire his program of welfare think that all that is necessary is to elect him. This, of course, and as I have already pointed out, will not be sufficient. Anyone who believes in President Eisenhower and intends to support him should give him a Congress that will help him. It is not fair nor reasonable to elect him and then withhold from him a friendly Congress. To do so is only to handicap and prevent him from doing the very things for which he was elected.

Furthermore, in these uncertain times, when questions of great international importance are continually arising, there should be an assured unity of action between the President and the Congress. With such unity our position is strengthened in world affairs and without such, it can be greatly weakened. Thus, it is to our welfare, both from a domestic as well as a foreign standpoint, to have a President in full accord with the Congress and a Congress in full accord with the President. Our national welfare can best be promoted at this time by reelecting President Eisenhower and giving him a Republican Congress.

S. 4301, a Bill To Extend the Scope of Vocational Education

OF
HON. EARLE C. CLEMENTS
OF KENTUCKY
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement prepared by me on S. 4301, a bill to extend the scope of vocational education.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR EARLE C. CLEMENTS IN CONNECTION WITH S. 4301, A BILL TO EXTEND THE SCOPE OF VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

On April 26 of this year I introduced a bill, S. 3748, proposing that the Federal Government annually award college scholarships to 5,000 of our most deserving high-school students. The scholarships would be for the pursuit of courses at accredited institutions of higher education, leading to recognized degrees in science and engineering.

At the time of introduction of the scholarship bill, I stated some of the urgent reasons for enactment of it. I drew attention to our national shortage of engineers and scientists, and the gravity of Soviet competition in the production of scientific manpower. I set forth the need for Federal scholarships to be provided in the interest of our physical safety and economic security as a nation. I pointed out that establishment of such scholarships would be a measure to protect our national freedoms, and that these awards would be a sound investment in the future of our youth and in the welfare of our people.

Today I am pleased to associate myself with the distinguished senior Senator from Alabama and others in introducing a bill (S. 4301) which might be considered a complement to the Federal scholarship proposal. The bill which we introduced today proposes that the Federal Government promote the further development of vocational-technical education programs of less than college grade. While the development of legislation in this field at this late hour in this Congress will not enable action to be taken on it at this session its introduction will serve to illustrate the great need and will generate interest and support in order that when similar legislation is introduced at the convening of the Congress in January it will be favorably acted upon.

ORIGIN OF THE NEW BILL

This bill emanates from more than a year's study on the part of a number of persons associated with vocational training in the United States, among whom was James L. Patton, director, vocational education in Kentucky. These leaders in vocational education below college grade are aware of its present limitations and the need for its further development. They are competent to advise the Congress with respect to the Nation's needs and interests in this field. This bill is based upon an understanding of our national problems in vocational education and a desire to find the best answer to them.

PRESENT WEAKNESS IN OUR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION PROGRAM

Full study of our Federal-State system of vocational education below college grade has highlighted its most outstanding weakness, namely, that it does not reach enough of our people. In many rural areas, particularly, adequate vocational-technical training programs are not available.

Furthermore, the limitations of available funds do not allow the establishment of special training and retraining programs needed by older workers for their adjustment to new scientific and technological processes.

This bill is designed to remedy these weaknesses in vocational education in the United States.

WHAT THE BILL WOULD DO

The bill would encourage the States to establish area vocational schools and programs for the training and retraining of technicians and skilled workers in industry and agriculture. Through such schools and programs, the bill would also promote training in other occupations essential to the Nation's security and economy.

As defined in the bill, the term "area vocational schools and programs" means those "for youths not less than 16 years of age, and for adults," which are "operated by State or local authorities, or both, for a State or an area of a State designated and approved by the State board" for vocational education.

APPORTIONMENT OF FUNDS

To assist the States in developing area vocational schools and programs the bill would authorize appropriations by the Congress as follows: $5 million for fiscal 1957, $7.5 million for fiscal 1958, and $10 million for fiscal 1959, and such amounts thereafter as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the act. The funds would be apportioned to the States on the basis of the composite formula in the George-Barden Act (Vocational Education Act of 1946).

POLICY AND PRECEDENT

Enactment of this measure would be thoroughly consistent with established Federal policy and precedent.

Federal participation in vocational education in this country might be said to date from establishment of the Military Academy at West Point in 1802. This was established as a school for engineers. Federal-State cooperation in financing vocational education began with the Morrill Act of 1862, which led to establishment of our tremendously important land-grant colleges. Enactment of the Smith-Hughes Act of 1917 initiated Federal cooperation with the States in financing vocational education of less than college grade. This highly satisfactory system now operates under the provisions of the Smith-Hughes Act and the George-Barden Act of 1946.

The new program to promote area vocational schools would be administered by the same authorities as the present program. These authorities are the United States Office of Education at the national level and the State boards for vocational education at the State level. The State in each case would have full authority to designate and approve the area schools and programs.

There would be no opportunity for any Federal control over the schools and programs other than fiscal controls, to assure usage of the funds for the purpose intended by Congress.

MANY STATES ALREADY MAKING EFFORTS

In 30 of our States and Territories, State and/or local educational authorities are already operating area vocational schools. In at least 8 additional States, area vocational programs are in operation as units of State colleges or junior colleges. According to data compiled by the American Vocational Association, my own State, the Commonwealth of Kentucky, is one of those in which area vocational programs are most developed. There are 12 area vocational schools operating in Kentucky. These schools are very popular, but many of them are limited in their offerings. In Kentucky there are long waiting lists for admission to the area vocational schools and programs. Being relatively new in the educational system, these are handicapped in the competition for the educational dollar. The demands of the elementary and regular high schools usually receive priority.

By giving recognition to the national need for area vocational education, Federal promotion of such education would stimulate the States and localities to even greater efforts in this field so important to the national welfare.

FEDERAL RESPONSIBILITY IN VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Under the Constitution the Federal Government is responsible for the national defense and has a duty to promote the general welfare. Both the national defense and the general welfare are absolutely dependent upon the maintenance of adequate programs of vocational education throughout the country. The Federal Government therefore shares with the States and localities the responsibility for providing vocational training at all levels.

Throughout the history of the United States, many of our national leaders have emphasized the importance of education to the very maintenance of our form of government. Thomas Jefferson, for example, warned that: "If a nation expects to be ignorant and free, in a state of civilization, it expects what never was and never will be."

Alexander Hamilton expressed the view that the Constitution assigned the Federal Government responsibility for promoting education. George Washington advocated the fostering of education as an obligation of the Federal Government. John Quincy Adams urged Congress to promote education.

In reference to education, Abraham Lincoln said, "I view it as the most important subject we as a people can be engaged in."

The Congress has repeatedly recognized the Federal responsibility, particularly in the field of vocational education, by enacting specific legislation for its support and development. However, the Federal concern in this field has grown far greater because of the tense international situation.

This has been emphasized very recently by the Soviet Union's open challenge to a technological race with the West.

Our ultimate victory will depend upon the capacities of our whole people. Their abilities will in turn depend upon the amount and quality of their vocational training.

If the Federal Government neglects its share of the responsibility and fails to provide the States and localities sufficient support for vocational education we may not win the new kind of cold war with the Communist world to which I have just referred.

WHAT THE SOVIETS ARE DOING

Let us take a look at what the Soviets are already accomplishing in the educational field and consider how their activities may affect us. According to a study made by the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy in March 1956 entitled "Engineering and Scientific Manpower in the United States, Western Europe, and Soviet Russia," in 1951, Soviet universities and other institutions graduated 30,000 engineers with 5½ years of training including 3 years of close specialization. By 1954 they had increased this number to the startling total of 53,000 while at the same time our universities and colleges turned out only 22,329 engineering students. The following table carried in the report graphically illustrates the rate we may be falling behind the Soviet Union in providing our Nation with persons trained in technical fields:

Structure of graduating classes in the U. S. S. R. and in the United States

Field	U. S. S. R., 1954, graduations by field of study		United States, 1954, bachelors and 1st professional degrees by field of study

Dr. J. H. Hildebrand, president, American Chemical Society, described the Russians as taking more seriously than we here in the United States are taking the maxim that "knowledge is power." Dr. Hildebrand further warned "if we let them get ahead of us in education, the national disaster for us and our way of life is inevitable. Our hope lies in an enlightened people from whom we can obtain the essential leadership necessary to build the kind of world in which we want to live."

With respect to vocational and technical training of less than college grade, it is difficult to make comparisons between the Soviet Union and the United States because of the difference in the categories for reporting training programs. However, there has evidently been a tremendous expansion at the secondary- and post-high-school levels of vocational and technical training in the Soviet Union.

The March 1956 issue of Life magazine said that the Soviet Union is producing an elite generation of young scientists and engineers "enormously dangerous to the West, but so far little noticed by it." The article stated further that—

"At the recent Communist Party Congress in Moscow Premier Bulganin boasted that Russia already has an army of 5.5 million specialists, adding that it would have another 4 million by 1960. Then they will far outnumber those of the United States, which already suffers from a shortage of scientists" (p. 31).

The article stated that there are 3,796 "technicums" in Russia that graduate 70,000 technicians per year. These serve in positions between professional workers and skilled or semiskilled workers.

In the United States there is a great shortage of technicians, and there are very few institutions or programs to train them.

The Honorable William Benton, a former Member of this House, now editor of the Encyclopedia Britannica, visited Russia in 1955 to study the Soviet system. He has reported that:

"The Soviets are now challenging us frontally on what have historically been two of our strongest points—technology and mass education. The present rate of Russian education advance is faster than our own. Just as their growth-rate in industrial production surpasses ours. The gap in total performance is closing. It is closing rapidly."

In the May issue of the NEA Journal there is another illuminating article by Mr. Benton, the first paragraph of which reads as follows:

"A recent trip to the U. S. S. R. has convinced me that education has become a main theater of the cold war; that Russia's classrooms and libraries, her laboratories and teaching methods may threaten us more than her hydrogen bombs—the Communists from the earliest days gave up butter for guns, but they gave up meat for education."

The alarming revelations and the other facts I have set before you demand early enactment of a bill such as my colleagues and I are introducing today. It is an essential measure for the security and progress of the people of the United States.

Report to Constituents

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. ARTHUR G. KLEIN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial which appeared in Town and Village, a weekly newspaper which is published and distributed in the 19th Congressional District of New York which it has been my honor to represent:

(By Congressman ARTHUR G. KLEIN)

These are a Congressman's busiest weeks, the weeks before adjournment when legislative proposals that have been studied in committee and debated back and forth, come up for vote. All a busy legislator can do at this time for his scheduled column for Town and Village is to put down random notes and observations having a bearing on the political life of our country.

One of the more ugly revelations at this session was the attitude of detachment manifested in Government circles about the discrimination against American citizens of Jewish faith in international trade with the Arab countries and in the American personnel admitted to those countries. There is a long and glorious history of United States official condemnation of such practice in instances where other countries undertook to lay down the law to the American Government about distinctions between one citizen and another. In all previous cases, United States policy was clearly and unmistakenly one of indignation at such attempts to dominate American attitudes. It remained for this administration to accept the existence of such practices and to do so with the air of stiff detachment and aloofness. Fortunately this is by no means a closed issue. The American people will have an occasion to learn the facts increasingly from in and outside Congress and pass judgment on this yielding of American sovereign rights.

One of the more gratifying public developments recently was the formation of a group of American scholars known as the American Committee for the Study of War Documents. This concerns a subject which perhaps I was the first Congressman to take note of in the House.

Some time ago I learned that a vast amount of historic documentation which had been found and acquired by the United States occupying forces in Nazi Germany had been kept in Washington, had been made available only in small part for research, and—this is most important—was now in the process of being returned to the Federal German Republic. It was not clear just where the responsibility rested for the decision to return this material. At that time I brought the subject up in Congress in a statement in which I said:

"The German archives contain, no doubt, material that can shed a powerful light on the goals, methods, and processes of the Nazi conquest of one country, Germany; material about the unutterable plans for the destruction of what they called inferior people, first in their own land and then in neighboring countries. It no doubt sheds light on their Machiavellian propaganda techniques, including those by which they contemplated the division of our own country and the weakening of our material and moral strength to resist totalitarianism. Such material is of incalculable historical importance. It must not be jeopardized or lost to us by its casual return to a country where its nationalist forces may be disposed to destroy the full record or to conceal it forever from the scrutiny of the civilized world.

"This record must be kept and, in due course, be made available to American scholarship as the all-important source material by which we can learn from the dread recent past and be strengthened by that knowledge to deal with problems that we may well have to meet in the imminent or far future."

Fortunately, the officials seem to have recognized the stake that the American people have in this material and the value of conserving it by microfilm so that American and world scholarship could have full access to it.

The committee of historians is to be congratulated on its organization. They deserve every aid and encouragement to make it possible for them to carry out this important historical task.

With the political campaign well under way, it is interesting to note the sly action of the Republican national committee in putting forth the notion of Communist preference for a Democratic victory, while, at the same time, giving itself freedom to disown such a smear. A campaign very often gets into ugly impasses. This is one of the ugliest, and it is high time the American people rose up in its wrath to reject these shocking innuendoes against America's oldest political party and against the millions of Americans, probably the majority, who vote for its candidates.

There was a news items just recently reporting how gratified the Soviet leaders were at Eisenhower's decision to run, despite his health condition, because, according to the report, they felt that they could "do business with Eisenhower." I am sure that the Republican National Committee will not include this report in its documentation for the smear and poison that it is trying to inject into our political discussions.

One of the more wholesome things that followed the great Hoover Republican depression was the deflation of public figures so that their pontifications were not all taken as gospel truth. I remember back in the twenties when every successful industrialist was automatically endowed with wisdom in every aspect of life. The big tycoons spoke on American history, or on medicine, or on psychoanalysis—subjects utterly unknown to them—and received an awesome hearing. The depression deflated this, and it was realized that a man may be qualified to speak authoritatively on one subject and be a darn fool on others.

Now we have a recurrence of this situation: the emergence of "political doctors"—men who are qualified in the field of medicine and surgery and who set themselves up to judge as to the exacting demands of high political office. They are expected to know about the condition of an injured heart or an occluded intestine. That's understandable, but now they have gone further. They issue authoritative statements, as to the strain or lack of strain of political office. With the experience that America has had with such so-called experts, it will know how to take this new development with the big chunk of salt that is called for.

Whatever happened to the teamwork that was so highly touted in the last presidential campaign? The promise that there would be no confusion or misunderstanding and that all the members of the new administration would work as a team conscious of each other's actions, consistent with one another's policies? I raise this question whenever I read of a statement by the President, for instance, on the situation of the neutrals; and an opposite view expressed by his wandering Secretary of State. Is it possible that neither reads what the other says? And what happened to the famous pledge to maintain the highest ethical standards when we run across the Chotiner case; and when the head of the Department of Justice plays "footsy" with a commercial organization for whose television broadcast he reserves the announcement of a major bit of Federal action? What happened?

The campaign I gather is going to hear a great deal of gloating about the fact that the present administration has somehow maintained the high prosperity level that was developed by the policies of the New Deal and the Fair Deal.

Question: Prosperity for whom? For the farmers? They need only to be asked to reveal how great has been the drop in the farm income, on which so much of our national prosperity depends. The workers? You need only read the news items of the shortened working week, the layoffs, the drop in employment in the basic manufacturing industries. Small businesses? Here are some figures between 1952 and 1955: big business profits after taxes were up 45 percent, and big business return on investment were up 18 percent. Small business profits after taxes were down from 13 percent to 15 percent and investment return down from 16 percent to 41 percent. Dun & Bradstreet index on business failures since 1900 shows that, on the average, the failure rate has been nearly twice as high under the Republicans as under the Democrats.

Small business is becoming smaller and smaller and drastically affecting the general picture of the United States economy.

And so I ask, prosperity for whom?

When the Congress ends its session, I hope to prepare for the readers of T. & V. an extensive series of reports as to the legislation passed and the meaning of what has occurred in our Nation's Capital.

Problems of Small Business

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HOMER E. CAPEHART

OF INDIANA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a copy of my letter dated July 26, 1956, to Mr. George J. Burger, vice president, National Federation of Independent Business, and Mr. Burger's reply, dated July 27, 1956.

There being no objection, the letter and reply were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., July 26, 1956.

Mr. GEORGE J. BURGER,
Vice President, National Federation of Independent Business,
Washington Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR GEORGE: As you are aware, I have always shown a deep interest in the problems of small business. I first met you, I believe, about 10 years ago in my capacity as a member of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee which was considering a bill to prohibit tire manufacturers from owning and operating retail stores. The bill had been pending before Congress for several years.

I supported this bill and it was I who made the motion that it be reported out of the committee favorably. This was not done at that time though it was subsequently reported.

I cosponsored legislation, sought by the independent bankers of the Nation, commonly known as the Bank Holding Act which is now law. It was largely the result of my activity that the Senate, on July 1, 1955, made a continuing committee of the Senate Small Business Committee which is ready at all times to consider small-business problems. Also, I was active in the establishment of an independent agency in the Government known as the Small Business Administration to give aid to small businesses.

In view of this, I would appreciate your letting me know what further action Congress should take. You may rest assured that I will give close attention to whatever recommendations you may have.

Sincerely,

HOMER E. CAPEHART.

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF INDEPENDENT BUSINESS,
Washington, D. C., July 27, 1956.

Hon. HOMER CAPEHART,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Thank you for your letter of the 26th expressing your desire to get our opinion on further actions that can be taken by the Congress as an aid to small business of this Nation, in addition to those which you mentioned specifically in your letter to me.

Senator, we value this request very highly as being of considerable importance because of your seniority in the Senate, and because of our previous knowledge of your interest in the problems of small business. I am glad to have the opportunity to give you our overall opinions, which I know are the opinions of the membership of the National Federation of Independent Business, all independent business and professional men, and all voting members.

I believe the total membership will disclose the federation to be the largest business organization of its kind in the Nation, numbering approximately 102,000 members.

Any position we take is on direct nationwide instruction of our members, and no officer or group of officers can speak or act officially for the federation until they receive the instructions from the membership.

We were vitally interested in the action of the President in setting up a special Cabinet Committee to study the problems of small business. This gave me a splendid opportunity to confer with the Chairman of that Committee, Dr. Arthur Burns, and some of his staff at the White House Annex on July 5, 1956.

I think it's necessary, Senator, to give you the substance of the views we expressed at that important conference, and I believe the subject matters discussed at that time with Chairman Burns and his staff, as outlined below, will give you the answer to your request on what further action can be taken by the Congress as a help to small business.

ANTITRUST

We know from practical experience of owning and operating an independent business establishment that the key to success or failure of a small-business enterprise, whether at the production or distribution level, rests largely in the enforcement of these major laws to protect the free-enterprise system.

We believe there is need for strengthening amendments to these laws, such as is proposed in the present Congress, which will curb deliberate and continual violations of antitrust laws. We find that fines are no deterrent.

It doesn't make much difference how efficient small business may be, or how well financed they may be. If these laws are ignored, or there is weakness in the enforcement, it then means certain destruction to small business of this Nation.

As a help, also, in this direction, the local United States Government attorneys should be utilized in detecting violations at the local level.

To bring about impartial, sincere, and vigorous enforcement of the antitrust laws, it is our belief that the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice should receive increased appropriations, earmarked for antitrust enforcement. Through this competent personnel would be attracted, which would result in the Department continuously being staffed with well-informed personnel having full knowledge of our economic situation.

The procedure in the Federal Trade Commission should be reviewed, and the agency should confine itself to major economic cases or questions before the Commission so that relief could be secured at the local level for small business through the free-enterprise system. This agency, too, should receive increased appropriations which would attract competent personnel having full knowledge of our economic situation.

CONGRESSIONAL SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEES

During their existence these past 15 years, they have proved invaluable to the future welfare of small business. It can be said without fear of contradiction that through the creation of these committees by the Congress many of the Government agencies, for the first time, took the proper steps in creating departments within the agencies on small-business problems.

We believe these committees should be strengthened by giving them full standing committee status, with full legislative authority.

SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

We have closely observed the operation of this agency. It has made progress in aiding small business. It can make greater progress providing the agency is made a permanent agency of the Government, and the full control rests in the hands of the Administrator, subject to review by the Congress.

It is our belief that the agency should exercise its right in going in and taking prime contracts and subletting them to small-business institutions. We make this recommendation in view of the fact the following report appeared in the Senate Small Business Committee newsletter of June 30, 1956:

"Small business' share of defense contracts dropped to new low point in 9-month period ending March 30. Report released by Department of Defense shows small business has received only 19.7 percent of the dollars spent by Defense thus far in fiscal 1956. In fiscal 1955 small business got 21.5 percent of the dollar value of all prime contracts awarded to business firms for work in the United States. In fiscal 1954 the small business share was 25.3 percent."

TAXES

Some definite recommendation should be made by the committee that immediate steps be taken by the Congress in enacting legislation which will permit small business to set up necessary reserves so that they may be able to have funds available to take care of their business requirements during normal or lull periods in our economy.

Such legislation has already been introduced in the present Congress and this could be used as a pattern in bringing about this due recognition for tax relief for small business.

GOVERNMENT IN BUSINESS

It is our belief that proper steps should be taken for the Government to cease its operations in those fields where it works a tremendous disadvantage to small business.

We believe that the armed services should carefully scrutinize the operations of the Government ships stores and post exchanges, and determine whether under present mass distribution of products such branches of the Government during peacetime are a necessary adjunct of the Government.

TARIFFS

It is well to realize that reciprocal trade with other nations must continue, but this should be carefully scrutinized as to each and every arrangement so that it doesn't work a hardship on our domestic economy.

Many large corporations in the Nation are operated on an international basis so they gain no matter which way the regulation is put into effect, but, on the other hand, reciprocal trade might result in destruction, or an unfair competitive condition for all types of businesses in our Nation's economy, other than the international corporations.

GOVERNMENT FORMS

We realize that, in some instances, the numerous forms now required by Government law for businesses of all descriptions to complete sometimes give invaluable information to the Government, but at the same time recognition must be given to the fact that, in many instances, small business establishments are unable to fulfill the requirements of completing such a maze of forms. It requires outside help, which adds greater expense to the small business operation, or places an undue hardship on the owner of a small business establishment should he attempt to complete the forms himself.

LABOR

On behalf of our members we have repeatedly urged, in our appearances before the platform committees of both political parties, in 1948 and 1952, that labor be brought in under the full provisions of the antitrust laws. This must not be misunderstood as being antagonistic to organized labor because such is not the case, but we do believe, with the increasing concentration in labor leadership, it is necessary today that they be brought in under the antitrust laws, which, in itself, could even be a help to the constructively organized labor movement.

On this subject matter, we also think that the Wage and Hour Law Division of the Department of Labor could stand some reviewing in its enforcement of the wage-and-hour law as it applies to small business.

We live with this situation daily in our contacts with our nationwide membership. Small business is not asking for any preferential treatment, but we do believe there is necessity for fair and equal administration of the labor laws.

At the conclusion of my conference with the President's Cabinet Committee Chairman and his staff, I advised them that these were the major subjects for consideration during the conference, and that we trust appropriate action will be taken by that committee in reporting out recommendations along the lines of the above outlined subjects.

Because of the importance of this communication, Senator, it is my hope that you will make the contents of this letter a matter of public information through insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Such action will be invaluable to the overall future interests of small business of this Nation.

With very high regards,

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE J. BURGER,
Vice President.

Peace, Prosperity, and Progress Do Not Change Horses in the Middle of the Stream—Let Good Enough Alone

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, if asked to describe in a few words the achievements of the present Republican administration it could be done in three words—peace, prosperity, and progress.

These words without any further elaboration clearly set forth the present-day conditions that are acknowledged by our people and accepted with general satisfaction and approval.

To fully understand the real reason that exists for this general satisfaction upon the part of our people, we need only compare conditions of today with those that existed when the present administration, under President Eisenhower, took over.

At that time we were still at war in Korea, our boys were being killed, wounded, and maimed on the battlefield. The prosperity, so called, that we had at that time was based upon war conditions. It was therefore neither sound prosperity nor the kind of prosperity that our people could enjoy, as it was founded upon the blood of our boys being shed on the battlefield. Thus, there was no peace, no real prosperity, and progress in promoting the real welfare of our people was at a standstill.

Today the scene is changed. The war is over. No longer are our boys being killed and wounded on Korean battlefields. No longer is our prosperity founded upon war. Instead we have prosperity and progress based upon peace. What could be finer? What could provide more genuine satisfaction to the fathers and mothers of our land? It is not strange that our people, regardless of political affiliation, express approval of the results attained under the present Republican administration.

It is accomplishments such as these that rise above and beyond partisan politics. The heart and soul of America is for peace. The desire for peace dwells deep in the heart of every one of our people whether they be Republican or Democrat. Thus, as peace is the basic desire of all our people, regardless of political affiliation, and prosperity and progress the desirable end of all our national efforts, it is not difficult to understand why there is such general satisfaction upon the part of our people with present conditions wherein peace, prosperity, and progress stand out with such preeminence.

What do we desire for the future? Could there be any better objective than "Let well enough alone" or "Don't change horses in the middle of the stream"?

We have peace. Notwithstanding the troubled state of the world, arising from numerous and varied questions, creating problems that are new each day and causing deep concern, yet the fact remains we are at peace and our boys are not being called upon to die on foreign battlefields.

We have prosperity. Today, as a people, we enjoy a degree of prosperity that exceeds that of the people of any other country in all the world. Our employment exceeds the fabulous figures of 65 million workers. Our national production in value reaches toward $400 billion. All of this has enabled us to enjoy a standard of living that exceeds any other period in our Nation's history.

Is it any wonder that thoughtful citizens should be more favorably impressed with these conditions that are the result of policies tried and not found wanting, and more willing to continue them, than to embark upon a sea of untried, uncertain, and questionable policies that could or would, in whole or in part, hamper or curtail the satisfactory conditions that now exist? It is fortunate that here in America, above and beyond the shouting and the turmoil of designing individuals who seek personal advantage by the advocacy of uncertain policies of government, there is a deep-rooted and well-founded commonsense inherent in our people that finds expression in that well-known adage, "Let well enough alone"?

Peace, prosperity, and progress are the important issues that confront our people today. Politicians can raise their voices to the highest pitch in advocating other issues, but the people will undoubtedly, and as they should in their own best interest, continue to give favorable consideration to these fundamental issues: Peace, prosperity, and progress. Of course, there are varying problems that must be met and solved as we deal with these larger issues. Agriculture and labor have problems to be solved. Our people yearn for additional tax reduction, aid for schools, increased health facilities, and so forth, and so on. Much has already been done with reference to these, but there is more to be done with respect to them and otherwise. These are important and must have consideration, but careful consideration leaves no doubt that what we can do with these other problems depends in large measure upon whether peace and prosperity shall continue. We have these now, and the progress that follows. Therefore, is it not wise to "let well enough alone"?

President Eisenhower is entitled to have the support of our people in his desire to continue the fulfillment of these basic principles: Peace, prosperity, and progress, and a Congress pledged to support and assist him in his great endeavor.

May God's blessing continue to be and remain with us as a people, that not only peace, prosperity, and progress shall be our portion, but that righteousness, truth, and morality shall ever be present, and a dominating influence in our land.

Justice Department's Withholding of Information on A. T. & T. Settlement Scored

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. EMANUEL CELLER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and of its Antitrust Subcommittee, I wish to state that the Attorney General's office has refused to supply the Antitrust Subcommittee with any information from the Department of Justice files concerning the circumstances surrounding the settlement of the Government's antitrust case against the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and its subsidary, the Western Electric Co.

The Attorney General's refusal to supply the Antitrust Subcommittee with any information from the Department files concerning settlement of this case is predicated on an asserted need to withhold information concerning A. T. & T. and Western Electric operations obtained in the course of consent decree negotiations, and secondly, on a claim of alleged Presidential privilege to deny to the Congress communications passing between employees of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

At the outset, and by way of contrast, I note that the alleged Presidential privilege which is sought to be invoked did not deter members of the administration from making available apparently without restriction, to a friendly newspaper correspondent, numerous highly confidential minutes of Cabinet meetings, as well as other documents of a confidential nature.

It is strange indeed that the Attorney General would cavalierly deny a request of an appropriate committee of the Congress, seeking access to records necessary to make a determination as to the propriety of the A. T. & T. decree, while at the same time the White House freely supplies confidential information to a journalist who is neither elected nor appointed to any office.

On the one hand, the Attorney General invokes the principle of executive privilege to deny the legitimate requests of a duly constituted committee of the Congress; while on the other hand, there is an unprecedented dumping of confidential files by the administration for the whole world to read. This mocks the efforts of the Congress to keep itself informed of the processes of government.

Beyond that, I note that the Attorney General is seeking to withhold not only documents obtained in the course of consent-decree negotiations and memorandums passing between employees of the Antitrust Division, but documents in other categories as well. No reason is even assigned for refusal to make available for committee examination correspondence between the Attorney General and heads of other executive agencies relating to the settlement of this case.

Careful analysis of the A. T. & T. decree indicates its deficiency in many major respects. The only effective relief in this case against the allegedly unlawful monopoly of A. T. & T. would be a separation of A. T. & T. and Western Electric. Yet under the decree, the corporate structure of A. T. & T. and Western Electric was not disturbed. In fact, it is fused even closer together and the manufacturing and telephone monopoly is still concentrated in the same hands. This is in direct contrast to the Attorney General's assertions that the A. T. & T.-Western Electric monopoly has been dissipated by the decree.

The settlement, in short, fails to accomplish the principal objective of the Goverment when it filed suit 7 years ago, namely, the separation of A. T. & T. and Western Electric. Furthermore, Department consent to the settlement undoubtedly will prejudice future administrations in any subsequent efforts to mitigate the effects of the A. T. & T. monopoly.

Against this background and in light of the circumstances surrounding the settlement and the terms of the consent degree, congressional examination is essential to determine, among other things, whether A. T. & T. and its subsidiary, Western Electric, were given preferential treatment in this case by the Department of Justice.

The text of the letter I wrote to the Attorney General and the answer received from the Department of Justice in reply follow:

MAY 29, 1956.

The honorable the ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: The House Judiciary Antitrust Subcommittee has examined and analyzed the consent decree entered into on January 24, 1956, in the antitrust case of United States v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., et al. The subcommittee's study indicates that further and more detailed inquiry into all the circumstances surrounding the settlement of this case is appropriate.

Accordingly, it is requested that you make available for examination by the subcommittee all files in the Department of Justice relating to the negotiations for, and signing of, a consent decree in this case.

Sincerely yours,

EMANUEL CELLER,
Chairman.

UNITED STATES
DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, OFFICE OF THE
DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., July 13, 1956.

Hon. EMANUEL CELLER,
Chairman, Antitrust Subcommittee,
Committee on the Judiciary,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN CELLER: I have your letter to the Attorney General, dated May 29, 1956, requesting that we "make available for examination by the subcommittee all files in the Department of Justice relating to the negotiations for, and signing of, a consent degree in, United States v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., et al."

The staff of the Antitrust Division has examined in detail this Department's files relating to the negotiations and formulation of that decree. The bulk of these documents fall in two categories: first, material submitted by defendants regarding their operations; and, second, memoranda by various members of the Antitrust Division concerning negotiation conferences as well as decree provisions.

Documents relating to defendants' operations, I emphasize, were produced, not pursuant to interrogatories or court order, but rather in the course of good-faith negotiation of a consent settlement. Some touched on confidential aspects of the defendants' operations. Were they made available to your subcommittee, this Department would violate the confidential nature of settlement negotiations and, in the process, discourage defendants, present and future, from entering into such negotiations.

In any event, as I wrote you over a year ago, on May 6, 1955, Department policy does not permit disclosure of staff memoranda or recommendations. As I indicated, the decision whether or not to settle, and if so on what terms, may involve difficult judgments. Reaching these judgments, I am sure you appreciate that men equally devoted to vigorous antitrust enforcement may well differ. To enable intelligent final decision, therefore, full and open discussion is required frequently, not only by all members of the staff but also by the staff with the Assistant Attorney General. This process of interchange may endure over some time. And, as a result of discussion, any participant must feel free to alter his views as the merits of argument dictate. This essential process of full and flexible exchange might be seriously endangered were staff members hampered by the knowledge they might at some later date be forced to explain before Congress intermediate positions taken. The responsibility for explaining such decisions thus rests upon the Assistant Attorney General and ultimately upon the Attorney General.

As the President of the United States directed in a like instance:

"Because it is essential to efficient and effective administration that employees of the executive branch be in a position to be completely candid in advising with each other on official matters, and because it is not in the public interest that any of their conversations or communications, or any documents or reproductions, concerning such advice be disclosed, you will instruct employees of your Department that in all of their appearances before [congressional committees] * * * not to testify to any such conversations or communications or to produce any such documents or reproductions. This principle must be maintained regardless of who would be benefited by such disclosures."

The danger of abandoning that policy in the case of a law enforcement agency seems clear. Revealing staff disagreement on issues might well cramp effective enforcement.

With this in mind, this Department cannot grant your request to examine our files relating to the decree in United States v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., et al.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM P. ROGERS,
Deputy Attorney General.

Reports Which Should Not Be Made

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. E. L. BARTLETT
DELEGATE FROM ALASKA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, on July 20 last the distinguished minority leader of the United States Senate, Senator KNOWLAND, of California, expressed to the Senate his amazement and concern that the United States under the United Nations Charter is required to furnish regular reports to the United Nations concerning Alaska and Hawaii. Under article 73, chapter XI, of the charter, it is held that Alaska and Hawaii are nonself-governing Territories. That is certainly true. But it is likewise true that they are incorporated, organized Territories of the United States and as such are constitutionally part of the Union.

I was delighted to learn that Senator KNOWLAND took such an emphatic position in seeking to bring to an end the furnishing of these reports. I trust his efforts will be successful. It must be sadly admitted, however, that earlier attempts in this same direction failed completely. To the best of my knowledge, it was Senator ARTHUR V. WATKINS, of Utah, who in the early winter of 1953 first called upon the Secretary of State to discontinue without delay such reporting. For my part, I followed in the next few days with a letter to the Secretary of State endorsing Senator WATKINS' recommendation. The letter which was directed to Senator WATKINS by Assistant Secretary of State Thruston B. Morton and copy of which was furnished me by the Department of State was about as unresponsive a communication as I have ever had come to my attention. The State Department wrote to Senator WATKINS in these words:

MY DEAR SENATOR WATKINS: The Department has noted with great interest the points which you raise in your letter of February 10, 1953, concerning reporting by the United States to the United Nations on Territories under the administration of this Government.

The Department was glad to learn that you favor the decision recently communicated to the United Nations that, in view of the self-governing status within the Federal Union attained by the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico under the constitution of July 25, 1952, it is no longer appropriate or necessary to provide information on Puerto Rico under the provisions of chapter XI of the Charter of the United Nations.

With regard to Alaska and Hawaii, the ultimate status to be attained within the American Federal system is evidently statehood. The Department of State has always considered that, with the attainment of statehood for these Territories, a full measure of self-government in the language of chapter XI of the United Nations Charter will have been obviously achieved and there will be no question of further reporting to the United Nations. In this connection, it is noted that statehood for Hawaii is among the measures urged by President Eisenhower in his state of the Union message and ranks high on the legislative program of the current session of the Congress. It is also noted that bills have again been introduced proposing statehood for Alaska.

There is no question, as you point out in your letter, that Hawaii and Alaska, as incorporated Territories, are integral parts of the United States. The charter, however, makes no distinction between incorporated and unincorporated territories and calls for the transmission of economic, social, and educational information for territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government.

In 1946, on purely pragmatic grounds, the United States considered that a broad interpretation of this charter obligation would not only cause no disadvantage but would encourage other members of the United Nations to transmit information on their territories on a similarly broad basis, and thus assist in rendering the charter effective in this important sphere. The decision to report to the United Nations on Hawaii and Alaska has remained unchanged in the absence of any modification since 1946 in the constitutional position and status of these Territories which would lead the United States to cease reporting. The United States, it may be added, has actually received much favorable comment for the excellent administration of its Territories.

The Department is constantly reexamining the question of reporting to the United Nations on United States Territories, and your suggestion regarding Hawaii and Alaska will be given further study in connection with this periodic review. A change in status in either case would, of course, bring your suggestion into immediate effect.

I replied on February 21 as follows:

Thank you for your letter of February 20 with which you were good enough to send me a copy of the letter addressed to Senator WATKINS under date of February 19. Both these communications have to do with reporting by the United States to the United Nations in respect to the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii.

Since you have been in office such a short time that naturally you have not had opportunity to look into matters such as this and also because as a former Member of Congress you must have had your hackles rise upon receiving departmental letters whose weight is based only on wordage and not logic, please allow me to record a personal belief that the letter sent Senator WATKINS is gobbledygook in its most elevated form.

I was particularly taken by the phrase that the United States in 1946 "on purely pragmatic grounds" decided to report to the United Nations on these Territories which are integral parts of the United States. Purely pragmatic grounds is wonderful. Perhaps it would be just as well, though, for the United States to look at this realistically and become unpragmatic. Whoever was the actual author of the letter sent to Senator WATKINS inserted by way of added dividend "The United States, it may be added, has actually received much favorable comment for the excellent administration of its Territories." May I call upon you to supply by chapter and verse the notation of such favorable comment. This would be most interesting. Actually, I would be much more content if the Department of State under the new administration were to cease furnishing to the United Nations precise statistical information which might be useful to Soviet Russia, a nation which naturally is most interested in everything that goes on in the Territory so close to its own Siberia. Better yet, grant us statehood and there would be no question about any of this.

Mr. Speaker, it is not only improper that Territories which, as Senator WATKINS pointed out, have been brought into the Union should be reported on to the United Nations but there are certain inherent dangers in doing so. There is always the possibility that information might be furnished in connection with these highly strategic areas that would be useful to a potential enemy. Alaska is one of the principal bastions of the United States. We do not tell our own people much about what is going on there regarding defense. Why, then, do we report to the United Nations? This practice should be stopped without delay. I am grateful to Senators WATKINS and KNOWLAND for their help.

The Legislative Record of the 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN W. McCORMACK
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the 84th Democratic-controlled Congress has been one of the most constructive Congresses in the history of our country. It has enacted into law more public and private measures than has been done by any Congress for many, many years. Among the public laws have been many of great importance to the people of our country.

I desire to compliment Members of both sides of the aisle for their industrious and devoted attention to duty, both in committee and in the House during this Congress. For Speaker RAYBURN and myself, I wish to express our thanks for the courtesies and the understanding cooperativeness shown us, and without excluding others, in particular, the minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

The 84th Congress has been a responsible Congress during which very constructive legislation has been enacted. A Republican Congress, not long past, may have raised fears in the American minds that our system does not work well when the executive and legislative branches are not controlled by the same political party. The 84th Congress, under Democratic leadership, has dispelled such fears so far as Democratic control of the Congress is concerned. This Democratic Congress accepted the responsibility decreed it by the American voters in 1954, and has not broken faith with the voters. In the 1954 election, President Eisenhower, during the campaign, tried to throw fear into the minds of the American people that the election of a Democratic Congress with a President who is Republican would result in a cold war. The deeds of the 84th Congress have shown very clearly that President Eisenhower was in error when he made that statement.

This Congress has received the recommendations of the President of the United States in good faith. It has given thorough and careful consideration to such recommendations and, in so doing, has put national interest above partisan concern. In many cases the recommendations were passed substantially as recommended; in others they were improved upon prior to passage; in still others they were not acted upon because they were not for the best interest of the people. The guidepost of the 84th Democratic-controlled Congress was always, How do these recommendations fit the need of this great country of ours?

The record clearly shows the Democratic Party's selfless indifference to partisan advantage in our dedicated efforts to achieve major objectives. Once again we have substantiated our claim that we are the party of the people. While some members of the minority party have worked just as industriously and diligently as we Democrats to achieve the great record made by this Congress, the major credit lies with the Democratic Members.

Mr. Speaker, there is a very simple reason for this unusual situation which finds the President of the United States largely dependent upon support from the opposite political party than his own in order to obtain the progress and development of his program. In connection with this, it must be borne in mind that the President has embraced many of the basic policies and much of the philosophy of the Democratic Party.

We stood with the President in all matters which we felt were in the public interest. We fought him on issues which were designed to channel ever more of the common man's purchasing power into the coffers of special interest groups. The accomplishments of the 84th Congress clearly show that the Democratic Party was not a party of blind opposition but assumed its role under constitutional government of constructively supporting, of constructively proposing, of constructively criticizing, and of constructively opposing. When we compare this affirmative attitude of the Democratic Party with the blind opposition of the Republican Party under Democratic Presidents, the Democratic Party gains greater stature in the minds of the people.

Mr. Speaker, we are proud of our record of taking specific and tangible action when the welfare of any segment of our people, large or small, is threatened. We do not condition our policy upon whether or not it is good for General Motors. Nor do we proclaim to the people in distressed areas that the right to suffer is one of the joys of a free economy. The record clearly shows that the Democratic Party is primarily concerned with the interest and welfare of our people. Under Democratic leadership, people will not, because of economic conditions, be expected to scrounge for survival.

From a statistical standpoint the 84th Congress has been extremely active in comparison with other recent Congresses. In fact, the number of measures enacted into law exceeds that of any Congress for the past 20 years. While the final returns are not yet in on the number of measures enacted, the figure is certain to rank high in comparison with other recent Congresses. These comparisons, standing alone, are an inadequate picture of the real accomplishments but they do give some indication of the workload of the 84th Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to outline some of the major achievements of this Congress because I think it represents an era of enlightenment in the field of bipartisan politics that is unsurpassed in the history of our Nation.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENSE

At the outset, I want to emphasize the fact that in the 2d session of the 84th Congress just completed, it is the first time in years that all regular appropriations bills were through both branches of the Congress by June 30. This is an unusual record.

One of the most critical problems to face in the 84th Congress in its earliest days was Formosa and what to do about her defense. Under Democratic leadership the problem was quickly brought before Congress and action was taken to give the President authority to use the Armed Forces, if necessary, in the defense of Formosa and the Pescadores. This demonstration of American strength and unity aided considerably at that time and for some months to come in the lessening of the tension in the Far East. Unfortunately, that tension has increased from other factors during the past year. I might state that the Formosa resolution was supported almost unanimously by members of both major political parties.

The President's authority to make reciprocal trade agreements and to reduce tariff rates was extended to June 30, 1958.

Economic and military aid amounting to over $7 billion was authorized.

The President's authority to control exports was extended until 1958.

Authority was granted for the United States participation in the International Finance Corporation for the purpose of encouraging private investment in foreign trade.

Congress provided for the settlement of World War II claims against Hungary, Rumania, and other countries.

An appropriation of $57.7 million was authorized to complete the Inter-American Highway.

Numerous important treaties in which the House had no voice were ratified by the Senate.

Last year I had the pleasure of submitting a concurrent resolution designed to place Congress on record as opposing Communist imperialism and calling for administration of our foreign policy and use of our influence to support other peoples in their efforts to achieve self-determination or independence. This resolution passed both branches of the Congress unanimously.

Congress extended to July 1, 1959, the authority to draft men into the Armed Forces. The act relating to doctors, dentists, and allied specialists was extended to July 1, 1957. These actions were necessary in the national interest of our country.

Legislation was enacted into law to establish a trained reserve manpower pool of 2,900,000 by 1959. Unfortunately, this program has not progressed very rapidly due to the confused leadership of the present administration.

An excellent program of construction of armories for training reserves in the sum of $250 million and covering a 3-year period was authorized.

On two occasions Congress extended the President's authority to allocate and fix priorities of critical and strategic materials, and to grant loans and subsidies under the Defense Production Act. That authority now will not expire until June 30, 1958.

Officer strength of the armed services was increased by 60,000 men.

Laws were enacted to authorize the President to make the Commissioned Corps of the Public Health Service a part of the military in times of emergency; and to organize State defense forces to replace the National Guard when that organization is called into the Federal service.

A $532.2 million program of atomic energy projects was authorized.

Legislation was enacted providing for a large construction program in connection with the domestic and foreign bases of the Armed Forces, which legislation included provision for housing military families.

Additional funds were provided for the expansion of research facilities of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, as well as for the construction of an aircraft control and warning system.

Legislation was enacted authorizing $1.4 billion program of naval construction and conversion, including a nuclear-powered cruiser and a 60,000-ton aircraft carrier.

I might also say that considerable other legislation too numerous to mention on this occasion in the field of foreign affairs and national defense were enacted into law.

Mr. Speaker, I will now review some of the major activities of this Congress in a field in which the Democrats have always taken the leadership:

SOCIAL SECURITY, HEALTH, AND WELFARE

Under the inspired leadership of a great Democrat, Franklin D. Roosevelt, one of the most important and humane pieces of legislation ever proposed was placed before Congress and enacted into law. This was accomplished against the opposition of a great majority of the opposite party. I refer to the Social Security Act. That act has subsequently been broadened and liberalized in many respects under the late Franklin D. Roosevelt and under former President Harry S. Truman. The 84th Congress accomplished a major revision of the act. It extended benefits to women beginning at the age of 62 instead of at age 65, and to disabled persons at age 50 instead of at age 65; coverage for lawyers, dentists, and other professionals was included; benefits were extended to some farmers; grants to States for aid to the needy, blind, and to dependent children were increased.

Another extremely important measure enacted by this Congress was the extension until July 1, 1957, of the Salk polio-vaccination program. Despite the poor administration of this program for a long period of time, it should be a comfort now to all Americans to know that this battle against crippling disease is now running smoothly, and this was mainly brought about through the justifiable criticism of Democratic Members.

In the field of medical research, of such vital importance to the people of our country both from a legislative and appropriation angle, this Congress has made the greatest step forward ever made in the history of our country. The results of the action of the Congress will inure to the benefit of our people and of mankind. As a result of the legislation passed and appropriations made, medical science will be able to enter into partially explored and unexplored fields bringing about results that will bring hope and confidence and improved care and treatment to millions of sick, afflicted, and disabled persons.

This Congress increased and extended the authorization for milk for schoolchildren; legislation was enacted authorizing a 5-year $7.5 million a year program of Federal aid for State library services in isolated rural areas; the Public Health Service has been directed by statute to survey the extent of chronic illnesses; and appropriations for medical research have been greatly increased.

Following the disastrous floods of the fall of 1955, the present Congress has made an outstanding record in meeting this serious situation. Adequate appropriations have been made for construction of dams and other work during the remainder of fiscal year 1956 and fiscal year 1957.

The Congress has also passed a law giving the Army engineers authority to construct projects, without authority from Congress, up to $400,000 per year in each project instead of the limited $150,000 which was the law heretofore. In connection with the latter, an additional appropriation of $2 million has been made to carry out this law during the coming fiscal year. In addition, Congress took many steps to extend FHA loan privileges to those who suffered during the flood period.

A very important bill of vital concern to the people of our country is the passage of flood disaster insurance legislation. After the disastrous floods of 1950 and 1951 in various sections of the country, particularly in and around the Middle West, former President Truman recommended such legislation. It was bitterly opposed as socialistic. After the floods of last year a public demand developed for the passage of such legislation. As hearings took place in both branches of the Congress, secret and powerful opposition developed against the passage of such legislation. Fortunately, such opposition was overcome with the resultant passage of the bill through both branches of the Congress. The concept of this type of legislation originated in the recommendation in 1951 of former President Truman; its passage was as a result of bipartisan support, but strictly under Democratic leadership.

This Congress has passed a housing program that represents a compromise but still represents progress.

Legislation was enacted to extend the program for the construction of school facilities in federally impacted areas.

Mortgage insurance provisions were extended and liberalized.

Legislation was enacted to meet the sinister activity of illicit drug peddlers who sell to children, and other provisions effective stricter control of narcotics were enacted into law.

AGRICULTURE

As is well known, the 84th Congress passed and sent to the President legislation providing price supports of 90 percent for basic commodities, increasing price supports on dairy products from 75 percent to a scale of 80 to 90 percent, and providing for a soil-bank program and a two-price plan for wheat and rice. As is also well known, President Eisenhower vetoed that bill, which veto was sustained. Recognizing the plight of the farmers of our country, the Democratic-controlled Congress passed a bill in an attempt to alleviate the same. This bill was necessary as a result of the veto of President Eisenhower. It was not as effective as the Democratic measure.

A Democratic President and a Democratic Congress in 1957 will mean more effective legislation for the agricultural communities of our country.

The Commodity Credit Corporation's borrowing power was increased by several billions of dollars; the Sugar Act was extended until 1960 and foreign and domestic quotas were adjusted; farmers were relieved of paying excise tax on gasoline and oil used in farm machinery; the brucellosis eradication program was increased by $20 million and extended until 1958; a 10-year $25 million program of soil and water conservation was authorized for farmers of the Great Plains States; the limit on sales of surplus commodities for foreign currency under the Foreign Agricultural and Trade Development and Assistance Act was increased by over $2 billion; recruitment of Mexican farm labor was extended to 1959; acreage allotments for durum wheat were raised to meet shortages; onions were brought under the provisions of the Commodity Act; rice acreage allotments were reapportioned; tobacco quotas have been redetermined; emergency loan provisions for farmers and stockmen were extended for 2 years; a 2-year extension was granted for agricultural loans in disaster areas; a $15 million program for distribution of surplus wheat flour and corn meal to needy families was authorized; additional insurance of loans under the Bankhead-Jones Act was authorized; additional appropriations were authorized to the Agricultural Extension Service for special programs to aid farmers in low-income areas; and an important measure to the farmers of our country was that interest rates on farm disaster loans were reduced from 5 percent to 3 percent.

NATURAL RESOURCES

This Congress passed a number of fine projects of importance to different sections of the country in connection with flood control, conservation, and to prevent our natural resources from going to waste. One of the most important of these bills in this respect is the passage of the upper Colorado River bill authorizing a $760 million project for flood control and land reclamation in this great section of our country.

Another important bill passed was one increasing by $1 million a year Federal research grants to States and expanding the water-pollution program to $50 million a year for 5 years. Section 6 of this bill was opposed by the Republican administration.

Funds were authorized for the Washita River Basin project in Oklahoma; the Missouri River Basin project; the Mississippi-Gulf outlet; the Russian River, Calif., development; dam construction in Nebraska, Kansas, and Missouri; the Ventura River reclamation project; construction and operation of the Washoe reclamation project in Nevada and California; Trinity River; and Central Valley project.

Several important interstate compacts for apportioning and allocating water—fire protection and other matters—were approved by Congress; Federal aid for wildlife projects was authorized; an 8-year program of research in the development and use of saline waters was enacted; legislation was enacted to permit development of mineral resources on public lands withdrawn or reserved for power development; a bill authorizing $8.5 million Federal matching-fund program to aid States in drainage and flood-control measures for anthracite mines; $15 million was authorized as an emergency fund for protection and repair of flood-control work, flood fighting, and rescue operations.

VETERANS AND SERVICEMEN

This Congress enacted provisions to grant educational benefits to children of veterans who lost their lives in World War II and Korea; social security wage credits were granted for certain periods of military service; pay of trainees under the Reserve program was increased; legislation was enacted to provide medical care for the dependents of members of the Armed Forces; the Veterans' Administration program of guaranteed loans for home purchase or construction was extended to July 1958; pay of medical and dental officers in the armed services and Public Health Service was increased; loans were authorized for the purchase of farm homes by veterans under the same terms as for residential housing; the unemployment program for veterans of the Korean war was extended to 1960; and mustering-out pay provisions for Korean veterans were also extended.

And also of great importance, legislation was enacted to increase the pay of all members of the armed services by amounts ranging from 6 percent to 25 percent.

NATIONAL ECONOMY

The Congress, after many months of careful and deliberate consideration, enacted a broad highway construction program. This is distinctively a Democratic measure. If the measure recommended by President Eisenhower had become law, it would have cost the taxpayers of America in a period of 30 years over $11 billion more than the Democratic measure. President Eisenhower and the entire administration at the outset bitterly fought this vital measure. This law authorizes a $33.4 billion program involving 41,000 miles of interstate highways to be spread over a 13-year period. The Federal share of the cost will be 90 percent. The Democratic measure was a "pay as you go" one. The Republican measure was a deferred-payment one, properly known as the big bankers' dream.

The Fair Labor Standards Act was amended to increase the minimum wage rate from 75 cents to $1 per hour. President Eisenhower recommended an increase to 90 cents per hour. The Democractic Congress put through the increase to $1 per hour.

The Small Business Administration's loan authority was increased by $100 million to take care of disasters.

A very important bill, distinctively Democratic in origin, that passed both branches of the Congress under Democratic leadership is the bill to increase exemptions of the amusement tax from 50 cents to 90 cents. In particular, this is a matter of great importance to the moving-picture houses of our country that are operating under severe competition, and more particularly to the smaller moving-picture houses of our country.

Legislation was enacted authorizing a 4-year program of airport construction, and providing $63 million a year for grants-in-aid to States. When we realize the air disasters that have taken place, the importance of this legislation will be recognized and appreciated.

War-risk insurance provisions of the Merchant Marine Act were extended to 1960; renegotiation provisions for recovery of excess profits from defense contracts were extended to 1958; criminal penalties under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act were increased.

GOVERNMENTAL REORGANIZATION

Congress enacted legislation to improve budgeting and accounting procedures and methods; civil-service retirement provisions were liberalized; annuities under the Foreign Service retirement and disability system were increased; salary increases were provided for postal employees and other Federal employees, as well as members of the Cabinet, Federal judges, and Members of the Congress; per diem and travel allowances for Federal employees were increased; legislation was enacted to facilitate integration of State Department employees into the Foreign Service, and standards were raised to improve the quality of personnel.

The retirement bill for at least 2,100,000 employees and their 6 million dependents is a very important piece of legislation. It is probably the most important single Federal employee act of this session of Congress. Under Democratic leadership, the bill as it passed both branches is a much better one than that recommended by President Eisenhower. This bill is another illustration of the considerate and humane leadership of the Democratic Party.

The several pay-increase bills in the 1st session of the 84th Congress, also enacted under Democratic leadership, resulted in higher pay increases for Federal employees than those recommended by President Eisenhower.

Both of these bills were passed over the resistance and opposition of the administration to the higher salaries and higher retirement benefits.

INTERNAL SECURITY

In this field laws were enacted to—

Fix criminal penalties for persons assisting in attempted escape of Federal prisoners; prohibit Government employment of disloyal persons or those who believe in the right to strike against the Government; create a Commission on Government Security to review the present program and make recommendations thereon; provide penalties for threats against the President-elect or the Vice President; provide rewards for information on the illegal importation, manufacture, or acquisition of nuclear material or atomic weapons; and provide penalties for the willful damage or destruction of aircraft.

The record of Congress is not only legislation passed for the best interest of the people but also in exposing or preventing actions that are not for our best interests.

The 83d Republican-controlled Congress was noted for its giveaways of certain natural resources of our people. The 84th Congress stopped such giveaways.

The use of the contract device without advising or consulting with the Congress until after contracts were actually entered into, thereby attempting to commit our Government and compelling Congress to appropriate the necessary money, even if Congress did not agree, upon the theory that Congress had to approve otherwise it would constitute impairing the obligations of a contract, for which large compensation could be received from the Government by the private contracting party has been definitely exposed by this Congress.

An illustration of this is where the Department of the Air Force made contracts involving several billions of dollars over a period of 10 years in connection with the project known as Sage.

This is a case where contracts were made where no authority in law existed for the making of the same. The private companies were innocent. In this case there was no stretched interpretation of law involved. It was the making of contracts without authority in law.

Democratic Members were not opposed to project Sage, but insisted that the constitutional powers of Congress be preserved. It is interesting to note that the Comptroller General ruled that no authority in law existed for the making of such contracts.

As a result, the Defense Department, through the Department of the Air Force, had to come to Congress to get the authority in law to make such contracts, and which authority was granted by the recent session of the Congress.

It is also interesting to note, however, that as a result of the attempt to ignore and bypass Congress that first, $830 million over a period of 10 years has been saved the taxpayers of our country; and, second, the rights of small and independent telephone and electric companies, ignored by the Department of the Air Force, have been protected by congressional action.

This large saving of money and the protection of small and independent telephone and electric companies was brought about by the Members of the present Democratic-controlled Congress.

The number of cases of "conflict of interest" involving at least several high officials of the present administration resulting in their resignation is another illustration of nonlegislative action by Congress, but constructive in nature and protective of the people's interest.

A further illustration of this is the nefarious Dixon-Yates contract which, first, was made in secrecy; and, second, by the very man who represented the Government, and at the same time was an official of the company entering into contractual obligations with the Government.

This hidden deal, contrary to the best interest of our people, was exposed by Democratic Members of Congress against the strong resistance of President Eisenhower and the Republican administration.

Another attempt by this administration is the stretched interpretation of the laws for the purpose of bypassing Congress. An excellent illustration of this was the action of the Defense Department in practically destroying the Donable Property Act, which meant so much to the several States and political subdivisions and to the hospitals, colleges, and schools of our country. This action of the Defense Department was stopped by the present Democratic-controlled Congress.

Another illustration of the constructive work done by the 84th Democratic Congress is the exposing of secrecy in Government where the executive branch withholds information from our people which they should receive. Quite frequently it is through releases by the Foreign Ministry of Great Britain and of France that the American people are made acquainted with valuable information which should be made public by our Government. Also involved is the deliberate withholding of information from the Congress and its committees which makes this a dangerous policy—justifiably subject to severe criticism.

We have seen develop under President Eisenhower during the past 3½ years a strange doctrine known as the doctrine of nonresponsibility, subtly established by President Eisenhower and the executive branch of the Government. The effect of this doctrine means that when bad errors are made by appointees of the President, and when they do things that are wrong, the President is not held responsible. This has created a political vacuum in Washington which is inconsistent with our theory of government.

The continuance of this doctrine of nonresponsibility of the President, with the resultant political vacuum, is not for the best interest of our country and our people. The doctrine of nonresponsibility for the conduct of public office by virtue of being uninformed or not desiring to be informed is dangerous.

The election of the Democratic candidate for President in November will effectively stop the continuance of such doctrine and the conditions that follow therefrom.

The Democratic Party has always been strong for a firm foreign policy and for a powerful national defense. Unfortunately, our country is upon the defensive throughout the world. The quicker that those who are entrusted with the responsibility of conducting our foreign policy get back to the Democratic policy of peace through strength the better it will be for our country and the free world.

Mr. Speaker, this presentation shows that the 84th Democratic-controlled Congress was not only an active one but a constructive one. My presentation does not by any means portray a complete picture of the fine work which has been done by this Congress. Based upon the work performed and the record made, I am proud to include the 84th Congress within my span of my service as a Member of the House of Representatives.

President Eisenhower an Influence for World Peace Who Should Be Retained

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, today with its uncertainties in world affairs there is great need for the strength that comes from unity of action as well as of purpose.

From the very beginning President Eisenhower has shown not only a desire for peace, but, also a determination to maintain peace.

The President in all his efforts to effect these purposes has had the loyal and fullhearted help and support of Secretary of State Dulles, who is equally dedicated to the cause of peace. The physical and mental energy that has been displayed by Secretary Dulles is almost unbelievable. Aside from the mental strain that he has been under in meeting the many problems that confront our Nation, and, that he has been called upon to consider and find appropriate solution for, which in itself has been tremendous, there has been also the physical strain incident to the thousands of miles he has traveled by airplane to all parts of the world to meet those in other nations whose agreement and cooperation has been necessary if the best possible results were to be attained.

It is a high tribute to Secretary Dulles that he is honored and respected by congressional leaders on both sides of the aisle, Democrats as well as Republicans, for the wisdom and sincerity with which he has approached world problems. As a result of this, he and President Eisenhower have built up a nonpartisan support for American policies in our own Nation that has enabled us to present a united front to the nations of the world, and thereby gain that cooperation that has been so helpful and necessary to secure the blessings of world peace.

It has been no easy task that the President and his Secretary of State have been called upon to cope with in the effort to maintain our peace, and peace and good will throughout the world.

In this connection, it has been most difficult because of the unusual conditions created by Russia; first, under Stalin and, second, under Bulganin and his associates. The policies pursued by the latter were distinctly different than those under Stalin. But, was there a real difference in objective? This was the fundamental question. It has not been easy of discernment. Consequently, it has been no easy task to avoid pitfalls that might have led to disaster.

For instance, there was the incident of Premier Bulganin sending to President Eisenhower a communication on behalf of the Soviet Union, in which the latter proposed a treaty of peace solely between Russia and the United States. It was a gesture that could easily have led a peace-loving nation, such as ours, to a quick acceptance. It could have been assumed that President Eisenhower would jump quickly to accept the suggestion as a way to peace, but fortunately our President was not so naive as to accept at full value what on the surface looked like a peace offer from Russia. However, he looked beneath the surface and there he saw a hidden danger and evidence of an ulterior motive. What he saw revealed to him the truth of two old sayings, namely, "All that glitters is not gold," and equally true, "Things are not always what they seem." However, the answer given by President Eisenhower to the Russian note left no doubt that he had looked well beneath the surface and had not been fooled by deceptive words, gilded though they were with the beauty and splendor that surrounds the thought of peace. Had President Eisenhower not been so discerning, and, had he accepted the Russian suggestion for a treaty solely between the Soviets and ourselves, it could have easily wrecked the unity that has existed between the free nations of the world and thereby eventually imperiled the united security for peace that now exists.

Never have I been more proud of our President than I was after reading the answer he made to the Russian Premier. His answer was so dignified, so searching, so simple and clear in expression, and so plain and convincing as to our national desire for peace, that even though the President refused to accept the Russian proposal as offered, and asserted in plain strong language that the failure of Russia to live up to its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and its conduct in violating the principles of the Charter in recent years, made it mandatory that Russia first show a desire for peace by deeds rather than words, nevertheless, a spirit of friendliness pervaded the whole document to such an extent that it must have been apparent to even the Russian Premier, and, I hope, to the people of Russia, that our Nation seeks peace and not war.

The answer of President Eisenhower, in my opinion, constitutes one of the most outstanding chapters in the long history of mankind in its effort to create a world of peace and good will.

The friendly language of the President's reply, devoid of any harshness, and yet unmistakably strong and to the point, did not destroy in the slightest degree the eloquence of the answer, nor its effectiveness in promoting a better understanding of the sincerity of America in its desire for world peace. The acclaim of approval with which the President's reply was received throughout the world by all people who seek honestly to follow the ways of peace, and the praise that greeted it by all, regardless of party affiliation, including leading Democrats, such as former President Truman, Adlai Stevenson, Senators Byrd and Russell, as well as all the leaders within the President's own political party, leaves no doubt as to its approval and confidence in its effectiveness as a means of promoting world peace.

There are many equally significant and important incidents that might be set forth. All of such would tend to prove the valuable asset we have in the person of our President to deal with the intricate problems of foreign affairs. President Eisenhower, by his long and intimate association with foreign leaders, when he was commander in chief of the Allied armies, gained for him a reservoir of information that is of the utmost value in times such as these. He is helped immeasurably thereby as he meets with foreign leaders with reference to problems identified with our peace aims, and, also in making his decisions in reference thereto. Furthermore, his influence in all these matters is enhanced by his personal acquaintanceship with foreign leaders whereby he has been in a peculiarly strong position to demonstrate the high purpose that actuates him in all he says and does in the cause of peace.

President Eisenhower's character, ability, influence, and sincerity are so well known abroad, as well as here in his homeland, that it behooves us to retain him in the office of President and give to him a Congress pledged to support him in all his efforts for world peace.

My Voting Record

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JACK WESTLAND
OF WASHINGTON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WESTLAND. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I would like to make part of the official CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a listing of my votes on the important rollcall issues of the 84th Congress. I feel it is a duty to the electorate which has sent me back here to represent them in Congress, and a willing desire of mine to compile and publish this record so that they know how my vote was cast on the important issues of the day.

Since the House of Representatives had some 22,000 bills introduced during the 2 years of the 84th Congress, it is apparent that only a relatively small percentage of them ever got to a vote before the House. Many smaller bills, having to do with private legislation, were not brought to a rollcall vote. For practical purposes, since these are the votes officially recorded by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, I have confined this record to those votes requiring a yea-or-nay answer—a rollcall. These, of course, include the topmost issues before the Congress during the past 2 years.

For simplification I have divided these measures into categories according to the general fields they encompass. Some are difficult to classify as they are considerably broad in scope and I request the reader's pardon if the categories overlap on some bills.

BILLS RELATING TO DEFENSE AND ARMED SERVICES

Voted for H. R. 6042 in 1955 and H. R. 10986 in 1956. Both bills provided for appropriations to operate all the armed services through the Defense Department.

Voted for H. R. 4393 in 1955 and H. R. 7993 in 1956. These bills provided $1.3 and $1.4 billion for Navy shipbuilding and modernization of fleet programs.

Voted for House Joint Resolution 159, which authorized the President to use the Armed Forces of the United States for the defense of Formosa and the Pescadores.

Voted for H. R. 3005, to increase benefits under dependents' assistance program and provide for a continuing Armed Forces personnel program.

Voted for H. R. 7000, to strengthen the Armed Forces Reserve program which offers youths choice of several ways to fulfill their military obligations.

Voted for H. R. 6829 in 1955 and H. R. 9893 in 1956, which provided nearly $4 billion for military construction projects.

BILLS AFFECTING BUSINESS AND TRADE

Voted against Resolutions 170 and 171, which would have kept the Government in rubber plants operated at loss to taxpayers.

Voted for H. R. 1, which authorized the President to enter into beneficial trade negotiations with various nations of the world.

Voted for H. R. 8710, which removed authority of Defense Department to negotiate big contracts. Bids must now be called on contracts over $2,500.

Voted for H. R. 6227, which provides regulation by the Government of bank holding companies.

Voted for H. R. 11380, which would have provided sufficient revenue to operate the Post Office Department on a sound fiscal basis.

Voted for H. R. 1840, which strengthened antitrust laws and prohibits price discrimination.

BILLS AFFECTING VETERANS, SOCIAL SECURITY, EDUCATION, AND HOUSING

Voted for S. 2126, to provide Federal housing, reconstruction and slum clearance projects, and H. R. 11742, the 1956 version of the same bill, which included my amendment to provide authority for single elderly people to occupy public housing projects.

Voted for H. R. 7535, to authorize a Federal-aid program for school construction.

Voted for H. R. 7886, to provide increased pensions for World War I veterans.

Voted for H. R. 587, to extend the GI education bill.

Voted for H. R. 4721, to increase pay and allowances for members of the Armed Forces.

Voted for H. R. 7225, to lower the retirement age for women to 62 and start disability payments at age 50 under the social-security program.

Voted for H. R. 12038, for increased payments for service-connected disabilities.

Voted for H. R. 7089, to provide increased survivors benefits for servicemen.

BILLS ON GENERAL OPERATION OF GOVERNMENT

Voted for H. R. 10660, which sets up a 13-year, $38 billion program to develop interstate, primary, and secondary highways in the Nation.

Voted for H. R. 4259 and H. R. 9166, for extension of corporation taxes.

Voted for H. R. 5924, to authorize Inter-American Highway completion within 3 years.

Voted for H. R. 7224 and H. R. 12130, which provided foreign aid funds. Voted for all reductions.

Voted for H. R. 6766, which set up increased funds for the United States Army engineers, the Atomic Energy Commission, and the Bureau of Reclamation.

Voted for House Concurrent Resolution 265, which expressed Congress' opposition to admittance of Red China into the United Nations.

Voted for H. R. 627, for furtherance of civil rights.

Voted against H. R. 7992, which would impede Defense Department getting out of competition with business and require Defense Department to submit proposal to Congress before getting out of business.

Voted for H. R. 12061, which would speed up governmental development of atomic electrical power by establishing reactor plants at Hanford and other locations.

BILLS AFFECTING LABOR

Voted for H. R. 7214 to increase the minimum wage to $1 per hour.

Voted against H. R. 9852 which would require dispersal of defense industries, such as Boeing from coastal areas.

Voted for H. R. 567 to increase pay for certain types of civil-service employees.

Voted for H. R. 4644 to increase postal workers' pay, eliminate inequities in service.

Voted for Bacon-Davis amendment to highway bill that requires prevailing rates of pay for all labor on highway construction projects.

BILLS AFFECTING FARMERS AND FARMING

Voted for H. R. 10875, President Eisenhower's farm program with soil-bank provisions, and other programs designed to bolster farm income. Voted to sustain veto of hodgepodge, unworkable farm bill originally proposed.

Voted for H. R. 8780 to eliminate gasoline taxes on fuel used in operation of farm machinery.

Voted for H. R. 8320 which extended school milk program and set up $75 million fund for program; also extended the brucellosis eradication program.

Voted for H. R. 3383, the upper Colorado River project, which provides for conservation and beneficial use of water resources of the great water basin.

Voted against H. R. 12 which provided high rigid price supports with no production controls, the cause of surpluses which cost taxpayers $8 billion.

Voted for H. R. 2851 to make Commodity Credit Corporation—farm surplus—commodities available for distribution to distressed areas.

Voted for H. R. 11708 to increase appropriations for disposal of agricultural products.

Voted for House Resolution 641 to take action on Fryingpan-Arkansas project for development of agriculture and beneficial usage of Fryingpan River.

Accomplishments of the Eisenhower Administration

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES W. VURSELL
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include for the benefit of the businessmen of my district, a brief summary of the accomplishments during the 4 years of the Eisenhower administration.

As of the close of this session, marking the fourth year of the Eisenhower administration, as businessmen I thought you might be interested in a brief summary of its accomplishments.

Successful businessmen generally make plans or policies. Because of the bigness of Government, I find that policies in Government are of the greatest importance.

The first act of this administration was to agree upon a blueprint of sound policies, as follows:

First. To stop the war in Korea.

Second. To achieve efficiency and economy in Government, and put an end to waste.

Third. To reduce taxes.

Fourth. To encourage free enterprise.

Fifth. To stabilize the dollar, and balance the budget.

Sixth. To get the Government out of business.

Seventh. To work toward the goal of world peace.

I believe the facts will prove we have gone a long way in 4 short years in accomplishing the above objectives.

The first policy—stopping the war in Korea—can be checked as accomplished.

The second policy of efficiency, economy, and the stopping of waste has been accomplished by reducing the unnecessary cost of Government during the past 4 years by over $20 billion.

That policy made it possible to reduce Federal taxes by $7½ billion—our third objective.

By reducing taxes and revising the tax code, we gave business and the free enterprise system the green light of confidence, which encouraged business to expand, employing additional millions of our people, increasing our production, and increasing the wealth of our Nation.

This fourth policy had such a dynamic effect on the expansion of the business of the Nation that the threatened peacetime depression was beaten off, and even with a tax reduction of $7½ billion given to the people, we were able to balance the budget for the first time since 1951, and the second time in a quarter of a century.

With a surplus in the Treasury of over $2 billion, we have stablized the dollar, brought inflation under control, and are getting the Government out of competitive business as rapidly as possible. The Defense Department alone has closed down 195 business-type activities. We have sold 24 synthetic rubber plants, getting back 97 percent of the taxpayers' investment—a record never before equaled.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

The power for peace which has been built up in this Nation through the experience and leadership of President Eisenhower has stopped the Russian Bear in his tracks. Our massive retaliatory military power which has deterred Russia and has preserved the peace has been accomplished at a minimum cost to the taxpayer—yet it offers a maximum striking power for defense.

In the fact of our most powerful military force in the history of the Nation, Russia has paused in her plan of aggression, she has started no new wars, she has enslaved no new peoples. Today, as we stand on the threshold of world peace, we have every reason to have continued confidence in our Nation's foreign policy, in her defense program, and in her leadership. But we must not relax our vigilance. We must not be disarmed by Russian smiles, we must keep the line taut.

THE RESULT OF SOUND POLICIES

In adopting sound policies and keeping the avenues of opportunity open, the expansion of business, resulting in millions of jobs, with the new wealth created in the past 3½ years almost staggers the imagination.

This economic strength snuffed out the threatened depression, and prosperity, with the exception of the farmer for a time, has been rolling forward on the broad highway, nationwide, reaching one peak after another; in fact, the strength of our economy has been so powerful that the Federal Reserve Board working in close cooperation with the Treasury has kept putting on the brakes for the past 2 years to keep the business boom from getting out of hand.

The underlying strength of the boom continues to confound the pessimists and amaze most of the optimists. Not even a 1 month's industrial steel strike on top of the major slowdown in automobiles is likely to make much of a dent in our economy.

It is expected that the year 1956 in business spending will top the record-high 1955 total spending of $322.3 billion. While our gross national product, or yearly production, for the fiscal year 1952 was $346 billion, 1956 has finally broken through the $400 billion yearly rate of total production. In other words, the Nation's wealth has increased $54 billion since 1952, and is expected to gain momentum in 1957.

Personal income rose to a new high annual level of $317.5 billion the first quarter of this year, which is $3 billion above the last quarter of 1955.

NEW CONSTRUCTION HEADED FOR RECORD

Outlays for new construction are expected to total $44.5 billion in 1956, a 4-percent increase over last year's record level, according to revised estimates prepared by the Commerce and Labor Departments. Further gains were forecast for utilities, private industrial buildings, and highways.

RETAIL SALES

A check of store managers across the country, including department stores, indicates that total retail sales in 1956 will top the record year of 1955—finishing up with a record-high Christmas business.

HIGH EMPLOYMENT

American employment has reached an alltime peak with over 66 million persons holding jobs. A record backlog of savings and purchasing power by accumulation of E and H bonds, which are now held by the people, has reached the alltime high of $40,929,000,000, an increase of bond holding by the people of $5,605,000,000 during the past 3½ years of the Eisenhower administration.

LACK OF CONFIDENCE IN 1952

Confidence in the Government's leadership plus sound policies are absolutely essential. Because of the lack of confidence of the people in their Government in 1952, they cashed in $523 million more of their bonds than the Government was able to sell back to the people. With confidence in the new administration in the first year, 1953, the trend changed, and the people bought and held $211 million more in bonds than were cashed in.

In 1955, the sales of E and H bonds exceeded redemptions by $717 million, and the figures indicate to date that in 1956 the people will buy and hold again this year about $700 million worth of bonds in excess of cash-ins, or redemptions.

On June 30, 1956, $14.9 billion matured Series E bonds were being retained by their owners under the optional automatic extension program voted by Congress; in other words, approximately 70 percent of the bonds that had come due are being held by their owners as part of their backlog of savings—another evidence of confidence.

One of the outstanding achievements has been the courageous stand of President Eisenhower and us in the Congress who have backed him. We attacked the cause that was depressing farm prices rather than yield to political expediency and continue high-price supports that were responsible for the mountain of surpluses which depressed farm prices and cost the taxpayers over a billion dollars last year.

By treating the cause, we will ultimately save the taxpayers billions of dollars a year, and at the same time bring real prosperity to the farmers.

HIGHLIGHTS OF FARM EXPORTS

Our farm exports are up 20 percent from last year. Corn and other feedgrain exports are up 84 percent—an alltime high record; soybean exports are up 30 percent; lard exports are up 31 percent. If you exclude cotton, our farm exports this year are expected to be the highest in the past 30 years.

These exports of surplus farm commodities should result in higher prices, increase the farmers' spendable income which should reflect in local business.

Farm prices have turned upward with a gain of 9 percent over the low reached last December. During the last several months there has been an increase of 40 percent in the price of hogs.

THE WASHINGTON SCENE

As businessmen, I believe you want the facts. Notwithstanding the general optimism of the people, and this favorable report of the Nation's prosperity, in frankness we must admit a lot of sour notes have been blown in Washington which could have been avoided had the people, after electing the President and a new administration, given the President a majority of his own party to help him complete the job he had so well begun.

May I say to you in all seriousness, it appears the Democrat majority in the House and Senate has constantly voted to increase appropriations, in an apparent effort to prevent the President and his administration from balancing the budget. I feel sure careful analysis of such excess spending, which the people will have to pay back in taxes, will total over $2 billion for the last 2 years.

While we balanced the budget with a $2 billion surplus, it could have been $4 or $5 billion had the President had the cooperation of a friendly Congress.

HOOVER REPORTS

The Hoover Commission has just issued a report as follows:

Of 314 recommendations made by the Hoover Commission, more than 80 reports have been put into effect by the President through Executive action, while only about 20 of the recommendations have been implemented to any degree, by the action of Congress. The report further states it appears that the adoption of its reports, which would reduce the cost of government by $10,000 a minute is of little interest to many leading Democrats in Congress. This statement is made by the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report.

The Eisenhower administration during its first 2 years passed a law empowering the Secretary of Defense to get the Government out of business where private enterprise could do a better job, and much progress was made during the first 2 years.

When the Democrat Congress came in 2 years ago, they threw up a roadblock which has greatly slowed down the program by enacting legislation which the Eisenhower administration opposed, which compels the Secretary of Defense to get the consent of the Armed Services Committees of the House and Senate before the Secretary can act. We tried to repeal that provision in the present session, but were voted down, with the Democrat Members almost solidly opposing us.

WORLD PEACE

Our greatest hope for the future is that under the leadership of President Eisenhower we may ultimately achieve the goal of world peace. May I say to you, in all sincerity, the facts show we have made great progress in that direction.

Value of Federal Health Program—Polio Vaccine an Illustration of What Can Be Done by Research

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which I am a member and have been chairman, has jurisdiction over many important subjects, such as transportation of all kinds; communications, radio, television, telephone, and telegraph; aviation; stock exchanges; investment legislation; scientific programs; Federal trade; pure food and drugs; railroad retirement; and many other subjects of a regulatory character. However, the jurisdiction within our committee that gives me the greatest pleasure, in study and accomplishment, is that which relates to the health of our people.

The work in connection with the subject of health has brought many satisfying results. I take great pride in the several research activities we have set up. These include all that relate to the major diseases that take such a terrific annual toll of our people. By way of illustration, I refer to cancer, arthritis, nervous diseases in all their different forms, including mental diseases, muscular dystrophy, and so forth.

In addition to the numerous and varied programs of a research character, there have also been accomplishments, of which I am proud, in providing for additional hospital facilities, both general and mental, rehabilitation centers, nursing homes, and centers for clinical purposes. Such as I have mentioned constitute only a small part of the many programs that have engaged our attention in an effort to improve the health of the Nation.

POLIO

I would feel remiss if I did not make special mention of the achievements in the field of polio, particularly as a result of the splendid work of Dr. Jonas Salk in producing a serum that is helpful in preventing certain types of polio.

There has been no happening in recent years that has brought so much happiness and relief to parents and others than the announcement that the polio vaccine discovered by Dr. Salk can be helpful in preventing paralytic polio. Dr. Salk is entitled to the high honors that have been paid to him. His modesty, and particularly his refusal to patent his important discovery for his own financial gain, is one of the most outstanding and unselfish acts recorded in the history of medicine.

The history of medicine is replete with instances where doctors and scientists have made contributions of scientific discoveries to promote the welfare of people without any thought of financial reward. I wish that time and space permitted me to enumerate them all. It would be a list of which we all might well be proud. All of this, including Dr. Salk's recent contribution, should be sufficient to impress us that after all there are men and women who think in terms of service to their fellow man as being above and beyond the mere accumulation of wealth.

It is my hope that Dr. Salk may live long to experience the joy and happiness he has brought into the lives of those who otherwise might have experienced the crippling results of infantile paralysis.

The important discovery of a polio vaccine is an illustration of what can be accomplished by continued and intelligent research. Sufficient funds as a means of carrying on and expanding research activities pays off in greater returns by improving the health of our people than any other activity of our Government. Consequently I feel that the time and effort I have put forth in committee hearings and the drafting, introduction, and passage of legislation to maintain, increase, and improve health research facilities has given to me a real sense of compensation and great satisfaction to have had a part in the promotion of ways and means of improving health conditions for our people.

The following letter which I have received from Dr. Leonard A. Scheele, Surgeon General of the United States, means much to me because it brings to mind the memory of the work we have done in the cause of health. It reads:

DEPARTMENT OF
HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE,
PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., July 27, 1956.

Hon. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN WOLVERTON: In departing from Washington and my Government career, I want you to know how much I have enjoyed and have appreciated my association with you. I shall always cherish the experiences during my years in Government service, and I want you to know that among the most pleasant has been my relationship with you. Your understanding and your sympathy with the aims of the Public Health Service have been an inspiration to all of us. Much of our accomplishment—and I like to think of it as substantial—would not have been possible without your counsel, your friendly and constructive criticism, and your support.

I will be located in New Jersey, as you know, but I hope to come back to Washington from time to time and hope that I may be privileged to appear before the Congress in the future in behalf of health legislation. I am sure that our paths will continue to cross.

With all good wishes.

Sincerely yours,

LEONARD A. SCHEELE,
Surgeon General.

It is my hope that I may be privileged to continue to engage in the noble and rewarding work of promoting the welfare of our people, by improving and expanding the facilities that can do so much for the future health of our people.

A Decade of the Japanese American Citizens League

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS H. KUCHEL
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement prepared by me on the Japanese American Citizens League.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, when the Japanese American Citizens League meets at San Francisco during the coming Labor Day weekend for its 14th biennial convention, it can look back upon a series of accomplishments on behalf of harmony in our land which, I feel sure, will give its membership and officers a deep sense of pride.

This is perhaps especially true of its work of the past decade. Meeting at Denver in the spring of 1946 for their first postwar convention, League delegates undertook a 10-year program to attain first-class citizenship for themselves and their parents, and to gain full acceptance as worthy Americans. They incorporated the antidiscrimination committee to serve as their legislative-legal arm and chose Mr. Mike Masaoka, a veteran of the famed 442d all-Nisei Regimental Combat Team, as national legislative director of the committee.

Utilizing the instruments of democracy within the framework of our American system of government, the League obtained the passage of remedial legislation, won court decisions outlawing racial discrimination against those of Japanese descent, and gained the acceptance of their fellow Americans. It is a shining record.

By 1952, the major legislative objectives adopted at the Denver convention had been realized. The privilege of naturalization was extended to resident alien Japanese, who since 1790 by Federal law had been denied citizenship in the land of their adoption and of their children's birth. The Japanese Exclusion Act of 1924 was repealed, and immigration quotas were extended to Japan and other Asian countries. The Refugee Relief Act of 1953, the orphans' bill, and the so-called soldier brides' laws enabled additional Japanese to come to America as nonquota immigrants to join their families here.

An Evacuation Claims Act was approved in 1948. It authorized the payment of losses suffered by Japanese-Americans during the 1942 wartime evacuation. This act was amended by the 84th Congress, 2d session, to provide a similar measure of justice with respect to claims which have not yet been processed.

Another law in which the Japanese American Citizens League interested itself authorized the Attorney General of the United States to adjust the status of deserving Japanese aliens who had come here as treaty merchants, students, and temporary visitors but were stranded by the war. Many of them assisted the United States against the country of their nativity. The law has had the humanitarian result of averting the forced separation of some 2,500 alien Japanese from American citizen families comprising approximately 10,000 persons.

Other statutes included naturalization for alien Japanese who served in the Armed Forces of the United States during World War II, restoration of citizenship to those who had lost it solely because they voted in the postwar elections in Japan during the occupation period, reimbursement for those who lost contraband articles deposited with State and local police officials when the war broke out, and recovery of improperly vested property by dual nationals.

And, of course, there was the treaty of peace with Japan which inaugurated a new era of friendship and cooperation in the Pacific.

One of the last bills passed by the 84th Congress eliminated the prohibition against using Mongolian labor on Federal reclamation projects. Perhaps this was an accomplishment of greater significance than the public realized. For the first time since this prohibition was written into law, in 1902, there is no statute which discriminates against Asians. Our Japanese-American citizens have reason, I believe, to be proud of the progress in fair and equal treatment which this enactment represents. So, too, have Americans of every other ancestry good cause herein to feel that our Nation continues to advance along the highway of understanding and tolerance.

A remarkable degree of the credit for these accomplishments can be given to the national legislative director. As a Nisei, Mr. Masaoka had misgivings when he registered as a lobbyist for the first time. But because he represented in his person the problems of the Japanese-American and spoke of them with the genuine concern of his constituency, he was accepted without question. His war record attested to his loyalty to the land of his birth. He holds the Combat Infantryman's Badge, Legion of Merit, Bronze Star, and Italian War Medal.

This leadership in the cause of solving the problems of the Japanese-American has been acknowledged in a feature article published by Reader's Digest entitled "Washington's Most Successful Lobbyist." In that account, published in 1949, Masaoka was described as one "who practices personal lobbying by appealing to the conscience of America." His simple, and completely American, creed is "Anyone can sell fair play and justice."

The Japanese American Citizens' League Decade, which will be commemorated at San Francisco from August 30 to September 3, is an inspiring documentary to the efficacy of democracy. The theme of the convention is "Changing Perspectives." Secure now in their future, and cognizant of the great and many opportunities which are rightfully theirs, our fellow citizens of Japanese blood will take stock of the changing perspectives of our times and will look forward to a new decade which all of us hope and believe will be as constructive as the one now coming to a close.

The United States and Japan, on different sides of the great Pacific Ocean, are united in their determination to continue as free nations. I am sure that in the years ahead the Japanese American Citizens' League will use its organization and facilities and membership to enrich the friendship which exists between America, their native land, and Japan, land of their ancestry. The league has demonstrated that it is peculiarly well qualified for this challenging task.

Statement of Hon. Frederick G. Payne, of Maine

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FREDERICK G. PAYNE
OF MAINE
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement prepared by me.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, as this session draws to a close I should like to pay a few words of tribute to the two great legislative leaders of this body in the 84th Congress—my distinguished colleagues, Senators LYNDON JOHNSON and WILLIAM KNOWLAND. Much of the credit for what we have accomplished here since January 1953 should go to these two outstanding Americans.

When LYNDON JOHNSON became minority leader in 1953 he set forth a philosophy which he has maintained right down to the closing hours of this session. "There are two courses open to a minority party," Senator JOHNSON said, "it can indulge in the politics of partisanship or it can remain true to the politics of responsibility."

I believe that my colleagues on the Republican side of the aisle will agree that after the majority shifted, Senator JOHNSON, through his own personal skill, maintained his pledge to a policy of moderation and responsibility, and this has also been true of BILL KNOWLAND.

Senator KNOWLAND has lived up to the confidence placed in him by his party, by the administration, and by his fellow Republican colleagues here in the Senate. His able and courteous leadership on this side, at all times, has been a great moving force behind the enactment of the President's legislative program.

These two great leaders, who have walked among us, have not always seen eye to eye on major issues. But under their leadership I would venture to say that the traditions of fair play, of honest debate, and of congressional integrity have been maintained at a level unequaled in Senate history.

No two men could ever display greater patience many times under trying conditions and circumstances.

Now, as the days of the 84th Congress have diminished into hours, and these hours are rapidly diminishing into minutes, we come to realize more fully the leadership which these men have provided. While political experts and the press of the Nation set out to evaluate what the 84th Congress has done or has failed to do, we can turn these issues aside temporarily and say a word of personal thanks to LYNDON JOHNSON and BILL KNOWLAND for their leadership, for their inspiration, and for their friendship, which all of us, regardless of party or policy, have come to value so highly.

The Supreme Court

OF
HON. EMANUEL CELLER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I insert herewith the text of a letter I sent to the New York Times on June 14, 1956, and which subsequently appeared therein:

JUNE 14, 1956.

EDITOR, THE NEW YORK TIMES,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: Exhibiting more courage and understanding of the fundamental issues facing the country today than do the other two coordinate branches of Federal Government, the Supreme Court has stood firm in its protection of the constitutionally guaranteed civil liberties and rights of our people. We have reason to be grateful. However, this good guardianship has given rise to much unbridled animosity and has resulted in unwarranted attacks on the integrity of the Court. These thrusts go far. They strike at the very nature of our Government by seeking to make the Court subservient to the political passions of the day.

The extent to which the hostility against the Court has gone is evidenced by bills introduced into the Congress which would damage the independence and authority of the Court. I cite among these the following:

Legislation to limit the term of a Justice of the Supreme Court to 12 years, deleting the lifetime provision;

Legislation to limit appointment to the Supreme Court to a person who (1) is a natural-born citizen of the United States, (2) has attained the age of 35 years, (3) has been 14 years a resident within the United States, (4) has been graduated from a law school approved by the American Bar Association, or has been admitted to the bar of a court of general jurisdiction of any State, Territory, possession of the United States or the District of Columbia, and (5) has practiced law for a total of not less than 5 years after having been admitted to the bar of any court of general jurisdiction or has had a total of not less than 5 years' judicial service;

Legislation to limit appointment to the Supreme Court to persons who have had at least 5 years prior judicial service. Obviously this last piece of legislation was aimed directly at Chief Justice Warren. Had such provisions prevailed in the past, monumental figures such as Chief Justice John Marshall, Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, Justice Louis Brandeis, as well as the present Chief Justice, would have been disqualified from serving.

Paramount among the decisions which have aroused the ire of powerful forces are the school desegregation cases, the decision in Pennsylvania v. Nelson, announced April 2, 1956, and the decision in Railway Employees' Department, American Federation of Labor, International Association of Machinists v. Robert L. Hanson, Horace A. Cameron, Harold J. Grau, et al., announced May 21, 1956. In the Nelson case the Court held that the extensive nature of Federal legislation in the area of subversion indicates an intent on the part of Congress to occupy the entire field of sedition against the Government of the United States. In the last cited case the Court held that a provision in the Railway Labor Act expressly permitting the union shop takes precedence over a provision in the Nebraska constitution prohibiting union-shop agreements.

In the light of article IV, section 2, of the Constitution of the United States, no other result in this case is possible. The Supreme Court detractors had better review article IV, section 2, of the Constitution, which provides:

"This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, * * * shall be the supreme law of the land, * * * anything in the Constitution or law of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

The Railway Labor Act by amendment in 1951 removed the previous bar against the union shop in the railway field. Under the basic Railway Labor Act, any agreement between the railway union and employer shall be binding, "notwithstanding any statute or law of any State." What does this mean? It means that any State law that forbids a union shop is inapplicable to any collective bargaining agreements controlled by the Railway Labor Act. But when the Supreme Court, on May 21, last, did just what Congress said it must do—consider the Federal statute as paramount to State law—there was occasion for cries of anguish and alarm from States Righters in and out of Washington about the usurpation of power by the Supreme Court.

Protests against these decisions have been loud, vigorous, and sustained. Powerful forces, under the banner of States rights, have moved forward to upset these decisions. Together with the bills already mentioned above, legislative proposals are now before the Congress to withdraw from the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court cases affecting schools and education. We have proposals to grant the States and the Federal Government concurrent jurisdiction in all areas unless Federal statutes expressly preempt the field. Such proposals would completely Balkanize the Government, leaving in complete confusion all interpretations of the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution. National problems would be dealt with by a welter of laws of 48 States. They would contradict and cancel each other out, leaving the Federal Government helpless to resolve the confusion. No one can foresee the effect of such far-reaching proposals.

We have further the proposal stemming directly from the Nelson case to give the States concurrent jurisdiction with the Federal Government in crimes involving subversion against the United States. If we examine the Nelson case we find that the Supreme Court has not challenged the authority of Pennsylvania to act in matters involving the State of Pennsylvania itself. It is most appropriate for the State of Pennsylvania to seek protection against threats directed against the State itself, but where Congress has provided an extensive program to protect the United States Government, it is absurd for the various States to have isolated, separate, and often conflicting programs against threats directed at the United States Government. I consider proposals authorizing State legislation in this area unwise and unwarranted. Protection against national subversion is part of the national defense. Forty-eight State laws on subversion aimed at the advocacy or conspiracy to overthrow the National Government can only lead to "different criteria of substantive offenses and a multiplicity of tribunals and a diversity of procedures" that in the final analysis can only benefit the subversive in our midst. The prevention of subversive activities is so clearly an integral part of national defense that it behooves us to ask those who so strenuously oppose Federal preemption of the field whether they favor an Army, Navy, or Air Force for each of the 48 States.

I am pleased to note that your editorials have urged caution on all these proposals. The problem of balancing Federal and States rights is not an easy one. In other recent cases the Supreme Court has upheld State action. In the case of Auto Workers v. Wisconsin Employment Relations Board, decided June 4, 1956, the Court upheld a State ban against mass picketing. In Black v. Cutter Laboratories, decided June 4, 1956, the Court let stand a decision of the California Supreme Court which resulted in an alleged Communist losing her job. In both cases it was strenuously argued that paramount Federal law required contrary decision. These decisions reflect how unfounded are the charges that the Supreme Court opposes States rights.

It is fervently to be hoped that the Congress will not yield to the pressures of those who under the guise of States rights seek to weaken the balanced structure of our Government both by direct attack on the composition of the Court and indirectly by consistent attack upon its decisions.

Sincerely yours,

EMANUEL CELLER.

Musical Recording: Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LOUIS C. RABAUT

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, on July 21, 1956, the Congress approved House Concurrent Resolution 258, accepting without cost to the United States copies of the musical recording Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag, and providing for the distribution of such records, first to radio and TV stations and then to schools and other organizations. Each Member of the House will receive an allotment of 50 records and each Member of the Senate will receive 25 copies. ASCAP has donated these records to the Congress and they should become available within about 2 months. Each record will be packaged for mailing. One side of the record carries the instrumental and vocal arrangement of the United States Air Force Band, conducted by Capt. Robert L. Landers, with the Singing Sergeants participating, which was heard originally in the House of Representatives on June 14, 1955, when Flag Day ceremonies were conducted for the first time. The other side of the record carries the instrumental and vocal arrangement of the United States Marine Band, conducted by Capt. Albert Schoepper, with an Interservice Choral Group accompanying, which was heard in the House of Representatives on Flag Day, June 14, 1956.

In order that the Members of the House might fully appreciate the musical arrangement of the song Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag that was presented so well in this Chamber on Flag Day this year, I am submitting a description of the composition as arranged by S. Sgt. Donald R. Hunsberger, United States Marine Band. Also included are the names of the members of the Marine Band and the Interservice Choral Group, who cannot be praised enough for their rendition of this composition in the House. This arrangement is a reflection of the various conceptions of the flag as held by the American public. It embodies strong patriotic fervor as demonstrated by the rich full sound of the American military band, long an important part of the American way of life along with a feeling of reverence as introduced in the middle of a cappella section. Of special interest to the listener will be the addition of the words "under God" which are heard in the repeated chorus of the Pledge. The extensive use of the military bugle call To the Colors, as used in part as well as in its entirety, further ties in another accepted tribute to the flag.

This bugle call is first introduced in the opening bars in a single trumpet and later is completed by use of a three-part trumpet canon. A fragmentary a cappella choral statement closes the introduction and sets the mood for the baritone soloist. Throughout the verse and chorus, distant trumpet fanfares are heard to sustain the patriotic feeling further. Following the choral version—of the chorus—the full band reenters, alternating with the bugle calls in a modulatory passage. At this point a reverend mood is introduced by the chorus singing a cappella in a much slower tempo. The music was arranged in this section to bring out some of the fine qualities of the Interservice Chorus. At the end of this extended section, chimes bring the listener back from the sacred to a flowing melodious playing of the verse by the trombones. This is then worked up in volume until the full band breaks forth with a strict rhythmical and harmonic bridge, modulating into a strong key for the chorus and band to present the final version of the chorus in a very grandiose style. A powerful and dramatic coda closes the arrangement in a triumphal manner, deserving of all the impact revealed in the words—a patriotic symbolic interpretation of the Pledge of Allegiance.

Following are the list of names of those who participated in the presentation of the Pledge song in the House of Representatives on June 14, 1956:

The Issue Today and Tomorrow

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, camouflaged as it may be, the real issue confronting the 84th Congress and—if we stay out of war—the one which will be predominant in the 85th, is private enterprise versus socialism.

Oh, I know you have heard that story before. But make no mistake. It was over that issue that the real battle in Congress was carried on this last session. Unless correctly resolved, it may destroy us.

The issue is not being fought by Republicans on one side, Democrats on the other. The battle is carried on on each side of the aisle between the two factions in each party.

Roosevelt was elected on a platform and on his individual promise that he could and would reduce national spending and Federal jobs 25 percent. That the country would remain on the gold standard. That constitutional government would be his goal. No real worthwhile effort was made to adhere to any of those promises.

On the contrary, Federal spending increased. We went off the gold standard within 6 months after he was inaugurated. All pretense of constitutional government went out the window.

The advocates of paternalism took over and, from that day until this, there has been a vigorous, persistent effort on the part of a financially and politically powerful group in both parties to establish the doctrine that "Papa knows best." That is to say that some of the representatives you send to Congress, your hired men, and the bureaucrats who are thoroughly entrenched in the executive departments, know more about how you should live, carry on your own businesses and affairs, than do you.

The only thing they concede is that you may work at least 3 of the 12 months of the year to earn the tax dollars on which the Federal Government operates.

During the 84th Congress, the Committee on Government Operations on which I am the ranking minority member, and the 11 special subcommittees, on which I serve, had a special appropriation of $995,000—no, I am not mistaken; that was only $5,000 less than a million dollars; the committee asked for another $125,000 but the $125,000 was abandoned when a point of order was raised—but the committee had another $200,000 out of legislative appropriations to carry on investigations and hold hearings. The committee had at least $1,200,000.

In my judgment, the overall purpose of some of the investigations of its subcommittees has been to establish the doctrine that the Government should take over and operate from Washington practically every business in which businessmen or business organizations are engaged.

The slaphappy bureaucrats and their adherents would, if they could have their way, take over.

You may think I misjudge the situation. But read this quotation from David Lawrence, who, referring to this group, writes:

> They will not be happy until all food stores, all department stores, all retail stores, all steel plants, all factories are owned by the Government.

And remember former Assistant Secretary and Under Secretary of Agriculture Rexford Guy Tugwell's statement that "Business will logically be required to disappear" and "Perhaps our vested interests will submit to control without violent resistance."

Some, your representative included, have long fought this trend. With the administration's aid, we have stopped some of it.

Do not be discouraged—I am not. The quicker the results of this drive take shape and bear fruit, the sooner we will get back to constitutional government, respect for the rights of individuals and of the States.

Opposition to socialism is one of the tasks which keeps me from growing old in spirit and activity, if not in years.

Experience will point the right road and certainly we have sense enough to follow it.

The people themselves will have an opportunity in November to once more point the way they wish the Nation to travel.

What Second District People Think

OF
HON. JACK WESTLAND
OF WASHINGTON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WESTLAND. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I would like to include the following summary of a questionnaire which I sent to the people of my district, in order that they may know the results.

I was most pleased with the returns on the questionnaire which I sent to residents of all sections of the Second Congressional District. The 11,000 answers convey the opinions of a representative cross-section of occupations and geographical sections of the district. I am deeply appreciative of the promptness of the returns and for the many people who took time to write additional comments on issues not covered specifically by the questionnaire.

Analysis of the results reveals an interest in good, sound governmental management on the part of those replying, and increasing interest in fiscal policies, our relationships with other nations, and our own defense efforts. Here is what the answers revealed and actions taken on the subjects:

First. The first part of this questionnaire was divided into 11 categories, which represented 11 important aspects of government. Answers given were ratings of the top six issues in the opinion of the answerers. Here is how these issues ranked in importance to Second District residents: First, defense; second, balancing the budget; third, foreign policy; fourth, farm policies; fifth, taxation; sixth, Government spending; seventh, highways; eighth, labor policies; ninth, schools; tenth, civil rights; eleventh, power policies.

Second. Should the United States continue foreign military aid? For, 56 percent; against, 44 percent. Economic aid? For, 63 percent; against, 37 percent.

Action taken: Congress passed $3.7 billion military- and economic-aid bill, cut from original $4.9 billion request. I voted for cuts and for bill in its final form.

Third. Should the Government pay farmers for taking acreage out of production? Against, 92 percent; for, 8 percent.

Should we return to high rigid price supports? Against, 84 percent; for, 16 percent.

Action taken: Congress voted hodgepodge farm bill with high supports. President vetoed. Congress passed second farm bill with soil bank, flexibles. I voted against high rigid supports. Voted to sustain President's veto. Voted for second farm bill.

Fourth. Do you favor Federal aid for school construction? For, 70 percent; against, 30 percent.

Action taken: House killed school bill after lengthy debate. I voted for the bill, which would have appropriated $400 million annually for 5 years.

Fifth. Do you favor a highway-construction program supported by increased gas and tire taxes? For, 68 percent; against, 32 percent.

Action taken: Congress passed 15-year program to build $38 billion worth of roads. Interstate, primary, and secondary roads to benefit. I supported this bill.

Sixth. Do you favor unbalancing the budget to get an income-tax cut? Against, 82 percent; for, 18 percent.

Do you favor a cut in taxes before reduction of the national debt? Against, 76 percent; for, 24 percent.

Action taken: No income-tax legislation considered. Administration's balanced budget means $1.7 billion can be applied toward cutting national debt.

Seventh. Do you favor the partnership program for power development? For, 73 percent; against, 27 percent.

Action taken: No House votes on specific projects. Progress made on Priest Rapids and Rocky Reach partnership dams.

Eighth. Do you favor increasing postal rates to meet the post-office deficit? For, 71 percent; against, 29 percent.

Action taken: House passed postal-rate-increase bill. Senate ignored it. I voted for bill, which would have erased $500 million annual postal deficit.

Ninth. Do you think the Taft-Hartley Act should be:

(a) Repealed? For, 9 percent; against, 16 percent.

(b) Strengthened? For, 18 percent; against, 6 percent.

(c) Left as is? For, 10 percent; against, 10 percent.

(d) Amended as recommended by the President? For, 26 percent; against, 5 percent.

Action taken: No action in either House of Congress this session.

Tenth. Do you believe we are spending enough for defense? Yes, 72 percent; no, 28 percent.

Action taken: Congress passed $35 billion defense appropriation bill. I voted for this measure when it passed the House.

This questionnaire was of great value to me in considering legislation presented to the Congress. I intend to continue, if reelected, this procedure in order to get the views of the people I represent.

Leasing of Lands in Superior National Forest to Inco

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LEE METCALF
OF MONTANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. METCALF, in the May 24 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL] called our attention to Warren Unna's excellent summary of Republican giveaways in the May issue of Harper's magazine.

In particular, I noted the section dealing with a mineral lease now being developed by the Department of the Interior with the International Nickel Company of Canada, Ltd.—Inco—for lands in the Superior National Forest. I have always taken an interest in the protection of the public domain.

When I looked into this matter, I found that it also raised many other important questions, among them national defense, monopoly versus small business, and a critical shortage of an indispensable metal. All these made it imperative that this proposed lease be carefully scrutinized.

On page 9581 of the June 5 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I called attention to this lease.

As part of my remarks I included a letter in which I addressed several questions on this lease to the Secretary of the Interior. I also included the introduction of Senate Document No. 4, 82d Congress, "Investigation of the Preparedness Program." In that report the Senate Armed Services Preparedness Subcommittee said Inco is "one of the most formidable monopolies the subcommittee has found."

Later additional information on the Inco monopoly came to my attention. In the June 22 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I inserted two letters which indicate that even a South African concern may not sell nickel to an American businessman without the transaction going through Inco in New York.

To complete the record, at least for now, I am making available Interior Secretary Seaton's reply to my inquiry and the answer I have sent him. These letters follow:

UNITED STATES
DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., July 19, 1956.

HON. LEE METCALF,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. METCALF: This will reply to your letter of June 5 in which you raise a number of questions concerning the International Nickel Co.'s application to this Department for mineral leases on lands located within the Superior National Forest in Minnesota.

In your letter you list eight questions to which you request answers from the Department of the Interior. These questions, you state, involve "national defense, conservation, monopoly, a critical shortage of an indispensable metal, and the attendant injury to small business." You further request a copy of the proposed lease form. We are happy to comply with both requests.

I shall attempt to answer your questions in the order in which they were raised.

1. When will the lease become effective? The lease, if granted, would become effective on the first day of the month following its execution, unless the applicants were to request that the lease be dated the first day of the month of execution.

2. What provisions are made in the proposed lease for the stimulation of production during a period of emergency * * *? This provision is covered in detail in section 7 (e) of the enclosed proposed lease form under heading of "National Emergency."

3. Has your Department had access to a copy of the Office of Defense Mobilization letter to the Forest Service on the desirability of stimulating production in the national interest? While I am not certain as to the letter to which you refer, it is my understanding that there is a classified document of this nature in the confidential files of the Forest Service. The Department of the Interior has not seen such a document.

4. Has your Department examined the assays of samples from the diamond drillings by Inco in the Superior National Forest? If so, what did they show: Were minerals in addition to nickel and copper found in commercial quality? What were these minerals? What royalty provisions for all minerals involved are contained in the contemplated lease? The Geological Survey of this Department which has examined the assays submitted by the company has reported thereon. That report is now receiving departmental consideration. The details in such geological reports and findings of this Department are not considered to be public information. They are a matter between the Department and the lease applicant. To betray the confidential nature of these reports would not only compromise the position of the applicant but would also be contrary to established procedures for considering mineral-leasing applications. The royalty provisions are dealt with at length in section 2 (b, c, and d) in the proposed lease form.

5. In view of the current emergency, has ODM been consulted with respect to the terms of the proposed lease? Representatives of the Office of Defense Mobilization were active participants, along with representatives of this Department, the Forest Service, and other interested parties, in the preliminary meeting when the proposed lease form was discussed and formulated.

6. Is Inco to have an undivided interest in the lease? If not, what other companies will have an interest and how much? If executed, the lease would be between the Department of the Interior, as the appropriate agency of the Federal Government, and the International Nickel Co. Any overriding royalties or other possible arrangements would be between the lessee and other parties with whom the Department would have no connection.

7. In view of the Senate subcommittee's finding that Inco is "one of the most formidable monopolies the subcommittee has found," has the proposed lease been referred to the Anti-Trust Division of the Department of Justice for determination as to whether Inco's monopoly would be enhanced by this lease? I have been advised informally that the Anti-Trust Division has no interest in reviewing the proposed lease. Explicit monopoly and fair price provisions are contained in section 6 (b) of the proposed lease form. Interior has, however, submitted the proposed lease form to the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, the congressional committee most concerned with the overall aspects of the proposed lease. On May 11, 1956 Senator JAMES E. MURRAY, chairman of this committee, wrote to the Department of the Interior that his committee has no objection to issuance of the proposed lease. Senator MURRAY's letter said, in part: "I hereby rescind the request that execution (of the lease) by the Department of the Interior be held in abeyance."

8. Is there a requirement in the proposed lease that the plant, which will process this ore from public lands, be located in the United States? We believe that location of a processing plant is always dictated by the economics of the prevailing situation; by availability of transportation facilities, electrical energy, employee housing, etc. It would be highly unusual to include as a provision of a lease the stipulation that this Department would have the right to dictate the location of a processing plant even before the company actually got into production. However, there are special stipulations listed in section 3 (f) of the proposed lease form that guarantee the preservation of the forest character of the area. It should also be noted that none of the area embraced by the lease application lies within the roadless area of the Superior National Forest.

As you point out in your letter, there is widespread interest in the potential development of a significant source of nickel in this country. As you no doubt know the present production of this strategic material in the United States is insignificant in comparison with consumption. The exploration and study in the Superior National Forest mineralized area have taken a number of years. Most of the prospecting permits embraced in the present lease application were issued in 1951 and 1952. The law provides that after a prospecting permit has been granted a lease must issue if minerals are found to be in commercial quantity.

During the 5 years since the first prospecting permits were issued the question of lease issuance has been given thorough and continuous study. The proposed lease form has been cleared by the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture.

If there is any additional information with which we can furnish you please let us know.

Sincerely yours,

FRED A. SEATON.

Hon. FRED A. SEATON,
Secretary of the Interior,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have your letter of July 19 concerning the International Nickel Co.'s application for mineral leases on lands in the Superior National Forest.

As I have indicated previously, this is a matter of real concern to me, involving as it does questions of national defense, protection of the public domain, monopoly versus small business, and a critical shortage of an indispensable metal.

You will recall that my second question was contained in this paragraph:

"(2) What provisions are made in the proposed lease for the stimulation of production during a period of emergency such as we are experiencing now? I consider this a most important question in view of the allegations of the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee in Document No. 4, 82d Congress, with respect to Inco's monopoly position in nickel production and distribution."

Now I, too, want to see a lease go into effect. But I want it to be a lease which will assure production, not permit one of the most formidable monopolies the Senate subcommittee found to tie up, thus foreclosing development by anyone else if Inco chooses to sit on the lease, the public's minerals for 50 years. I believe section 7 (e) of the lease form could well be reexamined with this in mind.

If the Department of the Interior has not seen the document referred to in my third question, the Department should. And if, as you say in answering my fifth question, representatives of the Office of Defense Mobilization and the Forest Service, attended the preliminary meeting when the proposed lease form was discussed and formulated, it is strange that Interior has not seen the ODM letter to the Forest Service.

You write that the assay report is now receiving departmental consideration. I would think that one of the first things the Department would have done would have been to study the assays—to find out what it has to lease before a lease form is drawn up. If these assays reveal the presence of rare minerals, they would certainly affect the royalty provisions of the lease.

In answering my sixth question, you indicate the Department is not concerned with any other company which might get a piece of the lease from Inco. I have been informed that another American nickel producer is interested in this lease. If this is the case, then substantially all the known nickel deposits in this country may be tied up by two companies.

I am happy to learn that the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs has approved the lease, and that the lease form has been cleared by the Forest Service. However, I would point out that a determination of whether Inco's monopoly would be enhanced by this lease is not within the jurisdiction of either the committee or of the Forest Service. I assume that each approved the lease within the scope of its jurisdiction. Neither has anything whatsoever to do with monopoly. I cannot understand why the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice has no interest in reviewing the proposed lease. According to my recollection, the Department of Justice previously considered action against Inco and entered into a consent decree several years ago.

One purpose of this lease is to develop our domestic nickel supply. At the same time, however, you oppose inclusion in this lease of a requirement that the processing plant be located in the United States. I believe the development of our supply would be enhanced by the location of the processing plant in the United States.

I know that present United States production of this strategic material is insignificant in comparison with consumption. That is one of the reasons I am concerned.

I know, too, that Interior cannot be in the position of holding up the development of this source of the indispensable metal. But it is your responsibility to see that every contract you make in the Government's name is in the public interest.

You will recall that Public Law 632 of the 84th Congress provides for a special study of the entire nickel situation by the Department of Commerce. I presume that the study will cover all possible sources of supply, including this proposed lease. I will be very much interested in this study. I also will continue to watch the development of this lease very closely.

As I promised I would, I shall place your letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD because of the importance and widespread public interest in this matter. Once the lease has been executed I also plan to place it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. For that reason, I will appreciate your advising me of any changes in the lease form.

Accomplishments of 84th Congress

HON. CARL ALBERT
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, the 2d session of the 84th Congress has ended. I would not want the occasion to pass, however, without expressing my views about the accomplishments of this Congress.

This was a very hard-working, constructive Congress. I am extremely proud of the record we have made. There has been no cold war of partisan politics, as the President once predicted there would be if the Democrats gained control of the 84th Congress. Quite the contrary. The Democratic leadership has cooperated with the President at every turn, and the President has the Democrats to thank for putting across many of the vital parts of his legislative program.

Our sole objective in every case was to do what we thought best for the American people. Party considerations were secondary, as they always are with the Democrats in power.

In legislating in the field of foreign affairs, the Democrats were as nonpartisan as it was possible to be. I recall that the first major act in the 1st session of the 84th Congress was to pass a resolution, at the President's request, authorizing him to use American Armed Forces in defense of Formosa and the Pescadores Islands. Many of us felt the President needed no new legislation from Congress to exercise the authority given him by the Constitution, but we, nevertheless, complied with his request.

Subsequently, and over vigorous opposition from many Republicans, we passed legislation extending the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act for 3 years. The Republican-controlled 83d Congress refused to approve this measure despite the recommendation of President Eisenhower. The Democratic-controlled 84th Congress carried out the President's request.

The 84th Congress also gave the President substantially what he asked to continue the foreign-aid program. There were differences over details, but not partisan differences.

In the field of national defense, Congress went even further than the President had requested in making money available for our Armed Forces. We voted $900 million more than the administration asked for airpower. The Democrats are determined that America shall remain ahead of the Russians in the development of speedy long-range airplanes and ocean-spanning missiles.

The Democratic record in the field of domestic legislation was outstanding in the interests of the American people. We set in motion the greatest road-building program in history, a program providing for 41,000 miles of interstate highways to crisscross the Nation. We increased Federal contributions for all forms of roads, primary, secondary, and urban. The American motorist is now assured of having better, safer highways on which to satisfy his urge to go places and see things.

We extended and liberalized the social-security program by reducing the retirement age for women from 65 to 62 and providing for the payment of social insurance benefits to the disabled at age 50. We provided for an increase in old-age assistance payments of at least $5 per month where the States take advantage of the increase in Federal funds available.

I was sorely disappointed when the President vetoed the original farm bill passed by the Democratic Congress. We Democrats felt that by returning to 90-percent price supports on basic commodities, we would be guaranteeing the farmer an immediate increase in his purchasing power. The need for boosting farm income was so apparent that there seemed no justification for the attitude taken by the President and Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Benson.

However, we finally worked out a soil-bank program which will be beneficial to farmers in the long run, but we had a hard time selling even this program to the administration at the outset. Secretary Benson first rejected it, but he ultimately changed his mind when he saw the seriousness of the farmer revolt against the policies of the Republican administration. While the soil bank alone falls short of the well-rounded program the farmers have a right to expect, and while I am not satisfied with the way it has been administered with respect to the 1956 crop, it will be of some help. I believe it can and will be improved by a later Congress.

We raised the minimum wage from 75 cents to $1 an hour despite administration pressure to hold the line at 90 cents an hour. We provided the Federal authority necessary to aid private enterprise to meet the demand for new homes, and we made the money available to finance distribution of the marvelous new vaccine to combat infantile paralysis.

In the development of the Nation's natural resources, this Congress took many important steps forward. I was proud that we voted the money to get started on the big Arkansas Basin development program, a tremendous undertaking that will mean much in the industrial growth of eastern Oklahoma. Although the administration dragged its feet every inch of the way, we were able to get Congress to vote $1.5 million for getting construction underway on Eufaula Dam on the Canadian River.

As a matter of fact, a record number of public-works projects was approved by Congress for my congressional district in southeastern Oklahoma. I am delighted at the prospects for business activity which are bound to result from approval of these various projects.

The complete record of accomplishments by this Congress is much too long for me to attempt to cover in these remarks. Hundreds of beneficial measures were passed, and I note that even our Republican colleagues have conceded that we accomplished a great deal. I cannot conceive of anyone accusing the 84th Congress of being a do-nothing Congress, or of sustaining the charge that the Democratic Congress did not cooperate with the Republican President.

I personally am extremely disappointed that we failed to get through the 84th Congress the bill providing Federal aid for the construction of schools. I strongly favored this bill, and I regret very much that it became involved in the conflict of views over segregation. I regarded this as a completely extraneous issue, and it proved to be the vehicle through which Republican opponents of Federal aid to schools were able to kill the bill. Without the so-called Powell amendment attached to it, this bill would have been approved by the House and probably enacted into law. Republicans by a large majority voted for the Powell amendment, and then against the bill. They achieved a temporary victory, but I am confident that they will not be able to stymie this constructive legislation for very long.

In spite of what happened on these individual issues, I maintain that the overall record of this Congress is excellent. I think history will so show. I have no hesitation whatever in predicting that on the basis of the very fine record made by this Congress, Democrats will win control not only of Congress, but the White House, in the election next fall.

Fourth Anniversary of the Puerto Rican Constitution

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HERBERT H. LEHMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, July 25 was the fourth anniversary of the adoption of the Puerto Rican Constitution and as such it was observed in Puerto Rico and in many parts of the country as Puerto Rican Constitution Day. I composed some remarks on that day which I broadcast to Puerto Rico.

I ask unanimous consent that this comment on the significance of Puerto Rican Constitution Day be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the comment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS OF SENATOR HERBERT H. LEHMAN ON THE FOURTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ADOPTION OF THE PUERTO RICAN CONSTITUTION

It is with genuine pleasure that I join with the many other friends of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico in extending greetings on this, the fourth anniversary of the adoption of the Puerto Rican Constitution.

As we look back over the years since July 25, 1952, we can feel a justifiable sense of pride in the way in which the people of this new commonwealth have assumed the responsibilities of self-government with maturity, confidence, and wisdom. Its actions during this period justify in full the faith reposed in the people of Puerto Rico by the Congress of the United States in 1950 when the legislation which brought about this changed status was enacted. As we watch the course charted by the Puerto Rican Commonwealth, those of us who supported the enabling legislation in Congress—and I am proud to have been one of them—get the same feeling that comes to a person who finds a friend in whom he has reposed trust and confidence has justified that trust.

So it is with Puerto Rico. The Commonwealth has been blessed with able, vigorous and imaginative leadership, a leadership which has helped to steer the ship of state past the many difficulties which have confronted it. But the greatest credit is due, I believe, to the people of Puerto Rico who have been responsive to their leadership and who have above all shown a native stability, a fundamental good sense, and an inherent understanding of both the dangers and the possibilities of their new status.

As the people of Puerto Rico well know, their status as a Commonwealth is a novel one in American history. The relationship which was worked out is unprecedented. It was an experiment. It is a continuing experiment. Thus far the experiment has been a grand success.

For the most part the Commonwealth has wisely refrained from putting too great a strain on the new ties which bind Puerto Rico to and separate it from the mainland. A distinctiveness has been achieved without endangering the intimacy of the connection and association with the rest of the United States. It is a delicate relationship and has been delicately handled.

There are many hurdles yet to be overcome and many problems to be resolved. In my judgment, one of the goals of first importance is the elimination of the inequities and inequalities which still exist in the treatment accorded Puerto Rico by the Federal Government. I belive that the goal should be the treatment of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico on a par with the States in every respect. We are all American citizens and as such are equal before the law. The Federal law should make no distinction in the manner it treats American citizens, whether they live in Pennsylvania or Puerto Rico.

We must work to remove these inequities and discriminations. I am aware that this involves the solution of some very profound problems which will take time. It surely will require patience, good will, and cooperation among all of us.

I believe that we recently took a very significant step forward in this direction in our social-security legislation. The Congress is at the point of completing consideration of amendments to the Social Security Act. These amendments will, among other things, raise the limit of Federal contributions for public-assistance payments to Puerto Rico. This increase is in the neighborhood of a million dollars. The principle is as important as the amount of money. It represents progress toward the goal of equality.

This goal of equality must beckon us onward on this anniversary of the adoption of the Puerto Rican Constitution. Nor may we forget the broader goal—the advancement of the happiness and well-being of the people of Puerto Rico along with the similar advancement of their fellow American citizens on the mainland, and the dedication of all our common efforts to the achievement of a world order based on justice, security, and peace.

Aviation Hearings

OF

HON. GEORGE MEADER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MEADER. Mr. Speaker, the attention of the House should be called to what I regard as an outstanding investigation recently conducted by the Legal and Monetary Affairs Subcommittee of the House Government Operations Committee. That subcommittee is under the chairmanship of the Honorable ROBERT H. MOLLOHAN, Democrat, West Virginia, and is composed of the following members: JOHN A. BLATNIK, Democrat, Minnesota; JOE M. KILGORE, Democrat, Texas; MARTHA W. GRIFFITHS, Democrat, Michigan; EARL CHUDOFF, Democrat, Pennsylvania; GEORGE MEADER, Republican, Michigan; J. ARTHUR YOUNGER, Republican, California; and WILLIAM E. MINSHALL, Republican, Ohio.

Mr. Speaker, at my request, on February 22, 1956, the subcommittee voted to undertake an inquiry into the expenditure of Federal funds for the promotion and development of aviation facilities, including both the air navigational system and airports.

The staff of the committee, under the able leadership of our chief counsel, Jerome S. Plapinger, immediately began a preliminary study, including on-the-spot visits to traffic-control centers and extensive discussions with experts in all phases of aviation operations.

Hearings opened June 25, 1956, and were concluded July 20, 1956. We compiled 2,030 pages of stenographic transcript of testimony and received numerous exhibits. The committee heard experts, both in Government and in private industry, on various aspects of aviation problems. Witnesses included:

W. Barclay Harding, chairman, Aviation Facilities Safety Group.

N. E. Halaby, vice chairman, Aviation Facilities Safety Group.

Adm. Chase Rosendahl, retired, executive director, National Air Transport Coordinating Committee.

Clarence Sayen, president, Air Line Pilots Association.

Max Karant, vice president, Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association.

Warren Dickenson, executive engineer, Douglas Aircraft Co.

Matha Miller, supervisor, acoustics group, Douglas Aircraft Co.

M. L. Pennell, chief engineer, transport division, Boeing Aircraft Co.

Don Buck, engineering sales department, Boeing Aircraft Co.

Harry Howell, chief acoustics electrical unit, transport technical staff, Boeing Aircraft Co.

H. M. Conner, Washington representative, Lockheed Aircraft Co.

Carl Schmidt, airline operations engineer, Lockheed Aircraft Co.

J. F. Woodall, engineering department, acoustics, Convair division, General Dynamics.

Milton Arnold, vice president, operations, Air Transport Association.

Col. A. B. McMullen, secretary, National Association of State Aviation Officials.

Charles Parker, executive secretary, National Aviation Transport Association.

Charles J. Lowen, Administrator, Civil Aeronautics Administration.

James Pyle, Deputy Administrator, Civil Aeronautics Administration.

Herbert Howell, Director, Office of Airports, Civil Aeronautics Administration.

Joseph Blatt, director, program planning, Civil Aeronautics Administration.

Joseph Tippetts, Director, Office of Federal Airways, Civil Aeronautics Administration.

David Thomas, Director, Office of Air Traffic Control, Civil Aeronautics Administration.

Fred Davis, Director, Office of Aviation Safety, Civil Aeronautics Administration.

Robert Gale, Deputy Director, Office of Air Traffic Control, Civil Aeronautics Administration.

Maj. Gen. Kenneth P. Bergquist, Air Force, assisted by Colonels Conklin, Frizen, Dougherty, Kelly, and Lightner, and Elmo Ceconi, and Donald Mack.

Hon. Louis Rothschild, Undersecretary of Commerce for Transportation.

Edward P. Curtis, Special Assistant to the President for Aviation Facilities Planning.

Robert J. Wilson, vice president, Capital Airlines.

William M. Joy, commissioner of aviation, Detroit, Mich.

Cass Hough, former chairman, Michigan Aeronautics Commission.

C. V. Burnett, director, Detroit Aviation Commission.

John P. McElroy, member, Michigan Aeronautics Commission; director of personnel, Wayne County Road Commission.

John Witherspoon, city comptroller, Detroit, Mich.

Robert Miller, president, Airlines National Terminal Service Co., Inc.

Edmund A. Cummiskey, attorney, University of Michigan.

Floyd Wakefield, airport supervisor, University of Michigan.

Karl Cousino, representing Warren Township.

Arthur Miller, representing Warren Township.

Brig. Gen. Lester J. Maitland, counsel, Michigan Aviation Commission.

Paul Morris, Civil Aeronautics Administration member, Airport Use Panel.

Joseph Johnson, secretary, Airport Use Panel.

Hon. JOHN LESINSKI, Democrat, of Michigan.

Cole Morrow, National Business Aircraft Association.

James Durfee, Chairman, Civil Aeronautics Board.

Joseph P. Adams, member, Civil Aeronautics Board.

Joseph Minetti, member, Civil Aeronautics Board.

Franklin Stone, General Counsel, Civil Aeronautics Board.

Oscar Bakke, Deputy Director, Bureau of Safety Regulation.

Ben Ashmead, Chief of Analysis Division, Bureau of Safety Investigation.

Mr. Speaker, I have had some familiarity with the conduct of congressional investigations, not alone through my service on the Government Operations Committee in three terms in the House of Representatives, but prior to that time as counsel for the Senate War Investigating Committee, from 1943 to 1947, and as counsel for the Fulbright Subcommittee of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee investigating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in 1950. It is my considered opinion that the conduct of the hearings of the Mollohan committee on aviation problems and the report which was expeditiously drafted, not only reflect credit on the Government Operations Committee of the House of Representatives but that the evidence accumulated and the opinions the committee expressed will for some time to come constitute a landmark in aviation history.

Mr. Speaker, my opinion of the quality of those hearings was fortified by the comment of a member of the press who attended every session of the committee's hearings. In noting that he had been following aviation hearings for 23 years, he observed that the hearings of the Mollohan committee were more complete and more impartial and conducted on a higher level than any he had witnessed before.

I want to commend especially my chairman, Mr. MOLLOHAN, who is terminating his service in the House of Representatives, and our counsel, Jerome S. Plapinger, for a job well done. The report of the Mollohan subcommittee on its aviation hearings was unanimously approved by the subcommittee on July 23, 1956, and unanimously adopted as the report of the House Government Operations Committee on July 25, 1956.

Based upon an excellent and complete record of fact and expert opinion, the report of the Mollohan committee expresses a judicious and informed concern over the failure of the Government to provide the leadership and support which our important aviation industry, both military and civilian flying, requires under modern conditions. At this point in my remarks, I insert the statement of the chairman of the subcommittee and the subcommittee's conclusions:

[From the Washington Office of Representative ROBERT H. MOLLOHAN, Democrat, of West Virginia, chairman of the Legal and Monetary Affairs Subcommittee, House Government Operations Committee, Friday, July 27, 1956]

A House Government operations subcommittee today called for drastic reorganization of Federal aviation agencies as part of an eight-point program to meet the soaring growth of United States aviation.

Subcommittee Chairman ROBERT H. MOLLOHAN, Democrat, of West Virginia, said the recommendations climaxed 4 weeks of hearings, including testimony covering the mid-air collision of 2 airliners over Grand Canyon, June 30, which killed 128 persons.

Other subcommittee recommendations:

A speedup of studies underway by Presidential Aviation Adviser Edward P. Curtis, himself looking into reorganization of Government aviation agencies.

An end to Civil Aeronautics Board and Federal Communications Commission membership on the Air Coordinating Committee, a body composed of Federal agencies, boards, and commissions created by Presidential order to resolve aviation disputes within the executive branch of Government.

The subcommittee said that "the continued membership in the Air Coordinating Committee by these regulatory bodies represents an undermining by the executive branch of the careful standards and safeguards of administrative law procedures prescribed by the Congress in creating both the Federal Communications Commission and the Civil Aeronautics Board."

Clarification of the Air Coordinating Committee's role in aviation policy determination.

An end to military predominance on the ACC.

Acceleration of the so-called 5-year Federal airways plan of the Civil Aeronautics Administration to modernize United States air navigational facilities.

An end to the VOR/DME-TACAN impasse, a dispute between civil and military agencies over two types of navigational aids.

An automatic review of air traffic-control problems before approval of site locations for new airports.

MOLLOHAN said the hearings, held by the Legal and Monetary Affairs Subcommittee of the House Government Operations Committee, indicated confusion among Federal agencies administering United States air programs and added: "Direction must be substituted for coordination."

The West Virginia lawmaker said his subcommittee declined at this time to report to the full committee a bill calling for a commission study of United States aviation introduced by Representative GEORGE MEADER, Republican, of Michigan.

The subcommittee indicated approval of congressional and industry participation in such a study and promised to follow closely the progress of the Curtis study. It was MEADER, MOLLOHAN said, who first asked hearings before his subcommittee.

The report expressed concern over what it called the limited budget of $150,000 granted the Curtis study group and urged that the study be accelerated.

Curtis, with a staff of 3 and grants from the Defense and Commerce Departments of $300,000 to pay for study contracts by outside firms and organizations, was appointed as a result of the Harding report to the Budget Bureau which last year counted 75 agencies, boards, bureaus, and committees attempting to administer and control American aviation.

It likened Curtis' limited budget and staff as driving a spike with a tack hammer.

The report pictured growth of American aviation as miraculous and almost beyond human comprehension, and noted that passenger use alone of commercial airlines nearly tripled in the 7-year period between 1947 and 1955.

The subcommittee also took to task membership of the Civil Aeronautics Board and the Federal Communications Commission on the Air Coordinating Committee, created merely by Executive order in 1946. Its report described their continued membership on the Air Coordinating Committee as representing "an undermining by the executive branch [of the Government] of the careful standards and safeguards of administrative law procedures prescribed by the Congress in creating both the Federal Communications Commission and the Civil Aeronautics Board."

Both agencies were established by law as quasi-judicial, quasi-legislative regulatory bodies. Yet a CAB member testified the Board is bound through its membership on the ACC to its decisions and recommendations.

The report noted specifically that the ACC has no statutory authority to make decisions and added:

"Coordination by means of Executive order must not be used to nullify congressional enactment."

Also attacked was apparent predominance of military membership on the Air Coordinating Committee. Noted were appearances on working panels of the ACC of separate representatives of the Army, Navy, and the Air Force as well as the Department of Defense. In the case of the Airport Use Panel of the ACC, said the report, membership was divided 4 for military and 2 for civilian representatives.

But the report noted also that the CAA is not a member of the parent Air Coordinating Committee in its own right.

The subcommittee also commended the President's recent request for appropriation of an additional $68 million to speed up the CAA's 5-year airways plan. It noted CAA officials' testimony that with additional money the 5-year plan could be completed in 3 years.

The VOR/DME-TACAN controversy between two types of navigational aids also was a target of committee fire. Testimony indicated military preference for the TACAN type of aid while the CAA offered continued prefence for the VOR/DME type.

Added the report:

"Valuable time already lost can never be recaptured and little excuse exists for further procrastination in this matter."

The report also recommended automatic review of air-traffic-control problems within the Civil Aeronautics Administration before allocating funds for airports.

A specific example, said the report, was the proposed Northeast Airport at Detroit where, testimony indicated, Detroiters were permitted to continue spending their money on the Northeast site without a determination by the CAA whether traffic-control complications would preclude its maintaining a traffic pattern independent of air traffic of airports in the Detroit metropolitan area.

Detroit officials said they first learned of CAA views on traffic complications during hearings held by the subcommittee.

A Stronger America

OF
HON. THOMAS H. KUCHEL
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement prepared by me on the 84th Congress.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A STRONGER AMERICA

Mr. President, as the 84th Congress moves into history, the people of our Nation may now assess its progress, measure its failures, and—come November—prepare their own decision on American government for the years ahead.

We are a nation of free peoples, unfailingly determined to maintain our freedom and to advance the cause of a just peace in the world. In exercising that determination, our Federal Government will be judged by our people in varying ways and differing opinions, brought about, I suppose, by different interpretation of facts, by differing capacities to judge, by sectional background, and, sometimes, by narrow partisanship.

But we are all in the same boat together. The problems which face us and our children affect all of us, and will affect all of us, in precisely the same manner, no matter whether or how they may be solved. The gravest menace to free peoples, here and elsewhere, is international communism, and its constant threat of aggression. That threat falls equally on all of us whether we are Republicans or Democrats, and whether we live in New York, Illinois, Florida, or California. That threat remains, despite the change in the Soviet approach which has tended to play down the danger of the Communist menace to freedom and which, alas, has been a narcotic to some Americans.

Earlier this year, the Chairman of our Joint Chiefs of Staff, Admiral Radford, warning against the continuing menace of communism, said, "We should not now be lulled into complacency." There, indeed, is the lurking danger to the spirit of our people. The President has referred to the Soviet policy of "zig and zag." So it is. This Nation and all our people must be awake to the dark menace of slave government which frankly confesses that world domination continues to be its goal.

History will give great credit to the 84th Congress for working in almost complete unison with the executive branch of our Government in facilitating a more dynamic approach to our problems in this all-important field.

To be sure, there have been areas of disagreement. Congress and the Executive share this high responsibility. But it is fair to say they have not been partisan in nature. Foreign policy decisions in this body have been registered by bipartisan majorities on the basis of what is best for all the people of the United States.

In the closely related field of American defense, I have approved, with my vote, President Eisenhower's overall program. Carefully continued, it represents the considered opinions of our military leaders, concurred in by the Chief Executive, himself preeminently skilled in this field.

Here is the judgment of Admiral Radford on the 1956 recommendations, who told me, a short while ago, it is precisely his view now:

"I feel as of today that we are better prepared to meet an emergency than we ever have been during my service in the Armed Forces. We have a flexible combination of land, sea, and air forces with a wide variety of weapons and capabilities, including nuclear, which in my opinion is fully adequate for the security of the United States. We have strategic air forces and carrier task forces which are unmatched by any other nation. We have modern jet tactical air forces which can carry either high explosives or atomic bombs, depending on what the target requires. We have Army and Marine Corps ground forces consisting of well over a million men.

"In fact, the United States forces we plan to maintain are the most powerful, individually by service and collectively as a team, that our Nation has ever undertaken to maintain during a period when we were not actually engaged in a shooting war. These forces are fully adequate to perform all essential tasks in the initial stages of a shooting war, global or otherwise, and they constitute an ample base which will permit a rapid and orderly buildup when and if that should become necessary."

Our country enjoys a great prosperity. More people are gainfully employed today than ever before. The total income of American families reached a record high of $288 billion last year. The increase in the number of business concerns last year was larger than any year since 1948. Farm prices have recovered from last winter's low levels. Our Government this past year has lived within its revenues for the first time in several years, despite two tax reductions.

I do not want to paint too rosy a picture. But I can truthfully observe that we're in pretty good shape here at home, and we intend to keep it that way.

OUR NATION STRENGTHENED

Looking at the domestic scene closer, the roots of our American economy have been fertilized and fed by several significant actions of this Congress. The session just ended brightened the prospects for happiness, security, health, and opportunity for the future of generations now alive and others yet to be born.

Although our record of legislative achievement could have been better and more substantial in several respects, the United States is in a stronger position, as a consequence of measures enacted in 1956, to contribute the leadership for which the free world looks to our Nation.

Among the more progressive and constructive pieces of legislation enacted by the 84th Congress in its 2d session are:

The soil-bank program, which will conserve irreplaceable resources while supplying a solid floor under our agriculture.

Generous appropriations for the utilization and protection of other natural resources, including water, timber, minerals, and campgrounds.

The most ambitious and worthwhile highway program ever conceived.

Liberal support for the Armed Forces and their personnel, including new and expanded installations for greater security of America.

More realistic benefits for veterans and the aged, disabled, and needy Americans who must look to the social-security system for much of their sustenance.

Continuation of Federal financial aid to school districts plagued by phenomenal population growth directly due to Federal activities.

Through all of these measures, broad in scope and effect, the constantly growing State of California will be aided and benefited.

In a number of other instances, this administration and this Congress have been of further specific assistance to the State of which I am a Native Son. Our California people readily and willingly assume their obligations, as a member of our Union, to work in partnership with the National Government and will perform their duties so that a wholesome atmosphere of democracy and opportunity will be waiting for our children and our children's children.

For the very definite advantage of my home State, the Congress voted substantial sums of money and took other actions to rehabilitate both the areas and the unfortunate individuals heavily damaged by last winter's unseasonal and uncontrollable storms. I am grateful, and I assure my colleagues that the people of California feel warm appreciation, that the administration, in response to appeals which I submitted to the Corps of Engineers, the Bureau of Reclamation, and the Bureau of the Budget, realistically increased appropriation requests so that work on authorized projects can be accelerated, long-planned but unstarted projects can be initiated, and surveys and examinations, vital for the safety of mushrooming communities, can be undertaken.

WATER PROBLEMS RECOGNIZED

The recognition by this Congress of the duty to cooperate with State and local agencies in solving water problems—from both excesses and deficits of water—is a major development which will strengthen America. All of the legislation of particular aid to California accords entirely with Federal policy and precedents. In virtually every instance our people will be carrying a considerable burden in the form of cash contributions to eventual realization of long-standing plans. Without hesitation I declare the appropriations made this year will yield hearty dividends through conservation and better use of often-scarce water as well as through averting future tragedy and economic loss from excessive rainfall and snowmelt.

A prime example of the benefits for the Nation, as well as for my State, is given by the Ventura project, now being built under terms of Public Law 423, which I had the opportunity to introduce. Besides authorizing this $26,750,000 undertaking, almost every cent of which will be repaid to the Federal Treasury, the Congress saw the need for speedy construction and provided $6,400,000 to get work going without delay. The schedule, thanks to the very material amount of money now available, will make possible impounding of water beginning in 1959. The project will firm up supplies for a thriving industrial, chemical-producing, and oil-refining city, and will facilitate production in the surrounding area of widely desired specialty crops of fruits, nuts, and vegetables.

The new water pollution law, of which I was a cosponsor, gives valuable added weapons for Federal and other agencies endeavoring to clean up our streams, counter the mounting demand for waste disposal facilities, and offset the occasional deficiencies of nature. I was happy to have this Congress vote promptly money to carry out the program contemplated by the legislation which I participated in framing as a member of the Public Works Committee.

Continuance of the dramatic program of investigating possibilities of influencing weather by chemical and mechanical means is another commendable achievement which can enrich the lives of people across our land. Further potential relief for critical areas of the Nation seems likely from continuing research into methods of converting saline water into fresh. Because I thoroughly appreciate the precious worth of water for farms, for industries, and for homes, I cosponsored the legislation relating to both projects in the confidence that our expenditures will produce a return of real value to agriculture, industry, and many other groups in our society.

The happiness, and I feel sure, the health of Americans in scores of sections will be promoted through the recent appropriation of the largest sum ever provided by Congress to track down and eventually, I trust, extinguish a relatively new menace, smog.

To carry on the research and experimental work being done under the law which I had the honor to author last year, the present Congress has voted an unprecedented $2,740,000 for the current fiscal year. With these funds, chemists, biologists, engineers, and meteorologists, among other scientists, will pursue lines of inquiry which may enable bedeviled communities to cleanse the air our people, their animals, and plants must have for existence.

SMOG MENACE ATTACKED

As a result of the enactment of the Kuchel Air Pollution Act by the first session of this Congress, the United States Public Health Service has initiated a far-reaching program of research, technical assistance, and training in the field of community air pollution. This is the first nationwide attack on the serious and spreading problem of smog, fumes, and irritants. With the $1,785,000 provided for the last fiscal year, inquiry into engineering, physical science, and health aspects of air pollution was started within laboratories of the Health Service, Weather Bureau, Bureau of Mines, and Bureau of Standards. Supplementing these agencies, an increasing number of investigators, supported financially by research grants at universities and scientific institutions throughout the country, are attacking the mysteries and troubles on the local scene.

More than 250 requests for field assistance have been received from State and local air pollution control agencies and the Public Health Service is endeavoring to meet as many of these requests as possible. Technical training courses are now being developed at the Taft Center in Cincinnati for operating personnel of these agencies and a field station is due for Los Angeles in the near future. With the $955,000 increase in appropriations for the current year, expansion of these promising activities is planned, together with the launching of grants-in-aid to States and communities for training and demonstration projects.

With some of the most varied terrain and climatic conditions which can be found on our continent, California lamentably suffers from time to time from excesses of rainfall and snowfall just as some parched regions unceasingly struggle to obtain sufficient water supplies. Therefore, I point out gratefully that this Congress not only moved speedily and promptly to relieve and repair damage inflicted last winter but imaginatively acted to afford long-range protection for our people against floods.

FORCES OF NATURE CHALLENGED

The 1956 omnibus flood-control, rivers and harbors, beach erosion bill is a case in point, a cheering illustration of the way forces of Federal, State, and local governments can be marshalled for a concerted attack on a problem too large for the residents of any affected area to solve on their own. I note particularly the authorization for investigations into and reports on the flood danger and means of counteracting it in the Sacramento River basin and on assorted streams such as Pescadero Creek, San Gregorio Creek, Redwood Creek, in South San Francisco, near Burlingame, and in Contra Costa County.

Additional flood-prevention works, safeguarding areas not yet protected by the many structures and controls in existence or under construction, would be authorized for some hard-pressed sections of California. Among worthwhile undertakings included for future building with Federal funds are Buchanan and Hidden Reservoirs in the San Joaquin Basin, on the Sacramento River between Chico Landing and Red Bluff, on the Eel, Kaweah, Tule, and Feather Rivers. A conspicuous instance of Federal willingness to be partners with the States and local agencies is the projected multipurpose Oroville Dam to be built on the last-named stream. The principle that the National Government should aid with cash contributions measured by the degree of flood protection provided by such structures is sound and should be carried further in succeeding sessions of Congress.

PROTECTION FOR THE FUTURE

I was especially happy to have opportunities to speak and vote for the measure setting up a system of disaster insurance. By this legislation finally approved just before adjournment, Congress took a definite step forward in safeguarding our people against painful losses from forces mankind cannot control. I anticipate this statute will be considered a milestone when the Federal Government joins hands with forward-looking private enterprise and with the States in affording all endangered Americans a chance to indemnify themselves against possible catastrophic losses of homes and other possessions through rampages of nature.

The new law, of which I was a cosponsor, allowing the Army engineers discretionary funds to construct small flood-prevention works, is an undeniable contribution toward a stronger America. We provided a flexible tool with which this alert and determined branch of the Army can supplement the major projects which rightly must be specifically and individually authorized by statute. Certainly an expenditure of up to $10 million annually for debris basins, retarding dams, and channels on tributary streams and in isolated canyons costing up to $400,000 apiece will be a prudent use of the people's money for the people's welfare. The tremendous benefits from this type of undertaking already have been demonstrated in Los Angeles County, where funds I asked the Senate to approve have financed a number of such developments.

The provision of money to replenish the disaster loan fund and the emergency highway repair fund was another related and necessary move by this Congress. Californians in more than a dozen counties will be aided in rebuilding after the violence wreaked on the northern and central sections of our State only a few months ago.

The philosophy that the National Government must aid the people in tasks which are too heavy for single communities or loosely knit groups has been demonstrated significantly in the increased appropriations for forest-fire suppression and prevention, for which the Senate was notably generous in responding to an appeal I helped present. I cannot even hazard a guess at the number of our citizens who also will be grateful for the increased funds to carry out programs providing more campgrounds, highways, museums, public utilities, and other urgent facilities in our remarkable national parks and national forests.

By voting nearly $10 million over prior year levels, this Congress gave real impetus to the Mission 66 program in the park system, which embraces such a large amount of land in my State. And boosting by nearly $1 million the allotment for national forest facilities, we have started chopping away at the backlog of demands from millions of persons who derive pleasure and inspiration from these spectacular reservations, many of which are in California.

From a materialistic point of view, Californians also feel a debt to this Congress for substantial appropriations for this fiscal year, including more than $8 million to improve rivers and harbors and beaches, well over $55 million to further our irrigation and reclamation projects, and for nearly $32,500,000 to prosecute essential flood-control construction. An item of nearly $800,000 to conduct water surveys in our bountiful central valleys will lay a foundation for planning that in time will mean the most beneficial and fruitful utilization of land and water, the averting of shortages that could seriously retard our growth, and industrial expansion that invigorates the national, as well as the State, economy.

FARMERS, WORKERS, AND INDUSTRIES HELPED

California farmers, like the men and women elsewhere whose livelihood comes from agriculture, agree that the new farm law is a sound move toward a solution of the problem which has perplexed and burdened many segments of our Nation during recent years. The reassurance already is being noted, as witness the reports of tremendous numbers of farmers signing up to participate in this forward-looking program. When the normal influences of supply and demand have maximum latitude to operate and when the soil bank is functioning as intended, we should be able to glimpse an end of price-depressing surpluses that have been such a painful financial drain and deterrent to individual initiative.

One branch of our unique California agriculture will profit in particular from constructive efforts of the Congress to assist our people. By exempting fruits and specialty crops from requirements of the Cargo Preference Act, we have thrown open new doors to potential markets abroad. Although a confirmed believer in the so-called 50–50 law designed to bolster America's indispensable merchant marine, I believe this waiver on behalf of growers of citrus, grapes, and other fruits was a warranted exception from that fundamentally wise requirement that half of our Government-financed surpluses going abroad should move in American-flag vessels.

The farm problem in several respects highlights the importance and effect of our trade policies. I maintain that our trade-relations legislation should not be employed to damage any segment of our economy. That is why I was so determined to have this Congress enact comprehensive fisheries legislation. That is why I have been pressing upon our executive branch the fact that administrative action is imperative to assure our fruitgrowers, particularly those raising figs and dates, a fair share of their home markets.

The fisheries legislation will be regarded in the future as a distinct advance in the way of assuring sound and coordinated policies affecting both a vital industry and millions of Americans who turn to our streams and lakes, our shorelines, and coastal waters for recreation and relaxation. In a commendable spirit of compromise, the Congress recognized the seriousness of the problem affecting our offshore commercial fisheries and composed differences between those who fish for sport and pleasure and those whose sustenance comes from the sea.

The record of this Congress for labor and for education is not too gratifying. I was glad to have a hand in obtaining more funds for railway safety, which will benefit workers and travelers alike on our railroad system and to vote for extension of the law that enables the Federal Government to share the burden of maintaining and building schools in communities where the school population has jumped astoundingly because of Federal activities. The latter assistance is of particular importance to my State, because California has 501 Federal properties officially classified as causing impact on local governments and 326 districts last year obtained aid for operations while 147 were assured funds for new buildings.

The past session saw marked and encouraging progress in launching a coast-to-coast program of urgent Federal construction under the Lease-Purchase Act which I had the opportunity of helping to write and manage in the 83d Congress. Besides assuring California of 3 desperately needed multipurpose structures in Los Angeles, San Francisco, and Sacramento and 2 much-wanted post offices in National City and Bellflower, this novel means of providing quarters for Federal agencies will provide a great amount of employment and put tremendous sums of money in circulation in communities all over the Nation. Plans are in preparation for other cities in California and across the country.

The scope of this effort is difficult to conjecture but is hinted by the fact that the Senate Public Works Committee, of which I am a member, approved 120 separate projects costing in excess of $638 million in the session just finished. The 5 California projects will entail an expenditure of nearly $87 million.

The sympathetic understanding of Congress for the troubles and ordeals of a unique American industry which has its roots in California resulted in agreement that the war-inspired admissions tax is punitive to motion-picture exhibitors, producers, and patrons. With owners of approximately 5,000 theaters just keeping heads above water and a shocking number still operating at a loss, it was just and fitting that Congress should waive the 10-percent levy on tickets costing under 90 cents. This relief, as pointed out to the Finance Committee, will mean also greater amusement and entertainment opportunities to immense numbers of families who must figure closely where their dollars are spent.

Another important and distressed California industry—ship building and repair—received encouragement from two actions in this last session; extension for 2 more years of the Emergency Ship Repair Act, which I cosponsored, and enactment of the measures requiring periodic inspection of shipyards to determine their defense capabilities will strengthen an indispensable feature of our fourth line of national defense.

California shipyards were invaluable in creating the bridge of vessels which contributed spectacularly to victory in World War II. They must not be allowed to wither away and expire.

By authorizing further modernization of ships in our mothball fleet, the Congress assured that a nucleus of trained labor can be kept employed at some California establishments. The new statute relating to industrial capability provides for allocation of work in a fashion which will make certain of an adequate mobilization base at strategic points in the country for national defense purposes or in event of a national emergency. Thus, I feel confident, responsible officials in the executive branch of the Government will follow a course designed to maintain the skills and facilities that are essential to the operation of the American merchant marine and the United States Navy.

There was one very distressing action by this Congress, the adoption of the loosely worded and ill-conceived dispersal amendment to the measure extending our Defense Production Act. I resisted this hastily presented declaration to the best of my ability, although I do not have—nor can any patriotic, thinking American—any objection to a sound policy that makes sure all our defense eggs are not in one vulnerable basket.

I intend to see that California is treated equitably and with understanding, because the industry in existence will be indispensable in event this Nation is assaulted by a hostile power. Authorities in the executive branch have stated this unfortunate legislation will not be interpreted in a manner inimical to our industry and that the application of the policy will not preclude establishment in our State of new enterprises such as the $40 million guided missile plant recently authorized to be erected on the outskirts of San Diego.

The time-tested social-security system has been expanded and improved, as have the laws affecting Federal employees. By raising the floor under old-age assistance, through increased Federal contributions, this Congress assured immediate benefits to elderly citizens grappling with the cost of living, and I was proud to join in pushing the amendment which finally was enacted. I am glad to say that Congress overwhelmingly adopted new proposals providing assistance to the disabled, and enabling women to begin receiving at the age of 62 the pensions toward which they have contributed. The Federal employees retirement benefits law, along with the measure protecting persons in the classified service against salary cuts in cases where jobs are realined through no fault of their own, will make public service more attractive and protect the 230,000 loyal Government workers who reside in California. These benefits bring our Government personnel system closer to what private industry provides for its employees.

BETTER HIGHWAYS IN VIEW

While recognition of the importance and complexity of water problems is a conspicuous achievement, the past session of Congress enacted another salutary and notable measure in launching the 13-year highway construction and modernization program.

On previous occasions I expressed grave concern about costly delay in tackling the pressing problem of inadequate highways. Because I have shuddered repeatedly at the toll of deaths and injuries and because I cannot tolerate the shameful wastes of time and money due to congestion and outmoded roads, enactment of the 1956 highway law gives me much satisfaction.

The significance of highway modernization is obvious when one considers that California's area is virtually equivalent to the stretch of Atlantic seaboard between Massachusetts and South Carolina. Our farflung communities, divided into distinct basins by mountains and other topographical features, are linked in hosts of cases only by the paved road and the motor vehicle.

A Federal contribution of $268 million over the next 3 years for our interstate routes will go far toward setting in motion the men and machines which will straighten and widen and otherwise improve essential arteries of communication and transportation. With the increased Federal aid toward the cost of the Interstate System, California will be enabled to channel more of its revenues to other categories of highways that cannot longer be neglected and ignored.

I am convinced the only effective and prudent way to distribute Federal financial aid to the States is on the basis of measured and weighed need. That is why I originally supported President Eisenhower's proposal and why I voted against the Gore bill which, happily, the Congress rejected almost in entirety. The stopgap scheme for apportioning these moneys for the first 3 years can be tolerated because many States will require that much time to complete preliminaries, such as land acquisition and blueprinting. When a subsequent Congress gets this pay-as-you-ride program on the sound principle of demonstrated need, we can expect fast progress toward the kind of highway system our Nation must have for its security, prosperity, and happiness.

The requirement that the States adhere to the prevailing wage for workers on federally assisted projects is a wise precaution. Although some in our population condemn this principle, I enthusiastically joined in pushing the idea of applying the Bacon-Davis Act because I want labor and contractors alike protected against sweatshop working conditions and cutthroat competitors. Just as a laborer is worthy of his hire, so a conscientious contractor is entitled to equality of opportunity and knowledge that his rival must use the same yardstick in estimating costs.

A FEW DISAPPOINTMENTS

While I see much in the record of 1956 legislative achievement to cite with pride and satisfaction, the Congress just concluded must acknowledge it let down the American people in several disheartening instances.

I must and do earnestly deplore the refusal to enact a code of fair procedure for committee investigations and hearings. The resolution which I had the honor of cosponsoring to safeguard witnesses and innocent third parties regrettably died without even a cursory hearing by the Committee on Rules and Administration, despite promises and pledges that such a reform as a set of fair and realistic rules would be one of the first accomplishments of the 84th Congress. I beseech those who have the responsibility of leadership in the 85th Congress to discharge the obligation to provide guaranties against character assassination, destruction of reputations, browbeating, and unjust accusation.

The bottling up of civil-rights legislation, the bald refusal to even take testimony on measures which I and others put forward to promote the interests and maintain the dignity of minority groups of our population, is a great disappointment. Who can deny that the unrestricted right to vote, the privilege of invoking laws which are intended to protect each and every citizen, the sanctity of our democratic traditions should not be bulwarked by measures such as President Eisenhower advocated and numerous of us have introduced?

The continued degrading of Hawaii and Alaska, held forcibly in second-class citizenship because of partisan jealousy, is a cause for shame in looking back over the record of 1955 and 1956. With both parties committed to recognize these Territories as equals with the established States of our Union, there can be no convincing apology for the failure to enact statehood legislation for the loyal, hard-working residents of our mid-Pacific and Arctic possessions.

Realistic appreciation of the dire shortage of educational facilities is an undischarged debt and at the same time an inescapable duty awaiting the next Congress. Refusal to equip heavily burdened communities to supply the opportunity for the finest schooling to which every American child is entitled hardly can be a source of gratification to the membership of the 84th Congress. I sincerely trust that a year hence bipartisanship and true devotion to America and our future citizens will enable the 85th Congress to rise above the pettiness and jealousy that prevented enactment of a worthwhile program for Federal assistance in school construction and instruction.

GOING FORWARD RESOLUTELY

The unprecedented prosperity and the feeling of faith in the future which are America's fortunate lot have been bolstered and sustained by the labors of the 84th Congress. Despite occasional dark spots in our domestic economy and some ominous clouds on the foreign horizon, the conclusion of the 1956 session finds the United States proceeding boldly and confidently toward the objective of stable peace, pursuing the goal of unconquerable democracy, and maintaining a genuine appreciation of man's individuality and innate dignity.

The Hoover Commission Recommendations and the 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. H. ALEXANDER SMITH
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement by me on the Hoover Commission recommendations and the 84th Congress.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It has now been over a year since the Second Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch, the Second Hoover Commission, held its last meeting. After 2 years of intensive examination of the Federal Government, the Hoover Commission reported to the Congress on 20 different areas of governmental activity and made some 314 recommendations for increasing efficiency, economy and rational operation of the Government. Of the recommendations of the Hoover Commission, some 167 individual recommendations required action by the Congress before they could be put into effect.

As one who undertook to introduce various bills to implement the Hoover Commission recommendations, I feel it is timely upon the close of the 84th Congress to consider the progress, or lack of it, which Congress has made toward implementing these recommendations. It should be remembered that the scope of the Second Commission's inquiry far exceeded that of the First Hoover Commission and delved into the realm of policy matters by considering whether certain functions should be continued to be performed by the Federal Government at all, rather than just the most efficient manner in which such services could be rendered. As a result many of the Second Commission's recommendations were highly controversial.

Nevertheless, there has been substantial consideration of some of the Commission's recommendations, particularly by the Subcommittee on Reorganization of the Government Operations Committee, under the able chairmanship of the distinguished junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY]. Elsewhere in the RECORD, Senator KENNEDY has outlined the endeavors of that subcommittee with the Hoover Commission recommendations, and the following summary of the positive enactments of the 84th Congress in implementing the Hoover Commission recommendations includes those bills considered by his subcommittee, as well as those of other committees:

ACTION OF 84TH CONGRESS IMPLEMENTING SECOND HOOVER COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

I. General

A. Extension of President's authority under the Reorganization Act to present reorganization plans to Congress to June 1, 1957. Public Law 16, March 25, 1955.

II. Personnel and civil service

A. Pay increases for heads and assistant heads of the executive departments and independent agencies (recommendation 4). Public Law 854, July 31, 1956.

B. Classification of Postal Employees (recommendation 8B). Public Law 68, June 10, 1955.

III. Paperwork management

A. Simplified computation of charges imposed on departments and agencies for the use of the United States mail (task force recommendation 16). Public Law 705, July 14, 1956.

IV. Federal medical services

A. Establishment of a National Library of Medicine (recommendation 23), S. 3430. Sent to President July 24, 1956.

B. Increased pay and retirement benefits for doctors and dentists in the Armed Forces, reducing need to draft doctors (recommendation 4). Public Law 497, April 30, 1956.

C. Clarification of veterans' privileges for dental care, limiting it to service-connected conditions (recommendation 7). Public Law 83, June 16, 1955.

D. Provision of medical and hospital care for Armed Forces dependents through insurance (recommendation 21). Public Law 569, June 7, 1956.

E. Authorization for Surgeon General to make grants for a program of research on mental illness (recommendation 27, in part). Public Law 182, July 28, 1955.

F. Development of improved methods of care, treatment, and rehabilitation of mentally ill (recommendation 27, in part), S. 3958. Sent to President July 24, 1956.

V. Lending agencies

A. Separation of Home Loan Bank System from the Housing and Home Finance Agency (recommendation 9). Public Law 345, August 11, 1955.

B. Extension of direct loans to veterans for housing until July 25, 1957. Public Law 88, June 21, 1955.

C. Increased rate of retirement of Government capital in certain institutions (including banks for cooperatives) operating under supervision of the Federal Farm Credit System (recommendation 22). Public Law 347, August 11, 1955.

D. Encouragement of liquidation of Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation (recommendation 28, in part). Public Law 55, June 1, 1955.

E. Extension of Small Business Administration for 2 years (recommendation 39b). Public Law 268, August 9, 1955.

F. Merger of Production Credit Corporation in Federal intermediate credit banks and provision for return of the Government's investment in such banks (recommendations 24, 25), H. R. 10285. Sent to President July 16, 1956.

VI. Transportation

A. Authorized the armed services to use private ships wherever possible in transporting people and cargoes (recommendations 7 and 10). Public Law 538, May 28, 1956.

B. Revision of storage provisions for household goods of members of the Armed Forces (recommendation 2). Public Law 245, August 5, 1955.

VII. Surplus property

A. Revision of program of donation or surplus property for educational and public health purposes (recommendations 8a, 8d, and 9). Public Law 61, June 3, 1955.

B. Authorization of donation of surplus property for civil defense purposes (recommendation 9). Public Law 655, July 3, 1956.

C. Extension of authorization to dispose of surplus property by negotiation to July 31, 1958 (recommendation 17), H. R. 7855. Sent to President, July 25, 1956.

VIII. Business enterprises

A. Authorization for leasing of Alaska Railroad (recommendation 13b). Public Law 232, August 4, 1955.

IX. Depot utilization

A. Revision of nontemporary storage of baggage and household effects (recommendation 2a, in part). Public Law 245, August 5, 1955.

X. Research and development

A. Increased compensation for top research personnel in certain Federal agencies (recommendation 1). Incorporated in Public Law 854, July 31, 1956.

XI. Budget and accounting

A. Establishment of cost-based accounting and budgeting in the executive departments (recommendations 2, 4, 5, 6, 13, and 14), S. 3897. Sent to President July 25, 1956.

B. Simplification of accounting and procedures for the settlement of claims against lapsed appropriations. Public Law 793, July 25, 1956.

C. Relief of certain officers of financial liability, not due to fraud or gross negligence, to reduce the volume of claims to the General Accounting Office (recommendation 19, in part). Public Law 365, August 11, 1955; Public Law 334, August 9, 1955.

D. Establishment of a Staff Office of Accounting in the Bureau of the Budget, headed by an Assistant Director of Accounting (recommendation 10). Senate Joint Resolution 199 sent to President July 27, 1956.

XII. Water resources and power

A. Vest primary responsibility for water pollution projects in the States, with Federal effort directed to research, consultation, and control, over interstate problems (recommendations 1c and 1e). Public Law 660, July 9, 1956.

In addition to those measures enacted by the Congress, the Department of Defense, which is so intimately affected by the Hoover recommendations, has announced its concurrence with 85 percent of the Commission's recommendations. Most of these recommendations can be impleted through administrative action. The Department has indicated that it is putting these recommended changes into effect.

Yet there is no justification for complacency in viewing the record of implementing the recommendations of the Second Hoover Commission. Much remains to be done before there can be any real satisfaction. Although the Congress approved certain very important budget and accounting revisions, the House of Representatives stood firm against the inclusion in that legislation of the fundamental revision placing appropriations on an accrued expenditure basis. Approval of that reform in the financial structure of the Government must be obtained during the next Congress. In addition, the establishment of an Assistant Secretary for Research and Development in each of the military departments must be pursued next year. Although the President proposed this change in a reorganization plan, the Congress disapproved of it considering that such an organizational change should be accomplished by positive legislation. The Congress thereby obligated itself to undertake passage of the necessary legislation at the earliest opportunity.

In the field of civil service reform, there has been little accomplished toward implementing the fundamental changes that the Hoover Commission recommended. Establishment of the senior civil service, revision of veterans' preference provisions, and other important matters must be given priority in the next Congress. The Civil Service Commission has, admittedly, had a prodigious task in evaluating the effect and advisability of all the recommendations throughout the divisions of the Federal service, but the Commission should definitely come forth during the early days of the 85th Congress and preesnt its findings and recommendations so that action, already long delayed, can be taken.

I have received a letter from Mr. Philip Young, Chairman of the Civil Service Commission, dated June 21, 1956. In this letter, Mr. Young held forth considerable promise for recommendations from the Civil Service Commission, concerning the Hoover proposals, to be ready for the 85th Congress. I hope that such Civil Service Commission proposals will be forthcoming early in the next session.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES
CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., June 21, 1956.

The Honorable H. ALEXANDER SMITH,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SMITH: I am glad to reply to your letter of April 26, 1956, concerning the Hoover Commission recommendations, in which I share your great interest. You inquire specifically about S. 2331, S. 2332, S. 2333, S. 2334, S. 2335, S. 2336, and S. 2337, bills to implement some of the more important proposals of the Commission in the area of personnel and civil service.

As you know, the executive branch is giving intensive consideration to the Hoover Commission recommendations not already in effect. There is enclosed a letter from the President expressing his interest in the Hoover Commission proposals on personnel and civil service.

Much has been accomplished already through legislation and administrative action. Public Law 68, establishing a pay and classification system for the postal field service, substantially accomplished recommendation 8 (b). Excellent progress has been made in the improvements in recruiting, examining, and appointment practices proposed by recommendations 9 and 10. Our new Federal service entrance examination program is a great stride forward in this area. The extension of the competitive service overseas (recommendation 14 (a)) has been largely accomplished. Recommendation 14 (c), concerning the transfer of persons between merit systems, has been provided for by Executive Order No. 10577 and is being implemented by the Commission. A directive of January 11, 1955, instructed agencies to carry out the substance with respect to in-service training of recommendation 7.

The bills you inquire about embody some of the most fundamental changes suggested by the Commission. In order to realize the full benefits of these Hoover Commission recommendations, there must be not only general agreement as to the overall aims but also general aceptance of methods on the part of Congress, heads of agencies, and other affected groups. I believe it is of the utmost importance to the ultimate attainment of these objectives that we lay a firm groundwork of acceptance. Following is a brief statement of our progress in considering the bills you mention:

S. 2331 would put into effect recommendation No. 6 of the Report on Personnel and Civil Service. This bill provides for a senior civil service. To be effective, this proposal must have the full support of the Congress, the heads of departments and agencies, and employees. We believe that a far-reaching educational program will be necessary in order to gain the support needed. The executive branch is now exploring ways of accomplishing the objectives of the senior civil service, including a study of those parts of the proposal that could be put into practice immediately by administrative action. We do not believe that a legislative proposal will be ready for submission to the Congress before the next session, however.

S. 2332 would carry out recommendation No. 8 (a), to simplify the grade structure of the Classification Act. Under this bill, grades GS–1 through GS–6 would be regrouped into 3 grades, and grades GS–7 through GS–11 would be regrouped into 3 grades. About 92 percent of the employees covered by the General Schedule are in grades GS–1 through GS–11 and their present pay is in excess of $3 billion a year. A major revision of the grade structure of the Classification Act, as proposed in S. 2332, could result in very substantial changes in payroll costs and could affect the interests of hundreds of thousands of employees, as well as the internal organization of the departments and agencies. Since this bill would have such far-reaching effects, it is extremely controversial. It contains some technical provisions which involve complex administrative problems. Solutions should be determined for all such problems before we submit our comments on this bill. We do not want to report adversely because the bill provisions certainly merit consideration. This specific proposal relates to only one part of a larger set of problems in classification and pay. A plan is now under consideration through which these problems can be attacked. We will report to you within a few months on the progress in carrying out this plan.

S. 2333 would carry out recommendation No. 10 (c) by substituting a "rule of 5" for the present "rule of 3" required by the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944. The Commission has made a careful study of this proposal and our report on S. 2333 was transmitted to Senator OLIN D. JOHNSTON on May 29, 1956. We recommended enactment with amendment to provide that the Commission may apply a rule of five in certifying to those categories of positions for which it determines such action to be in the interest of the Government. A copy of our report is enclosed.

S. 2334 would put into effect recommendation No. 11, to simplify the performance rating system. We have carefully studied this proposal and hope to have ready early in the next session of the Congress a legislative proposal which would carry out the objectives of this recommendation, although the content of the proposed legislation may differ from that of S. 2334.

S. 2335 would carry out recommendation No. 12 (a), to limit a veteran's right of appeal to the first 5 years after appointment to the service. The Commission staff has just completed a study and reevaluation of the whole appeals program. It will be ready within a few weeks for Commission consideration and for discussion with agencies, employee and veterans' groups, and staffs of congressional committees. These steps will obviously take considerable time. They will be pursued diligently, and a report will be made to you at the earliest possible date.

S. 2336 would put into effect recommendation No. 13, relating to reductions in force. We are presently making an intensive study, not only of the specific recommendations made by the Hoover Commission on this subject, but of the other aspects of the reduction-in-force problem. We have solicited the views of representative agencies and have secured extensive information from them concerning reduction-in-force problems. Because of the far-reaching nature of this proposal, we feel that it is unlikely that a report on S. 2336 can be made during this session.

S. 2337 would carry out recommendation No. 14 (c), providing for the transfer of Federal employees between merit systems. Our report on this bill was submitted to the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee on April 17, 1956. As stated in that report, the Commission has adequate authority under the civil-service rules to carry out this proposal and has developed criteria by which we can identify established merit systems. We are now conducting negotiations with agencies maintaining such systems in order to arrive at agreements for the reciprocal transfer of personnel.

I believe that the Hoover Commission recommendations on personnel and civil service are highly constructive and have already led to significant improvement in personnel management. As indicated above, some of these recommendations have already been put into effect. In the case of some others, work by the executive branch has been completed and is awaiting action by the Congress.

The executive branch has completed work on recommendation No. 4, proposing increased salaries for the Government's top managers. S. 2628 and H. R. 7619 are now pending before the Senate Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. General authority for all agencies for training at nongovernment facilities (recommendation No. 7) is contained in H. R. 9510 and S. 3287, resulting from a legislative proposal submitted to the Congress by the Commission. Funds for carrying out recommendations 17 and 18 have been requested of the Congress in our budget request.

We assure you of our deep interest in the remaining proposals and our desire to complete action on them as soon as possible.

Sincerely yours,

PHILIP YOUNG,
Chairman.

The people of the United States have every right to expect that the public business, the business of government, will be conducted as economically and as efficiently as possible, within the objectives laid out for the Government. Although attending to the details of governmental organization, staffing, and financing may not be as exciting or as enthralling as some other matters of policy which require consideration by the Congress, nevertheless, every Member of Congress has a heavy obligation to concern himself with these details. I know that most Members of the Congress realize this fact, and I am hopeful that further substantial progress will be made on the Hoover Commission recommendations during the next Congress.

Federal Role in Aviation—Report of the Legal and Monetary Affairs Subcommittee of the House Government Operations Committee on the Federal Role in Aviation

OF
HON. GEORGE MEADER
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MEADER. Mr. Speaker, elsewhere I have reported to the House the hearings on aviation conducted by the Mollohan subcommittee. I believe the conclusions of the committee's report should be of interest to every Member of Congress and to the American public generally. They are as follows:

CONCLUSIONS

1. Reorganization of executive agencies required

The hearings of the subcommittee have convinced it that drastic reorganization of agencies in the executive branch of the Government having responsibilities in the field of aviation is urgently required.

The present Federal organization structure in civil aviation is tragic proof that it is not enough to have a forum or bargaining table where conflicts and disagreements can be settled and compromised. There must exist a capacity for leadership and planning in addition to the prompt resolution of differences. Direction must be substituted for coordination. To continue the present Federal organizational structure in aviation matters and thereby perpetuate current interagency conflicts and the lack of planning and leadership would mark Mr. Curtis' study as a futile effort, no matter how outstanding his projections for long-range aviation facilities.

Aviation activities must be administered through organizational machinery capable of dynamic action.

2. Expedition of Mr. Curtis' study required

The subcommittee believes that the responsibilities and functions of aviation agencies are so important, and the organizational relationships between them are so complex and confused, that piecemeal, casual changes might be dangerous. Changes should be made only after careful study. We cannot run the risk of disrupting current aviation operations and creating even more confusion than exists now.

The subcommittee is concerned over the limited budget given Mr. Curtis to achieve his goal. It is difficult to conceive how with a budget of $150,000 (plus $300,000 contributed by the Departments of Defense and Commerce for contracts made in connection with the first phase of his study) and a permanent professional staff of three (to be supplemented by a team of scientists and engineers), no matter how capable, Mr. Curtis can attain his goal with expedition. In this respect, it would seem the tools given Mr. Curtis in his monumental task may be likened to driving a spike with a tack hammer.

The subcommittee questions the timetable of between 1 year and a year and a half (from March 1, 1956) furnished by Mr. Curtis as the period in which his study will be completed. We are not suggesting that speed be substituted for thoroughness—only that with additional money and staff, the pace of the study can and should be quickened. Time is valuable and the Nation can ill afford to continue the current aviation organizational muddle.

3. Civil Aeronautics Board and Federal Communications Commission membership in Air Coordinating Committee must be terminated

The presence of the Civil Aeronautics Board, an independent, quasi-legislative, quasi-judicial, regulatory body on the Air Coordinating Committee should be terminated at once. This is equally applicable to the membership of the Federal Communications Commission.

This is especially significant in view of testimony before the subcommittee by a Civil Aeronautics Board member in which he stated the Board would be bound by air coordinating committee decisions in which the Civil Aeronautics Board member, after consultation with the Board, acquiesced.

The subcommittee believes that the continued membership in the air coordinating committee by these regulatory bodies represents an undermining by the executive branch of the careful standards and safeguards of administrative law procedures prescribed by the Congress in creating both the Federal Communications Commission and the Civil Aeronautics Board. Whatever benefits may accrue as a result of their present Air Coordinating Committee membership can be obtained through being kept apprised of developments pertinent to their respective operations.

It is an illegal and unwarranted invasion by the executive branch by means of an Executive order to assume, without consent of the Congress, powers the Congress specifically conferred on these independent tribunals.

Participation by regulatory bodies in Air Coordinating Committee matters and according Air Coordinating Committee decisions binding effect, without adherence to procedures prescribed by the Congress represents a flagrant flouting of the will of the Congress.

That participation should be discontinued at once. The reservation contained in the Executive order with respect to regulatory agencies is meaningless—testimony before the subcommittee is ample and disturbing proof of that fact.

The Civil Aeronautics Board and the Federal Communications Commission are placed in the awkward position of being forced to disregard either an Executive order or the statutes which created them. We believe it is clear they should obey the statutes as superior to an Executive order.

4. Clarification of Air Coordinating Committee authority required

In a statement prepared at the request of the subcommittee, the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics noted that "under the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, Congress has vested in the civil agencies of Government, the Civil Aeronautics Administration and the Civil Aeronautics Board, authority to require all aircraft, military as well as civil, operating anywhere in the airspace of the United States, to conform with our air traffic rules. It would be difficult to enlarge this grant of authority.

"Secondly, in the same law, Congress not only authorized, but directed, the Civil Aeronautics Administration to provide an airways system for the Nation's air traffic and to regulate and protect that air traffic.

"This combination of authority to make rules and to control traffic makes it possible for the civil agencies of Government to control the use made of the airspace of the United States by all types of aircraft, military as well as civil. We believe these controls are adequate and do not need to be enlarged."

The Congress has not delegated this authority to the Air Coordinating Committee nor to any other agency of Government.

Such delegation of authority cannot be accomplished except through legislation or possibly through a reorganization plan subject to congressional approval.

Most certainly a congressional delegation of authority cannot be contravened or otherwise affected by an Executive order.

The authority of the Air Coordinating Committee should be clarified without delay to make abundantly clear that the Air Coordinating Committee has no decision-making authority with respect to any matter in which Congress has vested authority elsewhere.

Coordination by means of an Executive order must not be used to nullify congressional enactment.

5. Predominance of the military on the Air Coordinating Committee and the Air Navigational Development Board must be avoided

Pending completion of the organizational aspects of Mr. Curtis' study, the subcommittee does not make any additional recommendations concerning organizational structure. However, it cannot ignore the predominance of the military services on the Air Coordinating Committee and the Air Navigational Development Board (and their various panels and committees). The subcommittee is impressed by the sheer weight of numbers and is concerned, for instance, that the Civil Aeronautics Administration is not a member in its own right of either body, while the Department of Defense [1] and the three military services are specifically designated.

In addition to the statutory conflict pointed out in 4 above, the subcommittee believes that such military predominance conflicts with our tradition of vesting final authority in civilian rather than in military officials.

6. The 5-year Federal airway plan must be accelerated

The subcommittee is heartened by the recent request of the President for appropriation of an additional $68 million to accelerate the 5-year Federal airway plan for navigational aids. That request is in accord with the subcommittee's belief that the 5-year plan must be accelerated.

If acceleration is "just a matter of dollars and cents," as the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics told the subcommittee, then we believe the plan should be further accelerated so that with introduction of commercial jet transport planes in 1959, the Federal airways system will be better able to accept them, and cope with the many problems of air-traffic control that commercial jets will undoubtedly present.

The Civil Aeronautics Administration must obtain grade differentials for controllers. With the added air-traffic-control facilities to be provided under the 5-year plan, the Civil Aeronautics Administration cannot risk loss of any supervisory or other experienced controller personnel. It is, therefore, incumbent upon them to obtain grade differentials for controller personnel based on responsibility. That matter should be actively pursued by the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics with the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission.

7. TACAN–VOR/DME controversy must be resolved without further delay

The vacillation that has marked the above problem is symptomatic of the lack of planning and direction in aviation matters within the Federal Government.

The controversy should be resolved no later than October 1, 1956, the date (30 to 40 days after August 20) promised by the Under Secretary of Commerce for Transportation in his appearance before the subcommittee. Valuable time already lost can never be recaptured and little excuse exists for further procrastination in this matter.

8. Automatic review of air traffic control requirements within the Civil Aeronautics Administration is required before airport aid projects are finally approved

Internal procedures within the Civil Aeronautics Administration according to testimony before the subcommittee do not provide for automatic review by the Office of Air Traffic Control before final approval of project applications for Federal-aid airport funds to ascertain whether air traffic control difficulties will be experienced.

While the subcommittee was told that such applications are coordinated with the Office of Air Traffic Control, it is believed that procedures providing for automatic review would avoid any possibility of slipup.

Local bodies concerned with plans for construction of airports should thoroughly and constantly explore with the Civil Aeronautics Administration all facets of airport operations, particularly with reference to air traffic control problems. The proposed Detroit Northeast Airport situation is a most unfortunate example of the need for close and continuing liaison between local and Civil Aeronautics Administration officials.

[1] Although not a member of the Air Coordinating Committee, strangely, the Department of Defense is a voting member of the Airport Use Panel in addition to the Departments of Army, Navy, Air Force, Commerce, and the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Letter From Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell to High School Graduates

OF
HON. GORDON CANFIELD
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, in my 32 years of service on Capitol Hill I have never known a Secretary of Labor who had the confidence and respect of management and labor and all segments of our people exceeding that of Secretary James P. Mitchell, of New Jersey. Everyone who knows Jim takes his hat off to him on his dedication and good works. Recently, the Secretary addressed the following public letter to high-school graduates defining the employment opportunities of our day:

DEAR GRADUATE, EMPHASIS IS ON SKILL, DEMAND IS HIGH

(By James P. Mitchell)

I am writing this letter to acquaint you with the employment opportunities you can expect and to let you know the kind of economy you are entering as a young worker.

There are two factors in your favor. First, the economy is at high levels. Employment this spring is at high marks for almost all sectors of enterprise. Job opportunities, therefore, are excellent. Secondly, there are fewer youths coming of working age now than there will be in the future when the high birth rate of the 1940's begins to be felt in the late teen brackets.

If I had to single out the most important fact concerning your status as workers, I would say it was this: whatever occupational field you enter, you will find that the premium in our modern economy is on skill. The day of the unskilled worker is passing; the day of the highly skilled, flexible, and well-educated worker is already here.

You will find, then, that your education in this sense is just beginning. You will find that training courses will precede many vocations, and that they involve as great an intellectual challenge as many of your school courses. How successfully you meet that challenge is a critical factor in the future success of our economy, and of our country.

Workers who have mastered one of the skilled crafts or who have acquired the skills of a technician generally earn more than the less skilled workers. They possess greater flexibility in making job changes, have more promotional opportunities and job security. It would be extremely unwise to pass up any opportunity for additional training that could very well make the difference between good wages and security and lower wages in your future years.

There are a number of skilled fields in which training opportunities and long-run employment prospects are good. Among these are machine-shop occupations, particularly tool and die makers and machinists. The construction trades, including occupations such as carpenters, electricians, plumbers and pipefitters, and bricklayers make up the largest field of employment for skilled workers. These trades will provide many apprentice openings this year. Another large field of employment for skilled craftsmen is the printing trades, which offer relatively high earnings and steady employment.

Numerous jobs will be open to girls with training in the traditional fields in which they excel. Stenographers and typists, operators of various office machines, such as computers, key-punch machines, and bookkeeping machines are in demand.

The trend in occupations for women workers has been, since World War II, toward greater diversification and latitude. Many kinds of employment now are open to young women workers. In the 1950 census, women workers appeared in 466 occupational groups. The majority of them, however, demand more training than you now have. Nurses, teachers, women scientists, and mathematicians will find good jobs for a long time to come, but more education and more training are needed to qualify for these positions.

Jobs in the clerical field, in selling, in assembly work in many factories are available for the high-school graduate. I would, however, give a great deal of thought to continuing your education toward a higher occupational group where women are now not only accepted but needed.

The wide trend toward mechanization within the factory should continue the rapid growth in employment opportunity for maintenance and repair personnel. Among the most important of these are electronic technicians and maintenance mechanics. The entire electronics field from home television receivers and military and civilian electronic equipment, requires a large staff of maintenance and repairmen.

Those of you about to enter a branch of the military service should investigate the opportunities for specialized training in some of the skilled crafts and technical occupations. The time spent in uniform may afford you a chance to learn a basic trade and gain valuable experience. It can mean greater job opportunity and higher wages when you return to civilian life.

In choosing industries in which to seek employment, the young graduate should consider not only the industries which are currently expanding, such as electronics manufacturing and chemicals, but also the large well-established industries where replacement needs provide thousands of new job opportunities each year. Your school or public library, or your vocational counselor, have copies of Labor Department reports which will show up-to-date information on how many workers are employed in each of the Nation's industries.

The employment picture in your town may be somewhat different from that of the Nation as a whole. I urge you to take the path of wisdom and pay a visit to your local employment service office. There you will find invaluable information on occupational outlook both on a national and local scale. United States Department of Labor publications like The Job Guide for Young Workers, the Occupational Outlook Handbook and the Employment Outlook Bulletins will describe long-range employment prospects for the major industries as well as many important occupations. Many valuable services are also available at your Employment Service. Aptitude tests, guidance and counseling facilities, and occupational directories can help steer you in the right vocational course. Your school counselor may also be able to help you.

As you begin your work career, you will be offered many kinds of advice. The decisions you make, however, will be your own. Now is the time to take stock, decide what kind of job you would like to have, and what kind of training and education you need to obtain it.

Your country needs you. Upon the skills and abilities you possess and will develop depends the American future. I am sure you will meet this challenge and responsibility with the same success that has characterized the generations before you. Best of luck.

Holifield Bill for Peacetime Atomic Power

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHET HOLIFIELD
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, for the more than 10 years that I have been a charter member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, I have studied with great care the possibilities for peacetime development of atomic energy.

As part of my official duties on this committee I have become acquainted with the technical aspects of atomic-hydrogen weapons development. It is my deep conviction that this tremendous force of nature, if harnessed for peaceful work instead of mass killing, can bring new wonders to the world.

DESTRUCTIVE POWER OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Ever since I served as a member of President Truman's Special Committee on the Atomic Bomb Test at the Bikini atoll in 1946, and saw with my own eyes the enormous destructive power of the atomic bomb, this conviction has become part of my daily thought and action.

In the following years I saw the destructive power of the atomic bomb multiply a thousand times so that a single explosion of a hydrogen bomb could wipe out a whole city and spread lethal radiation over thousands of square miles.

PRIVATE INDUSTRY APPROACH

In 1954, during the 83d Congress which had a Republican majority, the basic legislation governing the atomic energy program was rewritten in an attempt to encourage peacetime development. The main interest of the Republican sponsors of the new legislation was to encourage private industry to get into the atomic-energy field.

As a close observer of atomic energy reactor development, I knew that this development program had a long way to go before private industry could afford to participate on a commercial basis. Reactor designs were experimental. Costs of atomic power production would be exorbitant compared to conventional power production from coal, falling water, or other sources.

In many respects this change in atomic energy legislation was merely a holding operation for private utility companies. They wanted to control the industry's future, but they were not ready to invest in present development. Also they feared atomic power competition from public agencies made possible by Government investment.

I warned the Congress in 1954 that the efforts to turn the peacetime atomic energy program over to private industry were premature, that the legislation had sinister possibilities of monopoly control because only a few giant corporations had atomic know-how as contractors to the Government, and that if the Government slackened its atomic program before industry was ready to step in, a dangerous void would be created.

SLACKENING OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAM

The developments of the past 2 years have affirmed my prediction about the slackening of Government effort in atomic energy development. Today we are losing the race for peacetime atomic power to other nations. Great Britain is about to produce electricity from atomic reactors, and Soviet Russia has made rapid strides in this field, as I know from personal observation at the International Conference on the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy held at Geneva, Switzerland, last year.

HOLIFIELD BILL TO SPEED ATOMIC POWER

In an effort to overcome this gap in our national atomic energy program I sponsored legislation in this Congress for the Federal Government to build a number of large reactors to produce power at present atomic energy sites. Senator ALBERT GORE, of Tennessee, sponsored similar legislation in the Senate.

The Holifield-Gore bill proposes a $400 million atomic-power program for the next 5 years. The Atomic Energy Commission would be authorized and directed to build large-scale prototypes of atomic-power reactors. The purpose of this program is to advance the art and technology of atomic power by actual operation of large reactors that can convert the enormous energy of splitting atoms into kilowatts of electricity. All discoveries and advancements which are made at Government expense are immediately made available to privately and publicly owned utilities for the benefit of all people.

PROGRAM BLOCKED BY ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that the Holifield-Gore legislation failed of passage in this Congress. The failure was due in large part to the vehement opposition of the Republican administration at the behest of private utilities. These companies put their own business affairs ahead of the national interest in maintaining American leadership in the peaceful uses of atomic power.

The defeat of this bill by administration efforts, in which Atomic Energy Commission Chairman Lewis L. Strauss played a conspicuous part, signifies to me that the so-called atoms-for-peace program which the administration professes to support, is little more than an empty gesture, a windy exercise in rhetoric.

HOLIFIELD BILL TO BE ON AGENDA

If the peacetime potentials of atomic energy are to be realized, the Federal Government must proceed boldly and constructively to build reactors and to promote research and development. Therefore, I believe that the Holifield-Gore bill will be a crucial item on the agenda of the next Congress.

Fund for the Republic's Report on Blacklisting

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GORDON H. SCHERER
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Speaker, a controversy has arisen over the investigation by the Un-American Activities Committee of the report on blacklisting by the Fund for the Republic.

As a member of the committee, I would like to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD my letter to the editor of the Cincinnati Enquirer, dealing with this subject.

The letter follows:

SCHERER DEFENDS ENQUIRER EDITORIAL

To the EDITOR OF THE ENQUIRER:

As a member of the Un-American Activities Committee, I have listened to the testimony so far adduced before the committee with reference to the Fund for the Republic's report on blacklisting. I thought your editorial in the July 1 Enquirer on this subject was excellent and remarkably consistent with the sworn testimony.

I see in your readers' column a letter from Michael Harrington severely criticizing and condemning the editorial. Now I feel that I must comment so that people will not be misled by Mr. Harrington.

Of course, Michael Harrington is a professional employee of the Fund for the Republic. He is one of those who helped prepare the report. It can be expected, therefore, that he will rise to defend it.

First, let's see whom Robert Hutchins, president of the fund—the man who said before a congressional committee that he would not hesitate to employ a Communist—selected to make the investigation and prepare this report of the fund on blacklisting.

Let's start with Mr. Harrington himself. In the spring of 1956 Mr. Harrington contributed an article entitled "A Marxist Approach to Art" to the magazine known as the New International which lists itself as "the leading Marxist magazine in the United States, nationally recognized as among the foremost organs of Marxist thought and political analysis in the world." Harrington has also written a number of articles for the publication of the youth organization of the Independent Socialist League, which was cited by the Attorney General of the United States as an organization which seeks "to alter the form of the Government of the United States by unconstitutional means."

Harrington was one of the group which called upon President Truman to commute the death sentences of Ethel and Julius Rosenberg, the atomic spy traitors. As we all know, the attack on the President and the Department of Justice was spearheaded by the National Committee To Secure Justice in the Rosenberg Case. The Un-American Activities Committee has overwhelming evidence that this committee was completely controlled and dominated by the Communist conspiracy. By the way, Harrington was also a member of the War Resisters League.

Now I am not saying that Harrington is a Communist. Mr. John Cogley of the executive staff of the Fund for the Republic, whom Mr. Harrington helped in writing the report, testified before our committee that Harrington was a Socialist.

Before we go any further, let's see who some of Mr. Harrington's associates were in the investigation, preparation, and writing of the fund's report.

There was Dr. Marie Jahoda, who come to this country as late as 1945 from Austria, where she was an active member of the Socialist Democratic Party. She was one of the persons who helped prepare this so-called impartial report for the Fund for the Republic. At the time she was hired, it was known by the Fund for the Republic that she had already issued reports and made studies which attacked loyalty programs of this Government.

And finally there was Elizabeth Poe, a researcher for the fund's staff. Frederick Woltman, writer for the New York World Telegram and Pulitzer prize winner for his articles exposing Communist infiltration, testified before the committee in the blacklisting hearings 2 weeks ago. He said: "Elizabeth Poe was a member of the Communist faction of the Newspaper Guild at Time Magazine for some years and was very active in the Communist group." Woltman then vehemently denounced the report before the committee and in one of his articles he said that the report is a fraud perpetrated against the public with tax-free money and that taxpayers of the United States who do not approve of what is advocated by the report are financing it.

A series of witnesses before the committee, including James F. O'Neil, publisher of the American Legion magazine, Godfrey P. Schmidt, president of AWARE, Inc., and lecturer on constitutional and labor law at Fordham University Law school, Francis J. McNamara, director of the American Sovereignty Campaign of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Jack Wren, account executive of Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn, Inc., public relations firm of New York City, vehemently denounced the report as biased, slanted and in some instances as not being in accordance with the facts.

Just last week the AFL-CIO News had this to say about the Fund for the Republic's blacklisting report:

"Many feel that what should have been a factual, objective study became in its final writing and editing a document seemingly colored by one viewpoint * * *.

"A fund employee who helped draft the document has verbally acknowledged several important errors of fact on one page of volume 1 and has offered to correct them in an affidavit. This makes one wonder if there could be so many factual errors on just one page, how many other such errors are there in the rest of the 312-page report?"

Jack Gould, radio and TV editor of the New York Times, which newspaper has been a supporter of the Fund for the Republic and its objectives, said in substance that the authors of the blacklisting report take recourse to much undocumented and unsubstantiated material. The report makes damning indictments against people without having gotten their versions.

Time magazine in a recent issue dealing with the committee's hearings on the Fund for the Republic's blacklisting report said that it was poorly cataloged, highly opinionated, and in some instances incomplete. Time says that the hearings of the committee revealed glaring weaknesses in the report. Time further says that the hearings suggested that the report was inept journalism at best. Time supported Woltman's position when he said: "If any newspaper proceeded the way the author did, it would be subject to grave criticism."

From the testimony already adduced, it is obvious to us on the Un-American Activities Committee that one of the basic reasons for the fund's report was to indirectly and subtly discredit the investigating committees of the Congress and the anti-Communist organizations of this country. The report attempts to show that there is a widespread blacklisting of persons in the radio and television industry as a result of the activities of the investigating committees of Congress and the anti-Communist groups in the Nation.

To accomplish this objective, the report takes cases of individuals who the report says were deprived of employment by reason of their political beliefs. In almost every case, however, the report deliberately and apparently by design conceals the fact that these individuals had been identified under oath as members of the Communist conspiracy or had long records of membership in Communist-front organizations.

The fund and its followers have been highly critical of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Department of Justice, and congressional investigating committees for the use of what this group calls faceless informers. It is significant that the fund's report on blacklisting uses faceless informers in many instances in an attempt to sustain its findings in the report. It cites case after case of individuals who supplied information merely by referring to these individual's in the report as Mr. X, Mr. M, and Mr. N.

When Mr. John Cogley, the man who with Harrington directed the preparation of this report, was asked by the Un-American Activities Committee to identify these faceless informers on whom he allegedly relied to sustain the findings of the report, he refused to identify them.

It can readily be seen, therefore, from what I have shown herein from the record that, when the Enquirer in its editorial of July 1 called the Fund for the Republic report on blacklisting a whitewash of communism, it was absolutely correct and perhaps was understating rather than ovestating its charge.

Middle East

OF

HON. JAMES ROOSEVELT

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Speaker, the current headlines have produced a new crisis for the free world in the Middle East.

President Nasser, of Egypt, has seized the Suez Canal in an ominous breach of international agreement. This sets an example for every other Middle East ruler who may also be tempted by the desire for power and plunder.

This is Colonel Nasser's answer to our refusal to help finance the Aswan Dam. It is an answer which vindicates our position for it confirms the view that the Nasser regime cannot be relied upon to keep its commitments. Apparently stunned by our more realistic attitude, Nasser has now taken a desperate measure to retrieve prestige and influence in the Arab world. But this coup should not be dismissed as a capricious act by an immature dictator. It is part of a calculated plan to undermine the influence of the West and to expropriate its assets in the region. Unless Nasser is effectively challenged, he will be emulated by other Arab rulers. Oil wells, mines, refineries, pipelines, air bases, landing fields—none of these will be immune from the grasp of political adventurers seeking to expand domination and wealth.

One may be certain that there will be many on hand to apologize for Nasser and to explain that he was provoked into doing this because our Government and the United Kingdom withdrew the offer to build the Aswan Dam. Those who preach appeasement will argue that we should have continued to coddle Nasser, that we should have closed our eyes to his insults and anti-Western intrigue, that we should have ignored his wasteful and reckless arms purchases. But, I cannot believe that this is wise counsel or that it is widely advocated. To those who still believe that Nasser can be held for the West, I call attention to the speech he made Tuesday in which he cried:

> I look at Americans and I say, may you choke to death on your fury.

In addition, the Egyptian press has been printing scandalous and shocking libels against our point 4 mission in Egypt, claiming that we have used the program for espionage and that we had supplied Egypt with diseased poultry and cattle and poisonous methods of espionage intrigue.

Mr. Speaker, this debacle has been long in the making. I have, on a number of occasions, taken the floor in the House to warn against a Middle East policy which does not measure up to reality. Most recently, on June 19, I called attention to the fact that it was the Communists who came to Cairo that week to celebrate the evacuation of British forces from the Suez Canal. Despite our long and hard pursuit of Nasser, it was Shepilov, the Communist Foreign Minister, who was first at the finish line. That celebration marked the end of a Western base, devoted to the support of Western freedom. Thanks to Nasser, Communist power is being steadily consolidated in the Mediterranean. I concluded that brief statement with these words:

> How many more diplomatic defeats shall we suffer in the Near East until we come to appreciate the fundamental principle that democracy will not be able to organize the defense of freedom in the Near East if it continues to capitulate to the pressures and intrigue of rulers who have no interest in democracy and who are concerned primarily with the search for power?

Since that statement was made, there has been evidence that our policy has begun to harden into realism. Ambassador Henry A. Byroade, chief proponent of our pro-Egypt mood, is being sent off to the Union of South Africa where he will cease to exercise influence over our Arab-Israel relations. The withdrawal of the offer to build the dam was sharp and unmistakable. These two steps made it clear that the administration's courtship of Nasser had come to an end. Disenchantment with Nasser is now a manifest diplomatic fact.

If there are some who still think we should have let Nasser have the money for the dam, let them look at the contemptuous way in which Nasser tore up the Suez agreement. Under that agreement, private operation of the canal was to continue for another dozen years. Just 2 years ago, when the British yielded to the pleas of our own American diplomats and agreed to withdraw from the Suez base, Nasser reaffirmed Egypt's respect for the international agreement which governs the administration of the canal. But now this agreement is a scrap of paper. Can the international community invest faith and confidence in a government which repudiates its word? Should the World Bank lend Nasser $200 million? Should we pour out grants from the United States Treasury as gifts to a man who demagogically whips up hatred against Americans and who rabblerouses the Arab world in a venomous and vindictive cry for the death of Americans.

Let us no longer have illusions about Nasser. Let us understand fully that this man, in the name of neutralism, is organizing opposition to democracy and the West, that he has thrown the Mediterranean open to the Communists, and that he is attempting to undermine and destroy the position of the West in the Mediterranean, in the Middle East, and throughout Africa.

The history of this century should have taught us something about the ways of dictators. It has also taught us, to our great misfortune, how democracies have yielded and retreated before bluff and blackmail. Hitler was able to achieve power for death and destruction, partly because democracy built him up, partly because democracy bowed down before him. Resistance came only when it was very late and at devastating cost.

Once a democratic people yield to pressure and threat, once they surrender or abandon a right in compromise with principle, their defenses begin to crumble and each succeeding concession, each succeeding retreat comes more easily. Five years ago the Western World was confronted by the hard fact that the Egyptian Government was blocking the Suez Canal to Israel-bound shipping on the untenable ground that it was at war with Israel—untenable because no United Nation member may be at war with another. The United Nations Security Council publicly condemned this action as a violation of the United Nations Armistice Agreements. It called on Egypt to stop its blockade, but Egypt defied the United Nations and managed to get away with it. It is still getting away with it. Moreover, it has extended the blockade to include Israel's southern port at Aqaba.

Now if the Egyptians can stop Israel-bound ships one day, they can stop American ships bound for other countries tomorrow, and if Egypt can ignore its international obligation by impeding the free flow of shipping for one nation, there is nothing to prevent Egypt from repudiating its obligations to all other nations.

When the West failed to stand up and to insist upon Israel's rights, it beclouded and endangered its own rights.

I trust that our own Department of State now recognizes the full gravity of the Nasser menace, and if it has finally awakened to the reality of that menace, I pray that we are now taking the measures to strengthen those who are directly in its path. In the light of all that has happened in the last few weeks, it is strange that the State Department should have been turning a deaf ear to Israel's urgent pleas for arms to defend herself. It is tragic that we should have told Israel to go shop elsewhere, because we didn't want to get into an arms race, because we were going to be the impartial peacemaker in the region, because we thought we might hold Egypt on our side.

The Department of State stubbornly refused to make a choice. On the one hand it was confronted by a little Fascist dictator rising to power on the shoulders of a military junta, mortgaging his country's substance on arms purchases from the Communists, deriding and baiting the West, because of the incitement and encouragement of Moscow. On the other side, there was an isolated little democracy, completely identified with the West in spirit, history, and tradition, and the first target of the Cairo-Kremlin threat, pleading vainly for arms.

As between these two, Mr. Dulles continued in a state of immobility, paralyzed by the fear that he might provoke the Arabs into some kind of indignant reprisal. Well, we have now had the reprisal, and, as it finally developed, it had nothing to do with Israel, and it came despite the fact that we did not respond to Israel's plea for arms. If we had met Israel's request for arms last fall when it was first made, we would have suffered no greater disaster than that which has occurred. Indeed, a firm policy at that time might have discouraged and deterred Nasser from the steps he has been emboldened to take by the spectacle of Western weakness.

What will Nasser do next? Will he be carried, by the momentum of his own adventurism, into new and bolder assaults against the West? Will his allies now be encouraged to seize oil wells and refineries? Will Nasser step up his campaign to get the French out of Algeria, the British out of Cyprus, the Israelis out of Israel?

Will the Egyptians now launch an offensive into Israel, using their new jet bombers to rain death on Haifa, Tel Aviv, and Jerusalem? Will the Egyptians now roll their Stalin and Centurion tanks across the Sinai Desert and into Israel?

Who can say that they will not? Bear in mind that it was the Egyptians—not the Israelis—who launched the 1948 war when the Arab States tried to put aside the 1947 U. N. resolution by force. Is there any hope that the agreements negotiated by U. N. Secretary General Hammarskjold last spring will preserve the cease fire in the region? If those agreements were so sound and so durable, why was it necessary for the Secretary General to go back for more talks within the last few days?

This is not the time for complacency. If there are some who refuse to believe what Nasser is saying, if there are some who think that his threats against Israel are simply bluffs for domestic consumption, let these complacent prophets ask themselves whether they believed, as late as yesterday and the day before, that Nasser would seize the Suez Canal.

Mr. Speaker, there are some firm conclusions to be drawn from the present crisis.

The administration's policy to propitiate the Arab States has not worked. The Arabs are not impressed by weakness and by appeasement.

The administration has done nothing this year to make it clear that we will not permit a renewal of war in the Near East, that we will stand up against aggression, that we will strengthen those who are threatened. It rejected Israel's request to purchase arms; it made no provision for arms for Israel in the mutual-security program, it did not offer Israel a security treaty, it did not strengthen the Tripartite Declaration, it did not ask Congress for power to intervene if war broke out. In short, it did nothing, but hope that the illusion of peace could be preserved by a U. N. mission. There is nothing in the record of the administration and Congress to refresh and renew the strength and confidence of those who look to America for leadership in the struggle for freedom.

The time has come for a reappraisal of our Near East policy.

We must draw a line between democracy and dictatorship. We must stand firmly with those who are joined with us in the preservation of freedom and democratic institutions. That is the only way to peace.

My Record in the 84th Congress

OF

HON. HAROLD D. DONOHUE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Speaker, at this time I wish to include a summary report of my legislative activities during the 84th Congress to the people of the Fourth Massachusetts Congressional District whom I have the honor to particularly represent in this House.

A MORAL OBLIGATION

Mr. Speaker, throughout my public life I have consistently respected and complied with the moral obligation imposed upon every officeholder by the Biblical mandate to "render an account of thy stewardship." I have made it a rule to submit at the end of each term of office a summary report of my activities to the people I represent.

It is, of course, obviously impossible to report my every word and action in detail during the brief period allowed. I am prevented from full comment on each and every one of the more than 1,200 varied pieces of legislation which came before the House. I do, however, wish to reveal and make clear my personal stand and judgment upon some of the major legislative issues of 1955 and 1956.

TRUTH FROM THE RECORD

Mr. Speaker, there has probably never been a time in our national history when it was more vitally important for the American voters to know the truth about the actions and philosophy of those to whom they entrust the guidance of their Government for domestic security and progress, as well as leadership in a troubled world. The foundation sources of fact on the deeds and words of those serving in this United States House of Representatives are the official Journal, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, required by law to publish the proceedings of each legislative day in the Congress, and the official reports of committee hearings.

The main body of this report, with some accompanying comments, will reveal the exact words I spoke and actions initiated during particular legislative discussions and debates.

DISTRICT AND REGIONAL—FLOOD TRAGEDY

Mr. Speaker, on August 19 and 20 of 1955 the whole Northeast area, including my own State and district, was visited by overwhelming floods in the wake of a torrential downpour of continuous rainfall through the 3 preceding days and nights. Just 2 short years previous, on June 9, 1953, my city of Worcester, Mass., and surrounding communities were suddenly struck by the most vicious tornado in our history, leaving more than 100 dead in our area and tremendous property damage.

On the afternoon of August 19 when these floods began to dangerously threaten, I was in my home office meeting with constituents on congressional business. Local public officials contacted me, and I immediately telephoned the Civil Defense Administrator in Washington requesting the cooperation of all Federal agencies in lending the vitally needed assistance to our stricken area. The President very soon declared the region a major disaster area within the provisions of Public Law 875 of the 81st Congress, which I am happy to say I had a voice in enacting.

Under this law and by Presidential direction, the resources of our National Government are authorized for use in assisting people and communities upon whom any serious natural disaster has fallen. The help of all Federal agencies, in cooperation with local and State government units, and that splendid organization, the American Red Cross, was soon at hand. The personnel of every Government agency at every level performed in the most heroic and expedient manner, first, to prevent any continuing flood damage, and, second, to assist in the rehabilitation and recovery from the great and widespread flood damage. The United States Army Corps of Engineers distinguished themselves and the military by their heroic and untiring efforts to save lives and property. Our people themselves exhibited the highest courage and capacity for sacrifice in Christian neighborliness and humaneness. The wildness of the uncontrolled flood elements made it a sad day, but the heroism of our people in time of tragedy also made it a proud one for Massachusetts and New England.

In spite of all efforts, several lives were lost in our immediate area and the amount of property damage staggered the imagination to assess.

Precise figures have not even yet been accurately established, but the financial losses from unemployment, damaged personal property, and disintegrated places of business reached into the hundreds of millions. The memory of the family tragedies through the loss of loved members will never be erased from our minds.

LEGISLATIVE ACTION

Personally observing and realizing the terrible danger from recurring floods to the lives and property of my people, it was only natural that I, and a great many other national legislators, resolved to concentrate our minds and devote our energies to the enactment of Federal legislation to prevent further floods and provide insurance against property damage from floods.

Toward that objective, in the national and regional welfare, I introduced four different bills in the 84th Congress: H. R. 8342, to authorize the construction of protection measures against damage from extraordinary floods; H. R. 8343, to authorize the construction of protection measures against damage from extreme rainfall accompanying hurricane storms; H. R. 10744, to provide for national flood insurance and reinsurance; and House Joint Resolution 468, to establish a Northeastern United States watershed development and flood protection commission.

Below is a chronological listing of my actions to encourage the enactment of flood-protection measures for our district and a national flood-insurance program:

GENERAL FLOOD PROTECTION

(Excerpts from testimony before special congressional committee at Springfield, Mass., October 24, 1955)

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, you are here, of course, primarily in recognition of and sympathy with the tragic results of the double disaster of floods that have been visited upon this area within the space of 3 months.

In my opinion, the modern history of congressional action in relation to the water resources and power of this country clearly reveals the continuing congressional conviction and intent that our water resources should be developed in a manner to assure their greatest contribution to the national economic growth, strength, and general welfare.

In pursuit of that policy and intent, the Congress has repeatedly demonstrated their belief that in any regional water-control problem the Federal Government should assume a major share of responsibility when Federal participation or initiative is necessary to safeguard the national interest or to accomplish broad regional objectives of national import where projects, because of size or complexity or potential multiple purposes or benefits, are beyond the means or the needs of local communities and private enterprise. Within these principles of Federal Government activity, I believe the great regional New England floodwater-control problem lies, and the Federal Government must, with promptness, assume their moral, patriotic, and financial obligation in granting assistance for the solution of the problem. It will be a national disgrace if the imperative and immediate needs of this flood-ravaged region are not provided for with full Federal assistance before disaster may strike again.

WORCESTER DIVERSIONARY TUNNEL

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I am very grateful for the opportunity to appear even briefly before you today. I shall confine my remarks at the moment to the particular project commonly described as the Worcester diversionary tunnel, so vitally necessary to the life, safety, and property protection of the citizens of my native city, and for which, as you all know, there has been included a sum of $60,000 in this bill to enable the Army engineers to complete a resurvey of the area and planning involved.

The essentiality of this project to the continuing welfare of Worcester is undoubted by anyone. Prayerfully remembering the personal sorrow and human tragedy which cannot be materially valued, it has been reliably but conservatively estimated that the presence of this tunnel during our most recent flood disaster would have prevented approximately $15 million of the property damage that was done. The Army Corps of Engineers has repeatedly and authoritatively stated that the tunnel is a vitally needed protection and it will do the job within reason. They have also testified that the project is well justified economically, inasmuch as the benefits that will derive are far greater than the cost and that the ratio of annual benefit to annual cost is exceedingly good. The President has included and requested the funds for this flood-control work, and in order to initiate the resurvey that must be accomplished before actual construction is started, which is planned for 1957, there remains only the approval of this committee; without your approval, the whole project could encounter tragic disruption. I most sincerely urge that you give this item your very sympathetic consideration.

TUNNEL APPROPRIATION APPROVED

(Excerpts from House speech, May 22, 1956)

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Chairman, flood control and protection has, indeed, these past several years, become one of our most pressing domestic problems, and the responsibility of the Federal Government to assist the various States and municipalities of the Nation in solving that problem is great.

In my particular city, the most efficient Corps of Engineers had long recognized the vital necessity of a flood-protection tunnel and they recommended the participation of the Federal Government in the achievement of such a project for local protection. Last January 18 I appeared before the committee to present a detailed explanation of the need and urgency of this particular project for the safety of the people of my city and area, and there was then approved in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill a sum of $60,000 to permit the Army Corps of Engineers to complete their resurvey of this Worcester diversionary tunnel flood-control project.

It was a matter of modest personal gratification to me that the committee approved the initial resurvey sum and further recommended in this present bill the additional sum of $840,000 to begin construction of the tunnel in this next fiscal year.

I earnestly urge the unanimous approval of the bill by this House so that projects of imperative importance, such as the Worcester diversionary tunnel in my area, and similar projects throughout the country, may soon have a beginning, primarily in protection of the lives of American citizens.

FLOOD INSURANCE APPROVED

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Chairman, in realization of the practically unanimous sentiment of the House concerning the vital necessity of enacting an adequate program of Federal flood insurance, and in consideration of this late Saturday hour, I have no intention of prolonging my remarks.

Flood damage, as we all know, hits with paralyzing effect, first, those ordinary homeowners who lose their homes by flood but still owe the mortgage debt on their homes; and, secondly, diligent businessmen, whose credit is so impaired by flood loss as to make it practically impossible for them to recover and resume business operations. We all realize further that Federal disaster grants are not now generally available for individuals as such, and private insurance companies cannot handle the situation.

I earnestly hope that every Member will grant this flood insurance legislative proposal his most conscientious consideration and that it will be approved without further delay.

TAX REDUCTION

(Excerpts from House speech, February 25, 1956)

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Chairman, I intend to support this measure providing a $20 credit against the individual income tax for each personal exemption because it is directly in line with the sentiments expounded by the President himself in his recent budget message.

It is my very deep belief that this tax credit for individual income taxpayers in general, and very particularly for our low-income taxpayers, is urgently needed now to sustain an expanding economy. I supported the tax legislation enacted in the last Congress mainly because it contained the first major revision in over 50 years for improving our antiquated tax system. However, I felt then, as now, the specific provisions of that legislation did not extend fair and just tax consideration to those working people and their families within our lowest income brackets. This present measure before us contains provision for the correction of that past deficiency because it benefits all taxpayers and is distributed to every taxpayer evenly on a dollar basis with respect to each personal exemption.

AMERICA'S ANSWER TO COMMUNIST PROPAGANDA—SOCIAL SECURITY

Mr. Speaker, in my firm conviction, adequate social-security legislation is one of the soundest barriers we can erect against the advancing scourge of Communist propaganda and philosophy which is today forcing us to fight for the survival of our democratic system.

How much stronger, how much more resistant to Communist entreatment and intrigue this Nation will be when its citizens are assured that our great business system and our Government, working harmoniously together, establish a dignified, humane financial operation making them eligible to receive what every worthy working American and family deserve; namely, reasonable security in time of old age, adversity, and dire need.

(Excerpts from House speech, July 18, 1955)

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Speaker, as I stated before, the changes offered in this bill, while not by any means completely sufficient to the needs, represent a progressive measure of improvement in the current social-security structure. Briefly and substantially, this bill provides (a) monthly benefit payments, under qualifying conditions, to workers who are totally and permanently disabled at or after the age of 50; (b) payment of monthly benefits at the age of 62 to women who are insured workers, wives of insured workers, and widows and dependent mothers of deceased insured workers; (c) continuation of monthly benefits to children who become totally and permanently disabled before the age of 18; (d) coverage extension to the self-employed professional groups now excluded—except physicians—to certain farm owners, and others; and (e) increases in the present schedule of contributions of one-half percent each on employers and employees and three-fourths percent on the self-employed.

No one can reasonably doubt that these liberalizing advancements in our present social-security pattern are in accord with the fundamental Christian principles and philosophy of American political and economic life, as opposed to the atheistic concept of a Communist slave state. I urge you all, therefore, to approve the amendments embodied in this bill without further delay, while we look forward to the enactment of even more equitable and liberalizing provisions of our Social Security System in the near future.

(Excerpts from House Speech, July 26, 1956)

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Speaker, these current improvements in our Social Security System, as spelled out in this legislation, are in entire accord with our Christian principles and traditions. They are within the capacity of this blessed and bountiful Nation to assume. We have been extremely anxious these last 10 years and extremely generous in providing billions of dollars to aid and assist friendly peoples, and even some enemies, all over the world. Some of those expenditures were and are undoubtedly wise in our self-interest, but the wisdom and practicality of certain others becomes even more and more doubtful.

To those who question our own ability to reasonably participate in a sound social-security system at the Federal level, I suggest they take a look at the staggering and astounding amounts of money that we have spent abroad. I ask them, in all sincerity, what will it profit us to spend abroad if we neglect to the point of discouragement and demoralization the welfare of our own people? I would remind them that the primary duty of this National Legislature is concern for the people of the United States.

This social-security measure is truly in accord with the exhortation of the President to legislate for the good of all Americans, and I now urge its unanimous adoption without further delay.

HOOVER COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege from 1947 to 1951 to be a member of the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, which acted upon the Hoover Commission recommendations. More than half of the first Hoover Commission recommendations have been adopted, with tremendous Government savings resulting, and I am proud to say I voted for them all.

In this Congress, then, it was a pleasant duty for me to urge the adoption of and vote for the enactment of a further recommendation of the second Hoover Commission to modernize our antiquated Government accounting and budgeting methods, which, as reliably estimated, will result in an additional savings to the American taxpayer of approximately $4 billion.

GOVERNMENT BUDGETING AND ACCOUNTING IMPROVEMENTS

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Speaker, the Congress, by enactment of the Budget and Accounting Procedures Act of 1950, took a significant step forward in providing for the use of program or performance budgets by the executive agencies of the Government. The objective of that law, which I was most happy to support at the time, was to have the Government departments show how they intended to spend their money on the basis of the major programs that the agencies carry out.

Mr. Speaker, if the Congress is to exercise any constitutional degree of effective control over Federal Government spending, it must have clear and concise information on which to exercise an intelligent control action. Effective control over the Government purse is one of the most important devices available to the Congress for protecting the American taxpayer from waste, extravagance, and bankruptcy.

I sincerely hope that we will soon be permitted to enact into law this most important Hoover Commission recommendation to improve the budgeting and accounting methods of the Federal Government. It is reliably estimated that the adoption of these modern accounting methods will result in a saving to the American taxpayer of approximately $4 billion.

MUTUAL SECURITY AND FOREIGN AID

Mr. Speaker, I have consistently been in favor of the basic principle involved in mutual security defense aid, and that is to prevent the necessity for American fathers, sons, and daughters to fight again all over the world. Nevertheless, I stated, at the beginning of this Congress, my firm opinion that we could retain the basic principle of this program but we should also effect sensible retrenchment, in consideration of the American taxpayer, because many friendly allies had already achieved a substantial measure of recovery and rehabilitation, because attempted financial bribery of doubtful allies was proving more and more to be a fruitless and unwise investment, and because our whole foreign-aid and mutual-security program was in dire need of resurvey and revision in accord with changing world conditions.

My legislative actions on this important subject during this Congress have been consistent with my best judgment as outlined above.

MUTUAL-SECURITY AMENDMENTS

(Excerpts from House speech, June 8, 1956)

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Chairman, preliminary to our continuing action, it might be well to reflect upon the fact that well over a hundred billion dollars of our people's money in principal and interest has been spent on foreign aid since 1940.

It is true that in the beginning of this program to rehabilitate war shattered and torn countries abroad, the American people were willing to reasonably share of their own wealth and resources in Christian generosity and practical wisdom. However, the time has come for the American taxpayer to sensibly ask if the astronomical sums we have been granting to many of these countries is still actually needed. From authoritative statistics here, it is obvious that some of these nations have long reached a point of economic productivity beyond their capacity previous to the war, and therefore substantial reductions, if not total elimination, are in order. Let us be patriotically mindful that this blessed Nation and its generous people are not possessed of inexhaustible resources, and let us remember our primary duty is to them.

In consistent pursuit of such sensible self-interest, the problem confronts us of continuing the laudable aims of our foreign aid and foreign policy in reasonable appropriation retrenchment in accord with what the already overburdened American taxpayer can afford. Mind you, this current authorization is proposed pending the resurvey of the whole program and its policy.

In summary, Mr. Chairman, let us reemphasize that there are appropriations outstanding sufficient to carry on our foreign-aid program for 3 years. There is overwhelming evidence from the highest authorities that the program has been overexpanded by overoptimistic and unrealistic planning. There is, unfortunately, overwhelming, startling evidence that changes in attitudes and reactions are taking place in too many countries all over the world which we have unhappily failed to properly appraise. There is nothing in this measure before us that will in any way disrupt the continuation of a reasonable mutual-security program. Nations that have been and still are friendly to us are being adequately assisted. Those strategic areas where some of our own boys are in danger, such as Korea, are being well equipped militarily. The most desirable point 4 operation is going and will go on. The substantial objectives of our whole foreign-aid program are not being denied.

We can meet our two obligations of reasonably protecting the American taxpayer and providing security from the Communist threat by adopting this measure containing sensible reductions in foreign aid while the whole program is being reevaluated. Let us remember that the Congress can always act promptly in any sudden emergency. I urge your approval of this bill without further delay.

FOREIGN AID APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Chairman, as I stated here a few weeks ago during the course of debate on the authorization bill for foreign aid, the fundamental purposes of this legislation were, and still are, Christian to our character and practical to our own self-interest.

The only fundamental question presented to us in this appropriation bill is whether or not it provides sufficient money to keep the program in reasonable operation while a thorough resurvey of our whole foreign aid policy and financial commitments to support it is conducted.

The reductions in this bill before us will in no way disrupt the continuation of a reasonable mutual-security program. The most desirable point 4 operation, allies who have demonstrated friendliness, and areas of strategic military importance to us are all adequately provided for.

While we then accept our obligation to provide for this security against communism for ourselves and the free world, let us also accept and concentrate upon our primary obligation to the American people, whom we represent, to take the greatest care of their money and exercise the highest vigilance over the manner in which it is spent. The resources of this great Nation are not limitless and the burdens now being patriotically assumed by each American taxpayer are truly staggering. It will profit us little to extravagantly attempt to buy uncertain friendships if the exorbitant price is the deteriorating morale of the American people and the grave danger of our own economic instability. Let us beware of both of these catastrophes which are more threatening than may appear on the surface. The American taxpayer has put both his faith and his money into our legislative hands. In legislative conscience let us neither betray the one nor dissipate the other.

UNITED STATES LABOR, AND HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. Speaker, I have continuously, during my tenure here, emphasized my convictum that outside of moral and spiritual strength, no attributes are more vital to national progress and security than the promotion of good health, the advancement of sound education, and the encouragement of peaceful labor-management relations in this Nation.

I reiterated my convictions on these subjects during the discussion of departmental appropriations in this current Congress.

GENERAL WELFARE APPROPRIATIONS

(Excerpts from House speech, March 5, 1956)

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Chairman, as I have said over the past several years when this annual appropriation bill for the Labor, and Health, Education, and Welfare Departments has come before us, there is perhaps, no measure upon which we act here that more vitally affects the lives of so many of our American citizens.

The appropriation we grant under this measure and the regulatory provisions governing the spending of the appropriation are designed to improve continuously the Christian, civilized working conditions of our people and to protect and advance the health of all our citizens, particularly children, women, and the aged. It is obvious, therefore, that this appropriation bill is of the greatest importance to the progress of our national welfare and that is why each of us has the highest obligation to devote the most conscientious attention to it.

In our consideration here, it might be well to emphasize the identification of some of the unit agencies affected by this appropriation bill and almost by their very names, which unfortunately are not as widely publicized for general appreciation as they should be, we realize their beneficial impact upon the country's welfare. First, let me mention just a few that come under the Department of Labor. There are the Bureau of Employees' Compensation, Bureau of Employment Security, Bureau of Labor Standards, Bureau of Veterans' Employment Rights, the Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Division, and the Women's Bureau. The value of these bureaus and their divisions to the country in maintaining and encouraging constant improvement in labor conditions and relations in the most productive country in the world is incalculable, both for domestic prosperity and tranquillity, as well as in providing adequate defense against any possible aggressor.

Some of the more vitally important units of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare are, the Social Security Administration, the Food and Drug Administration, the United States Office of Education, the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation, the United States Public Health Service, the Bureau of Medical Services, and the National Institutes of Health. In their various functions these agencies regulate and inspect the distribution and sale of food and drug products to protect the American public from unscrupulous dealers; vocational rehabilitation, a national necessity, is promoted by the Office of Education; the Children's Bureau insures better child and maternal health examination. Under the Institutes of Health, we have the various research programs for continuing work toward the cures for such devastating diseases as heart, cancer, arthritis, rheumatism, as well as mental and dental. These research institutes have been doing and are doing most encouraging work in the fight against the ravages of these terrible afflictions causing, annually, tremendous losses in our economic productivity, not to mention the suffering and unhappiness they visit upon individual lives and families. Progressive discoveries have been made in these recent years prompting us to reasonably feel that a great part of this human misery and economic loss will continue to be greatly alleviated by the wise use of these appropriation funds for persevering research into the health problems of the Nation and that is the chief reason why I am solidly in favor of increasing these particular appropriations by as much, or even more, than $10 million.

At a time when we are generously granting billions of dollars to aid our foreign allies, let us not be neglectful of our own citizens. At a time when we are telling the world of our better way of life, as opposed to Communist barbarism, let us not dangerously reduce any of these public services whose contributions to national progress have been universally acknowledged. At a time when we are engaged in a life-and-death struggle with the curse of communism, let us take no unwise chances of disrupting the high morale of our own good people. In conscience, let us vote in support of the continuing and full functioning of these units and agencies whose services are, indeed, in the national interest and emphatically good for all Americans.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. Speaker, 6 years ago, while appearing before the United States Committee for Reciprocity Information in Washington, I testified that I was not personally opposed to the cooperative economic theory lying at the basis of our trade-agreements program.

However, I also expressed and emphasized my understanding that the fulfillment of such a program was not intended, either by the Congress or by the President, to promote disintegration of our own essential domestic industries and to generate great segments of sectional unemployment.

Consistent with his legislative activities to advance the overall national welfare, I conceive it to be a real part of the duties of a United States Representative to exercise every legitimate and conscientious effort to protect and preserve the essential industries, with their associated employment opportunities, within his own district and area. These are the substantial thoughts and convictions that governed my action on the subject of extending trade agreements when it came before this Congress.

I first voted to recommit the bill for the purpose of including additional provisions for preserving essential domestic industries and employment, and then voted for final passage upon the promise of the President himself that Executive action would be taken whenever required to preserve essential domestic industries.

PROTECTING DOMESTIC INDUSTRIES AND EMPLOYMENT

(Excerpts from House speech, February 18, 1955)

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Chairman, I have never been, nor am I now, opposed to the basic principles underlying our trade-agreements program. However, there appear to be very serious grounds upon which this bill in its present form should be patriotically questioned.

Certainly it does not completely conform with the sentiment expressed in the President's own statement on trade policy contained in his state of the Union message February 2, 1953, when he declared:

"This objective must not ignore legitimate safeguarding of domestic industries, agriculture and labor standards." Nor does it conform with the statement contained in the report of the Commission on Foreign Economic Policy that "American labor should not be subjected to unfair competition as a part of any program to expand our foreign trade."

Even the advocates of this bill admit it will inevitably visit great hardships upon great numbers of employees and many industries in certain sections of the country, such as New England, where textile manufacturing and innumerable other products will be hardest hit. Yet there are no provisions or proposals, nor are we permitted to offer any for adoption, in this measure to prevent the imposition of serious economic suffering upon such American workers and industries.

Therefore a great many of us here, trying to conscientiously represent our people, very deeply feel that the tariff cutting features of this bill should be wisely held in abeyance until, with Government assistance, new industries are encouraged and developed for areas that would be so disastrously affected and proper precautions are taken to safeguard the employment opportunities rightfully belonging to so many patriotic American working people. Toward that objective labor, industry, and all levels of government should sincerely cooperate.

It is truly not a simple or easy problem to solve but it is just as truly our representative responsibility to work out a fair trade program that will be fair to Americans as well as our foreign friends. I earnestly hope the House will vote to recommit this bill for the sole purpose of writing in new provisions designed to prevent great hardships from falling upon many regional industries and workers, not to mention other provisions to retain and preserve essential defense resources that we can ill afford to dissipate in the face of threatening Communist aggression.

FEDERAL HIGHWAY PROGRAM

Mr. Speaker, the foremost authorities in the Nation have testified and emphasized to the absolute need of improving the roads and highways of this country, and they have unanimously urged immediate Federal legislative action.

In response to the truth of this overwhelming evidence from the highest sources, if such were needed beyond personal observation and knowledge, I felt it my duty to speak and vote in favor of the Federal highway aid program in the national interest.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

(Excerpts from House speech, April 27, 1956)

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Chairman, there are three fundamentally important factors involved in this overall highway problem—the safety factor, the defense factor, and the economic factor.

With respect to the safety factor, we have already killed more than a million people in 50 years with automobiles. Thirty million more have been injured. Automobile accidents have taken twice as many American lives as we have lost in all our wars. The number injured in traffic accidents is 25 times the number of men wounded in wars since the first Minutemen fell at Lexington, 179 years ago. It would, therefore, be unChristian, uncivilized, and inhuman to continue to disregard the appalling loss of life and limb to American citizens by any further delay in taking steps to prevent this mounting holocaust on the Nation's highways.

With respect to the defense factor, let us dwell for a moment on what would happen if war suddenly broke out. In this age of the H-bomb there is no longer safety in digging in. It would be necessary to evacuate the great industrial cities within range of the Communist air force. How could they possibly be evacuated when even on a normal peacetime day our roadways and highways are jammed?

With respect to the economic factor, a huge and sensibly planned increase in roadbuilding is necessary if the national economy is to continue expansion and if the Nation's living standards are to continue upward.

Future highway construction must be planned to serve an economy which the President has estimated will rise to $500 billion worth of goods and services annually within 10 years. At present it is conservatively estimated by the authorities that the lag in highway construction is costing the Nation about $5 billion a year.

In consideration of our progressing economy and this tremendous financial loss, the obvious answer is that we cannot continue to afford to throw away $5 billion annually by failing to provide safeguarded highways for the more than 70 million motor vehicles that most probably will be on our United States highways by 1965. It is time for action.

MINIMUM WAGE

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support and to urge approval of this bill amending the Fair Labor Standards Act by increasing the present minimum wage to $1 per hour.

In our consideration of this problem, let us never forget the warning lesson of the great depression in the early 1930's that lack of increasing purchasing power in the hands of our lowest income families, who spend the most, brings about terrible unemployment, hardships, and economic stagnation. It profits us nothing to possess the greatest industrial production potential in the world if low wages and low consumer income prevent millions of Americans from buying these products.

I am also intensely concerned about another aspect of this minimum-wage problem affecting so disastrously the textile workers and industries, and other groups, in my own home area of Massachusetts and New England. An increase in the minimum wage would tend to revitalize the textile industry, discriminated against as it is in our so-called reciprocal trade agreements, not only in the establishment of a decent wage structure, but also in market stability, as well as being a just and necessary rebuke to unfair competition. It would discourage the seducement of industry to cheap-labor localities by subsidies. It would compensate the workers for increased productivity, thereby providing more purchasing power which would, of necessity, create a wider demand for textiles.

We are here obligated to enact laws designed to assist, not hinder, all those who are conscientious and trying to be honestly fair and decent. We are here obligated to enact laws primarily designed to advance the general welfare. In compliance with and in the spirit of that high obligation, I urge you to approve now this minimum wage of $1 per hour, while we at the same time pledge ourselves to be continuously and conscientiously concerned with the advancement of American living standards and national prosperity.

PROTECTING THE CIVIL RIGHTS OF ALL AMERICANS

Mr. Speaker, the ideal of equality under law has always been a great and distinctive American goal. The so-called Civil Rights Act of 1956 was designed to assist in the accomplishment of this great goal by strengthening the law-enforcement functions of the Federal Government in the entire area of civil rights.

I was, therefore, very happy to fulfill my legislative obligation in speaking and voting for this measure.

PROTECTING OUR LIBERTIES

(Excerpts from House speech, July 23, 1956)

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this legislation is clear. It is to make more certain that rights guaranteed by the Constitution and laws of the United States will be enjoyed by all, regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin.

It is directed at no particular section of America. Certainly no area of the country can claim achievement of full equality under law. The Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives recognizes its distinct duty to enact wise legislation which will guarantee that the words of promise spoken by the Constitution will be fulfilled in every corner of the Nation. It is also realized that American leadership of the free world is aided greatly by practical demonstrations of our historic commitment to the ideal of equality under law.

I, therefore, sincerely hope that any temporary passions, prejudices, or partisanship will be put aside today in order that we may render a historical legislative accomplishment in our own national interest and also provide a legislative inspiration to all peoples everywhere on this blessed earth.

SLUM CLEARANCE AND DECENT HOUSING FOR THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

Mr. Speaker, since being privileged to enter this House in 1947, the advancement of a sensible public housing slum clearance and urban redevelopment program has been of primary legislative concern to me. My concern has been ever based upon the conscientious conviction that the family is the basic unit of our national life, and the greatest encouragement for good family life and good citizenship is living in a decent home with healthful surroundings.

Although the only housing legislation that came before us was extremely limited and fell far short of acknowledged needs, I considered it a clear duty to vote and speak in favor of it in order to keep alive this most beneficial program in the interest of all Americans.

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Chairman, I very deeply regret that the manner in which this legislation is being presented to us today leaves no choice to those conscientious legislators who are vitally interested in trying to help enact a sound and adequate program to enable the multitudinous members of our low-and middle-income groups and the elderly to live in decent homes in accord with our Christian traditions. We have here unfortunately to choose between the most meager housing program that opponents of this objective can devise or no housing program at all.

We all realize that the basic problem of providing public housing cannot be severed from the problems of slum clearance and urban renewal programs. The 1950 census showed there were 15 million substandard dwellings now in use in this Nation. Only a full public housing program coupled with a less restricted slum clearance and urban renewal program can eliminate this situation.

If we do not act on this measure before us, the Federal Housing Administration mortgage insurance for veterans and home repair will die next September. If we do not accept this bill, the very modest authorized construction of 35,000 public housing units for the next 2 years will perish, along with the slum clearance and urban renewal program that goes hand in hand with it. The college housing program that has been advocated by our leading educators and that has proved so valuable is continued in this watered-down housing bill, as well as authorization for hospital construction that is in urgent need.

The token housing extension provisions of this bill will at least serve to keep the fundamental program alive. I urge you, then, to vote for it for that reason alone, while at the same time we dedicate ourselves to the expansion and improvement of it at the first opportunity in the future.

POSTAL AND FEDERAL EMPLOYEES RETIREMENT

Mr. Speaker, the majority of our people sensibly realize that the best insurance against any misguided reception of false Communist propaganda by our Government employees is to wisely and reasonably extend to them equitable salary, retirement, and annuity treatment.

In that spirit, I urged the adoption of and spoke in favor of the revision of the postal and Federal employees retirement system that was finally approved by the Congress.

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Speaker, it is only ordinary practical commonsense and recognition of the facts of life that if our faithful postal workers and Government employees are encouraged, by a reasonable salary and retirement system, to meet their family obligations and face the future with a certain confidence, then there will be no doubt of their loyalty as good Americans and their repudiation of Communist propaganda temptation.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is of importance to remind this House that the last major revision of the Federal employees' retirement and annuity system was made in 1948. I do not believe it is necessary to remind the House that the cost of living and major changes in the pension and retirement systems of our commercial and industrial businesses have changed considerably since that date. The comparable systems within Federal Government employment have fallen far behind and are now completely outmoded.

Legislation to sensibly liberalize the retirement benefits and annuities of our postal and Federal employees while at the same time improving the overall financial soundness of the civil-service retirement fund is ready to be acted upon. The present setup is antiquated and far behind similar systems in the competing employment field of private enterprise. Our loyal and faithful Government employees are at the mercy of the Congress, unlike the employees of private business. It is the duty of the Congress to encourage Federal employment of persons of competence and character.

FEDERAL AID TO SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Speaker, the overwhelming array of authoritative testimony of factual record, including Presidential recommendation, could leave no question in the mind of a conscientious legislator that this Nation is faced with a dismaying shortage of classrooms and teachers for our schoolchildren. Legislation to grant reasonable Federal assistance to correct this catastrophic situation, which included provisions to prevent any possibility of Federal control of our schools, was presented to the Congress, and I executed my duty in speaking and voting for it.

THE NATION'S CHILDREN AND TEACHERS

(Excerpts from House speech, July 5, 1956)

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Chairman, the astonishing and astounding facts now are that 18 percent of our schools are fire hazards, a third are health and safety hazards, and thousands of school buildings are more than 50 years old. Coupled with these distressing figures is the cold fact that the school enrollment figure in 1955–56 was 1,675,000 over that of the previous year. By 1959 it is reliably reported that the total school enrollment will be more than 38½ million children.

This admitted classroom shortage problem goes beyond and is much deeper than the restriction of facilities and materials. Obviously the root of the problem and the real cause for national concern is that a shortage of classrooms and classroom facilities deprives the Nation's youth of adequate educational opportunities. Limited classroom space and old, unsafe, and unhealthy buildings are not conducive to learning nor are they by any means an inspiration to the faithful teacher. If we ignore this critical problem our greatest asset and investment for the future—the Nation's youth—are continuing to be improperly trained for the tremendous responsibilities of leadership which someday will be theirs.

Associated with this classroom shortage is perhaps even the more important problem of the shortage of teachers. Enactment of a sound Federal aid to school construction bill will at least result, indirectly, in helping to make the teaching profession more attractive. Taking advantage of Federal aid for construction will permit State and communities to allocate more of their education budgets to the increase of teachers' salaries.

I would be the first to protest any unwarranted intrusion, or danger of intrusion, by the Federal Government into the supervision and direction of the schools of this country. I am extremely happy that the committee has seen to it that this legislation carries provisions that preclude any possibility of Federal control of our schools.

I earnestly hope and pray that the majority of this membership can find it in their minds and hearts to support the Constitution while they are supporting the Nation's children and that we can in conscience and in patriotism preserve the Nation and provide for our youth by adopting this Federal school construction measure which is essentially good for all of America.

OTHER IMPORTANT LEGISLATION

Mr. Speaker, I have listed above a recitation of my words and actions with respect to the legislation which perhaps achieved the most prominence and publicity in this current Congress. There were other legislative subjects that may have been less publicized but were as equally or more important to the great numbers of American citizens whom they would directly affect.

I feel it is my duty, therefore, to present a résumé of the convictions I expressed on some of these more outstanding issues:

(Excerpts from House remarks, June 28, 1956)

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Speaker, as we move into the last few weeks of this Congress, it is most distressing to me that some very vital and important legislative proposals affecting large segments of our American people remain unacted upon.

ASSISTANCE TO ECONOMICALLY DEPRESSED AREAS

For instance, there is legislation pending to provide assistance to communities, enterprises, and industries in areas needing redevelopment to enable them to expand and adjust their productive activity to alleviate substantial unemployment by providing new employment opportunities for developing and expanding existing facilities and resources without reducing employment in other areas of the country.

Mr. Speaker, up in my area where inroads are constantly being made because of cheap foreign importations and sectional competition upon the textile, machinery, and armament manufacturing industries, among others, and their associated employment opportunities, there is vital need of sensible legislation of this type.

I sincerely trust that this Congress will not close without corrective legislative attention being devoted to the solution of this problem affecting my own region, and so many other regions of the country.

Because of the hardships continuously being visited upon the textile industry, I earnestly hope that the Congress will go on record with an expression of concern over the disintegration of this most essential industry because of increasing foreign cheap importations and also urge the President to use his emergency powers to control the excess of these damaging imports.

IMMIGRATION REVISION

Mr. Speaker, I very earnestly also hope that this Congress will not adjourn without enacting revision and correction of some of the injustices that are contained in our present immigration laws.

I urge the adoption of sensible amendments which will permit the pooling of unused immigration quotas and their use by those countries such as Greece, Italy, Poland, and others, whose quotas are vastly oversubscribed and impose abnormal waiting periods of several years' duration upon otherwise qualified and desirable applicants.

It would be an added injustice not to renew the provisions of our outstanding Refugee Relief Act and permit the many qualified thousands of refugee-relief applicants from the Iron Curtain countries to come to the United States who otherwise will have little hope of ever entering America.

Among other injustices that should be corrected are the present exclusion of certain tubercular immigrant applicants who are members of American families and a great many who are barred because of conviction of a felony in another country when the same offense would not be considered a felony in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot forget that this Nation itself was founded almost altogether by refugees and displaced persons. In advancing our position of world leadership in these perilous days, we can speak more convincingly for freedom everywhere when we have done our Christian utmost to give real freedom to those now faced with Communist extinction. Security-screened and qualified refugees are the kind of people in whose behalf the original American tradition of asylum was established and whose immigration to these shores has enriched our country from its earliest days right up to this hour.

I hope and trust that we will be granted an opportunity to enact sensible legislative amendments to expand and correct our present immigration laws before this Congress terminates.

OUR OBLIGATION TO THE VETERAN AND DEPENDENTS

Mr. Speaker, I and a great many other Members of this House have become deeply disturbed by the increasing publicity and propaganda questioning the continuation and cost-of-living adjustments and other benefits being reasonably accorded our veterans.

It is strikingly noticeable that the sources of these doubts about our obligation to war veterans have no hesitancy or question at all about the wisdom of continuing to provide billions of dollars in subsidies to carry on our faltering foreign-aid program. Some of these people even seem to prefer the vacillating actions of Tito to the loyalty of the American veteran and his family. They seem to think that an astronomical gambling investment in Tito is more valuable than a reasonable investment to fulfill our duty to these American patriots who have been disabled in war and whose families have been visited with extreme material hardship because of military service sacrifices.

I do not believe that the people of this country now wish to turn their backs in forgetfulness of the substantial sacrifices made by our war veterans and their dependents in protecting this Nation from armed enemies. On the contrary, I believe the great majority of the American people realize there is only one safeguard for this Nation in time of emergency, and that is the willingness of American men and women to fight and die to preserve our national security. I am sure they further understand that the efficiency of our fighting men is governed by the morale of their families and dependents. In these tense days of international turmoil, it is not only just but patriotically wise to inspire the veteran of the future with the example of our real concern for the veteran of the past.

Mr. Speaker, there is legislation pending to extend farm, home, and business loan guaranties for our veterans, to continue vocational rehabilitation adjustment assistance, to raise the ratings and pensions of the disabled war veterans and dependent allowances, as well as income limitations, in accord with our increased basic living costs. There is pending legislation to extend simple justice to Spanish-American War veterans and their widows, who are trying to eke out a bare existence on some $54 per month.

These, and other beneficial measures, such as the so-called War Orphans Education Act, should be enacted without delay. Most of the pending bills are substantially sound and beneficial and are intended to discharge our just obligation to the war veteran and his family. I shall continue to work in support of their enactment as the best investment we can make to insure our national security.

SMALL BUSINESS MUST BE PRESERVED

Mr. Speaker, it has always been an unquestioned American tradition that this Government shall counsel, assist, and protect the interests of small business in order to preserve our democratic system of free competitive enterprise.

It is perhaps not surprising that the various department heads in the executive branch have not been overwhelmingly zealous in presenting a program to us to aid the small business of the Nation. That, nevertheless, does not discharge the Congress from its own legislative responsibility.

There are a great many sound measures to grant vitally needed help to small business pending in the Congress, and I sincerely trust that they will not be passed over in the adjournment rush.

It is true that we extended the life of the Small Business Administration last year, and I am proud of the part I had in the original enactment of that beneficial legislation, but thus far that is about all that has been done for small business.

There remain many additional conditions affecting the vitality of small business that can be at least partially removed by applicable legislation.

One of the substantial helps we could give to small business would be to adopt a measure amending the Robinson-Patman Act to correct the weakening of that act which has resulted from several court decisions beginning with the Supreme Court's decision in Standard Oil of Indiana against Federal Trade Commission. It appears the Supreme Court misinterpreted the original intention of Congress, and the objective, therefore, is to reemphasize and make clear that intention. The original purpose, and the purpose of current legislation, is simply to grant small business equality of opportunity and remove present discrimination that is allowed against him. It is designed to prohibit the larger concerns from getting preferential discounts, secret rebates, and under-the-counter deals which are discriminatory against the average merchant. The legislation is meant to apply only where there is interstate commerce, and its end objective is to guarantee to the man who buys his goods for resale that he will get the same price from the supplier that this supplier grants to his competitors under the same terms and conditions. It permits differences in prices in accord with the normal rules of good business practice, but it prevents the good-faith defense where the effect of the discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. This is sound legislation in the American tradition and it should be passed by the Congress.

There are other bills pending which recognize problems associated with the suffocation visited upon small business when a few giant corporations control raw materials, processing, and manufacturing segments of industry and a large number of very small business firms serve as retail distributors for these corporations. Retail gasoline dealers and automobile dealers are two prime examples. It appears clear from the evidence that legislation is urgently needed to restrict these giant suppliers' freedom to unjustly and summarily cancel dealers' franchises without good cause, and we particularly need to restrict suppliers' freedom to coerce dealers to follow certain policies or to deal only in the brands of merchandise dictated by these corporations.

There is a further need for legislation to strengthen our antimerger laws in these days of increasing tendency of great corporate mergers with resultant harmful limitations upon our traditional competitive enterprise system. These laws should be made more strengthened by helpful amendments, and the penalties for criminal violation should be greatly increased.

The Congress should also do all in its power to encourage and request the executive branch to permit small business to participate in defense contracts. It has been authoritatively revealed that in the last 3 years the Department of Defense has been awarding 95 percent of the value of all contracts on the basis of negotiations. Therefore, it is certainly in order for this Congress to enact legislation of stronger intent and requirement for the award of Government contracts on the basis of advertised competitive bids so that small business will have a better opportunity. The Department of Defense in all fairness should itself initiate a program of negotiating contracts with small business whenever such contracts are suitable.

Another field in which remedial action could be taken is in the tax setup affecting small business. Action should be taken to make the corporate form of business more attractive taxwise to small firms now existing as partnerships so that these units could accumulate retained business earnings at corporate rates and taxes on smaller corporations should be investigated in order to work out a system of graduated or progressive rates similar to that applying to individual income. There is much that can be done to help small business in this tax field and I urge the Committee on Ways and Means to give the subject their prompt and earnest attention.

If we neglect the health of small business in this Nation we are betraying our duty of preserving the economic integrity of the Nation; let us then assume our rightful obligation to grant reasonable assistance to small business by the prompt enactment of suitable legislation.

CONGRESS SHOULD NOT BE ADJOURNED WHILE VITAL PROBLEMS REMAIN UNSOLVED

Mr. Speaker, at this point I desire to express my opposition to any early sine die adjournment of the House of Representatives while vitally important legislation remains pending.

Just a few of the problems that still challenge our legislative conscience are the enactment of a civil-rights program, school-construction aid, adequate housing and slum clearance, and flood-disaster insurance. These problems, as well as many others, very deeply affect the general welfare and progress of the country. It is my judgment that we are morally bound to remain in session until these vitally important problems are legislatively solved for the good of all Americans.

BILLS INTRODUCED IN 84TH CONGRESS

Mr. Speaker, limitations of space and time prevent me from further dwelling on multitudinous other bills that were discussed, but I shall personally report to my people on them at length and in detail, during the next several months.

However, this summary would be highly inadequate if I did not list, in part, some of the bills I introduced in the 84th Congress: They follow:

House Concurrent Resolution 5, a concurrent resolution favoring universal disarmament.

House Concurrent Resolution 208, a concurrent resolution to express the sense of the Congress with respect to the loss of the famous Wayside Inn.

House Joint Resolution 468, a joint resolution to establish a Northeastern United States Watershed Development and Flood Protection Commission.

H. R. 355. A bill to provide for loans to enable needy and scholastically qualified students to continue post-high-school education.

H. R. 356, a bill to provide for programs of public facilities construction which will stimulate employment in areas having a substantial surplus of labor.

H. R. 357, a bill to provide for the establishment of a United States Foreign Service Academy.

H. R. 358, a bill to amend section 201 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, so as to provide that all quota numbers not used in any year shall be made available to immigrants in oversubscribed areas in the following year.

H. R. 359, a bill to provide assistance to communities, industries, business enterprises, and individuals to facilitate adjustments made necessary by the trade policy of the United States.

H. R. 360, a bill to allow certain members of the Armed Forces to designate the Eastern Orthodox faith as a religious preference on their identification tags.

H. R. 361, a bill to provide for emergency Federal financial assistance to the States and Territories in the construction of public elementary and secondary school facilities urgently needed because of overcrowding, and to encourage full and efficient use of State and local resources in meeting school construction needs.

H. R. 2385, a bill to indemnify drivers of motor vehicles of the postal service against liability for damages arising out of the operation of such vehicles in the performance of official duties.

H. R. 2970, a bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act to reduce from 65 to 60 the age at which women may become entitled to benefits thereunder.

H. R. 5110, a bill declaring October 12 to be a legal holiday.

H. R. 6094, a bill to establish the Federal Agency for Handicapped.

H. R. 7184, a bill to amend the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 to make temporary provision for making payments in lieu of taxes with respect to certain real property transferred by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its subsidiaries to other Government departments.

H. R. 7753, a bill to provide that no fee shall be charged by any branch of the Defense Department for furnishing copies of official documents related to a veteran's or a serviceman's military record.

H. R. 8342, a bill to authorize the construction of flood protection measures, with particular reference to areas where severe damages have recently occurred as the result of extraordinary floods.

H. R. 8343, a bill to authorize the construction of flood protection measures, with particular reference to areas where severe damages have recently occurred as the result of extreme rainfall accompanying hurricane storms.

H. R. 10744, a bill to provide for national flood insurance and reinsurance.

H. R. 10950, a bill to amend the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 to provide increases in benefits.

H. R. 10995, a bill to establish a sound and comprehensive national policy with respect to the fisheries; to create and prescribe the functions of the United States Fisheries Commission; to strengthen the fisheries segment of the national economy.

H. R. 11281, a bill to extend for an additional 6 years the authority to make, guarantee, and insure loans under title III of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended.

A NECESSARY PERSONAL NOTE

Mr. Speaker, 10 years ago, following my release from active military service, I presented my qualifications to the voters of the Fourth Congressional District in Massachusetts for the honor and privilege of representing them in the United States Congress. They accepted me in November of 1946 and reelected me to each succeeding Congress.

Since the day of assuming the responsibilities of Congressman, I have conscientiously worked to justify that confidence and trust. The full facilities of my office have been energetically and courteously extended, at all times, for personal service to my constituents. I have cooperated, on every occasion, with the community agencies, social, fraternal, and racial organizations of my district in the promotion of their various objectives.

The expressed wishes of the majority of the people I represent, and a thorough study of the issues involved, have been the foundation for my judgment and action on legislation to advance the best interests of my district and the Nation.

In return for the trust and confidence expressed in me, I consider it a major part of my duty to present this summary of my voting record on domestic and foreign legislative issues to the people of my district.

CONCLUSION—TIMELY COUNSEL FROM A GREAT AMERICAN

Mr. Speaker, the words of wise authority remain forever as comforting beacons of guidance in troubled, distressing hours. A counseling message to all Americans is contained in the following extract from a speech given at Harvard University graduation exercises on June 30, 1910, by the late great Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes:

The most important agencies of democracy are, after all, not the organs of government, but the influences that shape public opinion. * * * Democracy must prize its public life. It has stripped it almost altogether of ceremonial and of meaningless and absurd forms. It has placed the public officer in a position of power, to be used for service. * * * Having surrounded him with none of the pomp which makes appeal to the thoughtless and ignorant, it must invest him with the higher honor which should be the reward of fidelity. Those who cultivate the true democratic spirit will be as earnest in their support of faithful officers as they are unsparing in their condemnation of the faithless.

Congressional Quarterly

OF
HON. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND
OF FLORIDA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement by me on the Congressional Quarterly.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In the closing days of the 84th Congress my distinguished colleague the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], as chairman of the Republican senatorial campaign committee, made certain comments in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 16 and 27 relative to the useful publication known as Congressional Quarterly. While recognizing that "the Congressional Quarterly has accurately reported the votes on specific rollcalls," the Senator from Kansas charged that "there is an editorial bias in interpreting the figures," and that "it slants the explanation of its statistics." The Senator from Kansas, himself a subscriber to Congressional Quarterly, makes it clear that he has not "questioned its value as a ready source of information on the activities of Congress," but he does question "how it presents its facts."

While I realize that no method of listing, compiling, organizing, analyzing, or commenting upon the votes of Members of Congress could ever meet the impossible task imposed by the intense desire of all Members that every comment concerning their votes on all projects should be completely sympathetic with their respective points of view, I am unwilling to have the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD close this year without inserting these observations regarding Congressional Quarterly.

I have followed this unique and valuable service since it was founded in 1945. I have known its founders, Henrietta and Nelson Poynter, of St. Petersburg, since before I was Governor of Florida. I knew Nelson Poynter's father as a constructive, crusading newspaperman from my earliest days in Florida politics.

Congressional Quarterly has provided a fast, accurate factual service for more than 200 newspapers and other publications with many and varied political viewpoints. It seems to me that the client-editors of these publications, of all conceivable points of view, are able watchdogs against bias or slanting of Congressional Quarterly reports.

This service has made Congress more comprehensible to more people by logging all votes and all bills and presenting them in a form that laymen can understand. In compiling the records of support of Congressmen for President Eisenhower Congressional Quarterly has followed the same methods that it used during the Truman administration.

I believe that many of my colleagues in both Houses are a little more conscious of their records as a result of the nationwide use of Congressional Quarterly material. A box score cannot be devised that will suit every Congressman for every occasion. But Congress is better served and the institution of self-government is better served if more voters have an interest in and working knowledge of what goes on in Congress.

A year ago Congressional Quarterly took pains to show its client-editors how the box-score was compiled on the support each Congressman has given to the Eisenhower program. At the time it forecast that these records would be the heart of 1956 elections. The fact that many Republicans "like Ike" in an election year, but vote against his program is an embarrassment of their own making and does not justify attacking the integrity of the newspaper service that supplies the data on an impersonal basis.

Since I doubt that many people know how difficult and expensive a job it is to analyze and cover the actions and votes of Congress I would like to quote from Congressional Quarterly's explanation of the process, which it gave to its subscribing newspapers:

"Congressional Quarterly's job of making the record available, so that America's editors could 'take it and give it vitality,' has been the most massive, and probably the most costly, single assignment in the history of American journalism.

"It has required, in a decade of effort, the development of a highly trained staff, the use of complex and expensive electronic equipment, the invention and steady improvement of a whole series of special techniques essential to the task.

"As a research project alone the assignment was so formidable that it had never been attempted, even by the big foundations for the purposes of historians and scholars. In any case American editors knew that this was a job that should be paid for by American newspapers for their own use, not left to government or to charity.

"They also knew that, while it was a newspaper responsibility, the assignment was one that no newspaper or wire service, geared to the fast reporting of spot news, could undertake successfully. * * *

"The job had to be done by a new, separate, specialized organization devoted to the task of collecting and organizing congressional and political information for newspaper use.

"It had to be an organization especially trained to gather, correlate, index, and prepare for the easiest and fastest use of reporters, editors, and editorial writers, all of the essential factual record and background on Congress, and to build a system to keep it always up to date.

"It also had to be capable of anticipating the needs of newspapers and, by planning years ahead, to build a solid factual basis for newspaper coverage of elections 2, 4, 10 years in the future.

"When Congressional Quarterly undertook this task, the full dimensions of the problem were hardly imagined.

"The raw materials consisted of tons of documents, millions of words, yard after yard of CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS, stacks of committee and floor calendars, bushels of reports, amendments, speeches, records of junkets, Budget Bureau and White House recommendations by the pound, executive agency and department reports and proposals from floor to ceiling. And the supply kept coming every day.

"All this had to be sifted, sorted, and analyzed, while a system and staff were developed simultaneously to keep the job up to date * * *.

"Here's a case history of two interlocking Congressional Quarterly stories, Eisenhower Support and Eisenhower Boxscore, published during the 84th Congress.

"1. Every Eisenhower message, speech, press conference, and other public statement was examined minutely by a trained Congressional Quarterly staff. Every specific Presidential request or recommendation for legislation, every clear-cut declaration of stands on public issues, was recorded and cataloged. This process required the equivalent of half time for one experienced staff member the year round.

"2. During the 1st session of the 84th Congress, in 1955, the President's legislative program consisted of 207 items. Each was followed painstakingly through the legislative process. Congressional Quarterly recorded exactly what happened to every point of Mr. Eisenhower's program. The boxscore showed which items Congress approved, which were rejected, which sustained setbacks, which progressed part way.

"3. Rollcall votes place Members of Congress on record. During 1955, Congress took 93 rollcalls that tested support of the President's program. On each, his public stands made clear which way he would have voted if he had been Congressman Eisenhower. Most of the 93 votes decided Congress' stand on points of the President's proposals. The balance tested congressional support for his viewpoint on other issues.

"Working from its meticulous record of the President's stands, Congressional Quarterly analyzed each rollcall, pinned down the facts on who was for, who against Mr. Eisenhower.

"The job of logging and analysis for these two stories—Eisenhower Boxscore and Eisenhower Support—took the equivalent of one highly trained staff member's full time, all year.

"4. All information on the 93 Eisenhower-issue rollcalls was entered on IBM punchcards. The final compilations of Eisenhower Support, by parties and by individual Congressmen, were made electronically.

"Operation of the IBM machine for the Eisenhower Support story took the equivalent of about one-third time for one man all year.

"5. Then—and only then—came the writing. Each of the two stories took the time of a topflight writer for approximately 5 days, plus repeated, regular consultation with the research staff throughout the year.

"The result: A smash exclusive story for Congressional Quarterly newspapers; vital information the voter never before could get; a noticeable increase in caution and responsibility on the part of politicians and parties.

"This kind of thorough, exclusive reporting is standard Congressional Quarterly practice."

Henrietta and Nelson Poynter live in Pinellas County, Fla., where he is owner and editor of the St. Petersburg Times. I read his newspaper regularly and frequently disagree with its editorial position. The Republicans are in his debt because his newspaper stanchly supported the two-party system when they were weak in his area in numbers and funds. I mention this because more recently Pinellas County's Republican vote gave that party its first seat in Congress since reconstruction days—which seat we Democrats have high hopes of recapturing this year.

In my years of careful reading of Congressional Quarterly reports, I have found no bias carried over to it from the editorial attitudes of the St. Petersburg Times. In my years of public life I have met many newspaper editors and writers. I place the Poynters among the top of those who have a high and continuing sense of responsibility toward making journalism strengthen our democratic institutions.

Civil Defense for National Survival—Report of the Holifield Subcommittee

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHET HOLIFIELD
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the Military Operations Subcommittee, under my chairmanship, recently completed an investigation of the civil defense program. This was the most searching and comprehensive inquiry into civil defense ever made by a congressional committee.

Hearings were held in selected major target areas, including New York City and Syracuse, Detroit, Los Angeles, San Francisco, and Washington, D. C., the Nation's Capital. Our subcommittee heard more than 200 witnesses prominent in science, engineering, and medicine, and other professions.

The governors of 36 States and mayors of 33 large cities submitted their written statements to the subcommitte and a number of them also appeared in person. The highest military authorities and the chiefs of the Federal agencies responsible for civil defense planning were heard.

The outcome of our work is a report on civil defense, known as House Report No. 2946, which was presented to the Congress this session.

EVACUATION POLICY "DANGEROUSLY SHORTSIGHTED"

The subcommittee report was sternly critical of the existing civil defense program. It said that this program, which relies on evacuation, is weak and ineffective, and, indeed, dangerously shortsighted.

The official testimony of Mayor Poulson and the Civil Defense Director of the city of Los Angeles reflected the common sense knowledge of our people that evacuation, under conditions of limited warning time which we must expect as weapon technology advances, is impossible. As a civil defense policy for the Los Angeles area, evacuation is absurd.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SHOULD FACE UP TO RESPONSIBILITIES

The subcommittee recommendations, which were endorsed by the full committee with 1 or 2 qualifications, add up to this: The Federal Government should squarely face up to its responsibilities to provide for the common defense by developing a civil defense program as a vital component of our overall national defense.

We took the position that civil defense must not be neglected any more than our Army, Navy, and Air Force. America is always peace-minded but it dare not let down its defenses against possible aggression. Civil defense is an essential part of these defenses in the nuclear age.

GROUP SHELTER PROTECTION ESSENTIAL

The key measure in this civil defense program, our report pointed out, was a program of group shelter construction to protect people from the direct blast and heat effects of atomic-hydrogen bombs and the lethal fallout radiation which persists after the explosion.

We did not try to gloss over the difficulties or the costs of building adequate shelters, or the demands which must be made upon the public for supporting an effective civil defense.

CIVIL DEFENSE LEGISLATION MUST BE OVERHAULED

We found that Federal agencies like the Atomic Energy Commission were not giving the full facts on nuclear weapons effects to the public, and that the Federal Civil Defense Administration was built on a faulty legislative structure that made for a diffusion of responsibility and a lack of strong Federal leadership.

Our report proposed that the 1950 civil defense legislation be rewritten to face the realities and meet the needs of the nuclear age. Moreover, it stressed the importance of maintaining civilian control over civil defense rather than let the military "take over."

HOLIFIELD REPORT RECOGNIZED BY PRESS AND PRESIDENT

Many leading newspaper editorial writers and columnists have praised our report highly. I believe that in the days to come it will be the basis for a complete reorganization of the civil defense program.

President Eisenhower, in fact, recently released a letter to the Federal Civil Defense Administrator, in which he took due note of the work of my subcommittee and promised that in his next budget message to the Congress, he would make recommendations to modernize the civil defense program based upon our recommendations and others.

I am confident that in 1957 the President who is elected to office must and will take account of our constructive recommendations for the security and continued strength of America against the threat of nuclear attack.

Congressman Hagen Reports to the People—The Work of the 1956 Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. HARLAN HAGEN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HAGEN. Mr. Speaker, in reporting on the work of the Congress I will deal principally with those subjects which are of most immediate interest to Kern, Kings, and Tulare Counties, and my people. I feel that such a report is a necessary aspect of my job. Almost everyone has decisions important to his or her welfare which depend on additions to, or changes of, some Federal statute or the action of some administrator. In the space of time allowed to me I will touch upon the most important of these matters and hold myself available for information to my constituents with respect to matters which are not touched on in this speech.

I will deal with those projects and actions which have a purely local impact. They are:

1. Success and Terminus Dams.
2. Lemoore Naval Air Station.
3. Terra Bella irrigation district.
4. Desert area FHA housing.
5. Federal aid to local school districts.
6. Recreation at Isabella Lake.
7. The so-called barley bill.
8. San Luis project.
9. Agriculture program.

SUCCESS AND TERMINUS DAMS

For the first time in their legislative history Success Dam on the Tule River and Terminus Dam on the Kaweah River received an appropriation for commencement of construction. As quickly as the work demands additional sums will be secured to build a structure on the Kaweah—Terminus, near McKays Point, which will store up 145,000 acre-feet of water—and a structure on the Tule, Success, just above Worth Bridge, which will store 75,000 acre-feet of water. In each case flood control is the principal benefit but there will be some reregulation of irrigation water. In addition, in some years, additional irrigation water will be available by reason of the capture and storage of floodwater which would normally go into Tulare Lake. Discounting the loss of storage capacity attributable to water already owned the amount of new water made available on Kaweah would be 34,000 acre-feet and 10,000 acre-feet on the Tule and, of necessity, this is not a year-in and year-out supply. The Corps of Engineers will control the flood-control aspects of the dams but the local people will direct the use for irrigation to the end that the best use is made of water and no person's water rights adversely affected.

I have acted on behalf of each of these projects each year during my 4 years in Congress, and I am proud that final success was achieved during my tenure in office.

These projects have a history antedating 1944 but were not authorized until that date by Congress and, with the exception of periodic appropriations of planning money, no money was provided for them until 1956. Such delay is attributable to the fact that Federal authorizations and appropriations are difficult to secure, with the decision often being made by the President and the Budget Bureau. In addition, in the case of Success and Terminus, added factors were involved. From time to time they were clouded with local controversies. Changes in plans occurred which delayed action. In some years they lacked the approval of State water agencies. Fortunately these delays are behind us.

I cite these facts to clear the atmosphere of political charges made regarding them. It should be noted that during the long history of slow progress since 1944 and prior thereto the district has been represented by Congressmen Alfred Elliott and Thomas Werdel and myself in that order and by Senators Sheridan Downey, Hiram Johnson, William Knowland, Richard Nixon, and Thomas Kuchel, respectively. The record of accomplishment speaks for itself. In this connection it should be noted that the people of Tulare County have, over the years, almost unanimously supported these projects. Whatever opposition has existed has been understandable and forgiveable if not acceptable to the great mass of the people.

Upstream areas have an acute interest in development of flood control and water-conservation problems which are not reached by the major storage structures. I have pledged myself to help them and have received assurances from their neighbors downstream that they will support the development of additional plans. The Army engineers can be put to work developing upstream flood-control plans by a resolution of the Public Works Committee of either the House or the Senate. I intend to seek such approval and anticipate no difficulty with it.

Finally, Tulare and Kings County people should investigate plans for provision of recreational bodies of water back of each dam site. This action was taken in Kern County on Isabella Lake by the action of the board of supervisors in purchasing surplus Central Valley project water which could be exchanged for water to be stored the year-round at Isabella. I secured the consent of the Army engineers to such storage right.

LEMOORE NAVAL AIR STATION

The establishment of an $80 million air station at Lemoore is a reality. It will bring a tremendous payroll into Kings and Tulare Counties. Over $10 million for it was appropriated this year and the dirt should fly in 1957. I worked closely with the Navy and the local community on this and was commended by the Navy for my help before the committees of Congress.

There will be problems arising from the project but they can be solved and the overall value is so great that the problems become minor. The Government is not unaware of problems arising from such a major Federal activity. Federal aid is available for schools, planning, and other activities complicated by the Federal impact. The ultimate size of the station is a matter of speculation until the Navy submits its final land-acquisition plans to the House and Senate military committees in January 1957.

TERRA BELLA IRRIGATION DISTRICT

Responding to telegrams from the Terra Bella area I acted to secure inclusion of funds for the irrigation district distribution system loan in this year's appropriations. I succeeded in securing language in an appropriation bill, in the face of opposition from the Budget Bureau, which makes money available for such loan. Similar efforts by me on behalf of the Porterville irrigation district were not successful because of opposition from both the Budget Bureau and the Bureau of Reclamation on the basis that negotiations were not far enough advanced to indicate an immediate appropriation. In any event the Porterville district can go ahead with its proposed contract and dispose of all preliminary actions with the assurance that in January or February of 1957 the money will be provided.

DESERT AREA FHA HOUSING

The communities of Ridgecrest, Mojave, Rosamond, and Boron have had difficulty securing the usual FHA loan guarantees for private housing. Part of their difficulties were resolved through a conference I arranged with top-level FHA and Veterans' Administration officials.

The Congress provided added relief in legislation I worked on with Senator SPARKMAN and Congressman RAINS, of Alabama. Nineteen hundred and fifty-six legislation establishes a new category of guaranties of building loans and purchase loans for essential employees of military research or development facilities which would be used when the usual FHA programs were denied. The communities mentioned will have a new avenue of private housing loans open to them.

FEDERAL AID TO LOCAL SCHOOL DISTRICTS

For several years the Federal Government has been furnishing construction funds under Public Law 815 and operation funds under Public Law 874 to school districts which have increased pupil loads arising from military and related installations. A defect of the program has been that operation payments matched the previous year's attendance to the disadvantage of districts with steadily increasing enrollments—a category into which fall the schools on and about the Naval Ordnance Test Station, the Mojave Marine Air Station, and Edwards Air Force Base. I have worked with Jesse Stockton, Dr. Earl Murray, Theron McCuen, and Robert Ulrich, and others concerned with this problem. I can report that the 1956 version of Public Law 874 conforms to our requests.

I was also pleased to be of assistance to these educators in opening a new door to solution of the Burroughs High School problem. The present facility is inadequate to serve both off-station and on-station students. Without a change in the law the Federal construction entitlement attributable to these two categories of students could not be combined in the expansion of the existing facility or the erection of a new one. With the help of the named educators and others I secured the necessary change which would permit the combination of both entitlements in a single location. It is proposed that the present high-school site be devoted to elementary-school purposes and a new high-school plant be erected on a more central location to be donated by the Navy. This site would be open to students and parents without the necessity of going through a security gate. Under the amendment of law secured, over $800,000 of Federal money would be available. It should be emphasized that all decisions in this matter rest with the local people. The change in the law merely opens a new avenue of approach.

ISABELLA LAKE

A minimum recreational lake has been established at Isabella. This is the result of the cooperative efforts of local groups and myself and other officials. The Board of Supervisors of Kern County are to be congratulated for their many actions, including the provision of the necessary water supply.

The same fine cooperation resulted in the establishment of an office of the Federal-State Market News Service at Visalia. This office has proved a boon to local dairy, cattle, sheep, and hog farmers in getting the best sale prices for their livestock.

BARLEY BILL

I successfully opposed H. R. 9650, the barley bill introduced by HAROLD COOLEY, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee. In this effort I had the reported unanimous support of the Republican side of the committee and majority support from the Democratic side. I was joined in opposition by the Department of Agriculture, the California Supervisors Association, the Kings and Fresno County Boards of Supervisors, local Grange and Farm Bureau officials, and other groups and individuals.

This proposal deserves comment because some people do not understand it and it may come up again at the Federal level. The commonest method of supporting the prices of selected farm commodities, including barley, is the nonrecourse CCC loan at an established parity level. Under this method, the grower of the supported crop places it in Government-approved storage and borrows its parity value from the Government under a contract which includes delivery of a warehouse receipt to the Government as a deposit of security. The loan establishes an extended time of repayment, as do all loans. During this time the grower can recover his commodity and sell it at a profit. In addition, if its value at the time the Government takes title—arrival of loan maturity date without redemption—is greater than the loan value he receives an equity payment. This loan procedure is not only designed to keep the farmer in the open market for his own benefit but also to lessen the possibility of commodities going into Government hands at a loss to the taxpayers.

The Cooley bill would have permitted a barley grower to pass his ownership to the Government at any time at his option thereby evading local property taxes and shifting storage costs to the Government. I am convinced that this legislation stems in part from the efforts of certain large barley growers in Kings and Tulare Counties to evade local personal-property taxation. In fact, I was asked by one of their representatives to sponsor such legislation. I refused.

Creation of a favored class of farm taxpayers merely results in a shifting of taxes to other farmers and to town people—a case of robbing Peter to pay Paul. In Kings County the barley growers, by and large, are corporation farms which are best able to pay taxes and the victims would be the other taxpayers least able to pay. The growers of fruits and nuts and dairy operators have borne, in terms of ability to pay in recent years, an undue burden of taxes and any shifting of barley taxes to them would only aggravate a present injustice. In any event it is not the proper function of the Federal Government to assist avoidance of local taxes. This is a matter of major consequence in Corcoran, for example, where the local schools and the city have a limited tax base greatly affected by any exemptions.

If the growers of price-supported crops in storage have a valid argument for exemption their proper forum is with the local and State tax authorities who can fairly evaluate the local situation case by case. Discussion, such as was had about 3 years ago, of a proper method of taxing farm commodities should be renewed.

SAN LUIS PROJECT

The conflict over the San Luis versus the Feather River project as the best method of increasing San Joaquin Valley water supplies spotlights the need for intense thought and activity on the part not only of those water deficient areas which will receive water from one or the other or both but also those water-deficient areas which will receive no benefits from either as presently proposed.

If it is a reasonable assumption that there is need for more water in almost every area of Kings, Kern, and Tulare Counties there has been a serious lack of organized expression from areas lying east of the valley floor.

The initial features of the San Luis project, which have the best chance of Federal authorization, would make water deliveries only about as far south as the Blakeley Canal in Kings County. It would not be very difficult to extend those deliveries into the lower reaches of the Kings River service area to permit an exchange of Kings River waters farther upstream. It should be recalled also that there have been proposals to use the Delta-Mendota pool and canal as a source of supplemental supply for the Kings and San Joaquin Rivers service areas. It should be noted that the San Luis project will preempt the last low-cost power in the Central Valley project as well as some or all of the remaining unused capacity of the Tracy pumps and the Delta-Mendota Canal without contribution to the capital cost of those facilities.

It seems unlikely to me that the Secretary of the Interior will accept State proposals for dedication of Federal power and CVP facilities to, and the initial expenditure of Federal money for construction of, a project to be turned over to the State of California.

The feasibility of the Feather River project is an economic question which must be decided by majority opinion. I am hopeful that all water-deficient areas will organize and hire the best expert opinion on possible water developments in order that the widest possible participation in Federal or State project benefits can be secured.

Defense Essentiality and Foreign Economic Policy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE H. BENDER
OF OHIO
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BENDER. Mr. President, I wish to take this opportunity to add my voice to those of my fellow Members and friends in Government who are applauding the significant and pioneering report on Defense Essentiality and Foreign Economic Policy which has been produced by the House-Senate Committee on Foreign Economic Policy, and ask unanimous consent to include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement prepared by me on this subject.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, I wish to point out that this report constitutes the first realistic congressional study of the intimate relationship between healthy American competition and our defense mobilization base. This subcommittee has ably demonstrated that it would be a self-defeating policy to impose restrictions on foreign trade in an attempt to protect domestic industries considered essential to our defense. Instead of providing an expanding arsenal of recision tools and skills, the committee showed that the stifling of foreign competition tends to foster industrial complacency, technological stagnation, higher prices, diminishing consumption, and, consequently, a smaller reserve of essential equipment and skills.

The watchmaking industry, which happened to be the subject of this case study, proved an excellent example of the weakness of protectionist arguments that high tariffs necessarily contribute to the welfare of defense-essential industries. The committee warned that, in the first place, "Every industry feels itself essential to defense because it knows that its facilities would be employed in an all-out emergency." While respecting the possibility that there may be industries for which defense essentiality can be argued, the committee demonstrated that artificially created monopolies could only further weaken those domestic industries, as well as the total national security.

As the committee stated, "Freezing neither industrial capacity nor skilled manpower in set patterns is a wise approach to insuring national security even in the narrow sense of continental defense in an age of accelerated technological change."

The committee rightly suggests that if there are products for which it is possible to forecast long-range defense essentiality they should be aided through devices which do not disrupt international trade and thereby weaken our friends abroad. Stockpiling or direct subsidies, for example, have the virtue of placing the cost in the defense budget, where it belongs, instead of on the backs of American consumers in the form of prohibitive prices for the goods we require.

This unanimous report, Mr. President, marks a significant forward step in solving the complex problems involved in creating a realistic mobilization base. The findings of this committee should, hereafter, be considered a basic document for the executive branch whenever it is called upon to consider pleas for tariff protection on grounds of defense essentiality.

Results of Harden Poll Show Wide Interest in Legislation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CECIL M. HARDEN

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mrs. HARDEN. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks, I wish to call the attention of the House to the results of my 1956 legislative questionnaires.

During the months of February through May I conducted a series of four opinion polls among residents of the Sixth Indiana District on legislative issues before the Congress. I have made it a practice to take such polls ever since coming to Congress in 1949, but this year's effort was the most extensive, since it involved four individual polls mailed out at 1-month intervals.

Needless to say, I find surveys of this type interesting, informative, and helpful to me in my efforts to represent the 300,000 residents of the Sixth Indiana District. While poll taking cannot substitute for personal contact, it is impossible while Congress is in session for Members of this body representing districts hundreds of miles away from Washington to maintain sufficient personal contact with residents of their districts. Thus the poll helps to bridge the gap by keeping me in touch with the thinking of my constituents on the important legislative problems which we face here in Washington.

Approximately 50,000 ballots were mailed over a 4-month period to persons listed in the telephone directories of most of the communities in the 10 counties which make up the Sixth Indiana District. Slightly more than 8,000 ballots were returned, for a percentage of roughly 16 percent. I am grateful for this response, which I am told is considered exceptionally good for surveys of this type. It indicates that the people of west-central Indiana are interested in legislative affairs, and the results, I am sure you will agree, indicate a broad understanding by the poll participants of these affairs.

Some of the questions were used in more than one poll, but new issues were raised each month so that most of the major matters before the Congress were covered during the 4 months of polling. Here is a summary of the results; with combined totals being used on questions asked on more than one occasion:

Five agricultural questions were asked:

First. Greater aid to agriculture to help farmers gain a larger share of the national prosperity? Yes, 1,728; no, 993; not voting, 157. [Congress approved new soil-bank plan and President Eisenhower announced higher price-support levels.]

Second. Sale of United States surplus farm goods to unfriendly Communist nations? Yes, 1,554; no, 1,969; not voting, 179. [No action by Congress.]

Third. Food-stamp plan, utilizing surplus farm goods to feed needy people? Yes, 1,851; no, 360; not voting, 91. [No action by Congress.]

Fourth. Large-scale research program aimed at finding new industrial uses for farm products? Yes, 1,757; no, 420; not voting, 125. [My bill, H. R. 10123, would establish such a program. Hearings have been held but no final action taken.]

Fifth. Soil-bank plan urged by President Eisenhower. Yes, 952; no, 364; not voting, 84. [Congress approved soil bank.]

SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

This question was asked twice. The combined vote was 1,920 for, and 2,220 against. [The House defeated a school-construction bill.]

TAXES—BUDGET

Four questions were used, one on each of the polls. Voters were asked whether they agreed with President Eisenhower that Federal income taxes should not be reduced until the budget could be balanced and a reduction made on the national debt. Here are the month-by-month results:

February: Agree, 2,599; do not agree, 220; not voting, 59.

March: Agree, 1,252; do not agree, 166; not voting, 18.

April: Agree, 1,798; do not agree, 418; not voting, 86.

May: Agree, 1,064; do not agree, 280; not voting, 56.

[Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey announced in mid-July that the Federal budget has been balanced and that the Government wound up its fiscal year July 1 with a surplus of $1¾ billion. Congress did not approve a tax cut, so the budget surplus has been applied to reduction of the national debt.]

HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION

Voters in the February and March polls approved the new highway construction program by a combined vote of 3,113 to 1,095, with 106 not answering the question. [Congress passed the highway bill and it was signed into law by the President.]

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER

Two questions assessing confidence of Sixth District voters in President Eisenhower were asked.

February: Do you, in general, approve of the 3-year record of the Eisenhower administration? Yes, 2,475; no, 269; not voting, 134.

March, April: Do you, in general, approve of President Eisenhower's direction of United States foreign policy? Question asked twice. Yes, 2,983; no, 454; not voting, 265.

VETERANS' PENSION

Because of widespread interest in bills granting a pension to World War I veterans, the following question was asked in the February poll: "Should Congress approve a $100-a-month pension to World War I veterans at age 65?" (a) Regardless of need, 553; (b) only on proof of need, 1,570; (c) opposed to either, 684; not answering, 71. [The House passed a bill which would grant pensions to World War I veterans at age 65 on an income limitation basis. The bill did not come to a vote in the Senate.]

POSTAGE RATES

Voters showed consistent support of the administration bill to increase postage rates as a means of easing the annual deficit in United States postal operations. Here are the combined answers from the March, April, and May polls:

Question: The Postmaster General thinks postage rates should be increased to meet the $500 million annual deficit incurred in handling the mail. Opponents maintain these losses should be made up from general tax revenues and that rates should not be increased. Do you favor a rate increase? Yes, 3,197; no, 1,754; not voting, 187. [The House passed a postage rate increase bill but it was not taken up by the Senate, so failed of enactment.]

FOREIGN AID

One of the most controversial issues before the Congress, the foreign-aid questions proved controversial among residents of the Sixth Indiana District. Here are the three questions used in my polls, along with the answers:

March poll: The President has asked Congress to appropriate more than $4 billion for foreign military and economic aid this year. Should Congress (a) approve the amount requested? 438; (b) reduce the amount? 565; (c) discontinue all foreign aid? 390; not answering question, 43.

April poll: Should Congress reduce the amount of our foreign economic and military aid spending this year? Yes, 1,158; no, 879; not voting, 109.

May poll: Should Congress reduce the amount of our foreign economic and military aid spending this year? Yes, 658; no, 630; not voting, 112.

Summary: The preponderance of opinion seemed favorable to a moderate decrease in foreign aid spending. Congress, after spending many months arriving at a decision, finally came to the same conclusion by reducing the President's requests approximately $1 billion.

ARABS-ISRAELI

The Eisenhower administration has been following a cautious policy in regard to the dispute between the Arabs and Israel. In my May poll I found strong support among the Sixth District voters for this policy of caution. Here is the question, with the results:

Question: Would you favor the granting of United States arms aid to Israel in the present Arab-Israeli dispute? Yes, 329; no, 924; not voting, 147.

Mr. Speaker, I believe you will agree after studying the results of the polls I have taken that I am fortunate in having an extremely intelligent constituency. I can assure you it is a privilege and a pleasure to represent the Sixth Indiana District.

Statement on the Report of the Subcommittee on Foreign Economic Policy of the Joint Economic Committee

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HUBERT H. HUMPHREY

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement which I had hoped to deliver on the Senate floor during the last days of the session. The statement concerns a constructive report recently released by the Subcommittee on Foreign Economic Policy of the Joint Economic Committee.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, I do not want this session to end without briefly paying tribute to our distinguished colleagues, serving as members of the Subcommittee on Foreign Economic Policy of the Joint Economic Committee under the chairmanship of the most able Representative from Missouri, Mr. BOLLING, who have recently turned out such a brilliant and stimulating report on the relationships between our foreign economic policy and the national security.

It seems to me that the report of this five-man subcommittee, which included Senators DOUGLAS, FULBRIGHT, and FLANDERS, has paved the way for a clarification of congressional and executive approaches to the vital question of industrial preparedness, and that the members and staff of this subcommittee deserve sincere congratulations.

I might say, Mr. President, that I have been disturbed to see the reaction to this report which was voiced in recent days by a few of my colleagues on the Senate floor. These comments were addressed specifically to those aspects of the subcommittee's report pertaining to the watch industry, and no doubt they reflected a sincere attempt to defend the position that the four domestic jeweled watch manufacturers are so essential to national defense as to justify the abandonment of our policy for the expansion of foreign trade.

I submit, however, that these efforts to perpetuate the impression that we must curtail watch imports in order to preserve our national security will not prove of genuine benefit to the domestic watch manufacturers, and will certainly lead to a weakening of our national security.

History clearly demonstrates, Mr. President, that whenever old concepts have outlived their usefulness, many of those who have committed themselves to those propositions have found it difficult to adjust to the new realities. Instead, they have reacted by increasing their efforts to defend these old concepts.

This is only human nature, and it has been reflected in the attacks which the domestic watch manufacturers have inspired against the subcommittee's findings. Despite these efforts to minimize the value of the committee's work, however, the undeniable logic of the report is certain to shine through. It seems to me, Mr. President, that any impartial, unprejudiced study of this report is certain to penetrate the smoke-screen which has been put forth by those who oppose it.

It should be understood, Mr. President, that the report did not deny that the domestic watch manufacturers can produce items which are useful to defense, although it pointed out that many other industries are capable of producing the same types of defense products. More important, however, was the very convincing presentation by the subcommittee that, even if it is decided that the watch manufacturers are important to defense, it would be most harmful public policy to attempt to aid them through techniques which are merely aimed at curtailing and suppressing their competitors. The heart of the report lies in the finding that our total national security is impaired, rather than helped, when we impose barriers to international trade in an attempt to protect isolated industries under the guise of national defense.

I might add, Mr. President, that the members of this subcommittee were undoubtedly fully aware of all of the allegations that have recently been raised on the Senate floor. As a matter of fact, the report discusses each of them in detail, and, indeed, points out the error of these arguments. It should be clearly understood that the domestic watch manufacturers had a full opportunity to present their views before the subcommittee, as did other segments of the watch industry and many distinguished, qualified witnesses who had no self-interest in the watch dispute.

In my opinion, the report of this subcommittee is, in every respect, a thorough, objective, and masterful job. It is one of the truly outstanding achievements of the current Congress, and I sincerely believe that those few people who are criticizing the document have not thought through the full implications of their narrow attacks.

In my opinion, the members of this subcommittee and its staff are to be sincerely commended for providing guidelines to the executive branch concerning methods of maintaining maximum national security without disrupting our friends and allies overseas and without penalizing the American consumer by forcing him to pay higher prices because of unwarranted trade restrictions. It is my fervent hope, Mr. President, that the President and the Office of Defense Mobilization will give this report the consideration which it so richly deserves, as they consider appeals from various industries for tariff relief on grounds of alleged defense essentiality.

The Giveaway of Federal Power by Past Administrations

OF

HON. A. L. MILLER

OF NEBRASKA

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I have just a few remarks to make about Federal electric power and this bill (S. 3338) which was considered originally by the Senate Committee on Public Works. The bill passed the Senate and then was referred to the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs where it was given a brief hearing and then, subsequently, reported to the House with some amendments. I will support the bill as amended.

The effect of this bill in the form passed by the Senate would be to freeze all of the rates charged to public bodies and cooperatives for the electric power generated at all Federal projects throughout the United States for a period of 18 months. The reason behind this bill was to head off an application that has been made by the Interior Department to the Federal Power Commission to increase by approximately 2.2 mills the rates charged these consumers for public power in the Southwest Power Administration. The Interior Department has made no application and contemplates no such action in any project at the present time with the exception of this project under the jurisdiction of the Southwest Power Administration. For that reason then, the House Interior Committee saw fit to amend S. 3338 so that it would apply only to the Southwest Power Administration where this rate increase is threatened. It is limited in time to June 30, 1957.

Now, why should the Interior Department be concerned about power rates in the SPA? Why should they try to increase these rates without making a similar application for the other great power projects in America? The existing SPA rate schedule was developed by the Department of the Interior in 1946. It was submitted, according to law, to the Federal Power Commission and approved in February 1947. The Federal Power Commission recognized at the time of this approval that some of the projects were not completed and the exact costs of these projects were not known. For that reason the Federal Power Commission wisely inserted in its order fixing SPA rates a provision that they should apply for a period of not more than 6 years, and after this 6-year period the Interior Department should review the projects, the costs, and the other factors that should go into determining power rates so that an adjustment could be made if it was found necessary.

It developed subsequently that the estimates for the cost of the seven integrated projects of the Southwest Power Administration were grossly understated by around $158 million, as determined by the Department of the Army as late as 1954. Clearly an adjustment and a reexamination of this rate schedule should have been made. In all of the multiple-purpose projects throughout the country, electric power is the one factor that is relied on to repay its own costs, including interest, and this should be kept in mind in all cases. In the original estimates of costs of the Southwest Power Administration projects, the amount allocated to power was $109,200,000. A few years later, in 1946, the costs allocated to power were established at $111,200,000 and this is the cost allocation that was used by the Interior Department and the Federal Power Commission in arriving at the rates that were made applicable; and now, nearly 10 years later, we find that the total construction costs that should be allocated to power are nearly twice that much or $200,200,000.

It should be kept in mind that this SPA area, which covers several States, is a part of a large drought section at this time. Since it is a drought area and there has been some bungling in past years of their contracts for electricity, there seems to be some reason to freeze the rates until June 30, 1957. I want to repeat, however, that the continued freezing of the rates, which at the present time build up a $2.5 million a year deficit, cannot go on indefinitely. This area, like others, should either stand on its own feet or the rates should be adjusted to reflect sound business principles. The Department of the Interior is not able under their present contracts to meet a sound payout schedule. Part of this is due to additional cost. To recover this additional cost the Department has proposed to increase the rates charged the REA's, co-ops, and other public bodies in the Southwest Power Administration areas by an additional 2.2 mills.

There are some things in this bill and in the power situation in SPA that bother me. First, I believe that the principle of selling power at a rate sufficient to recover the cost of that portion of a multiple-purpose project is sound. Under this principle, it is apparent and obvious that a rate increase is not only justified but it should be demanded by the Congress. However, which power rates should be raised? Should we raise only the REA's, co-ops, and the public bodies, or should we look at the whole picture? A great block of SPA power is being sold to private groups at approximately 2 mills, which is less than the cost of production.

The thing that disturbs me greatly is the fact that under the Truman-Strauss-Chapman period a private industry, the Aluminum Co., was able to enter into a contract for 30 million kilowatt-hours of electricity per month at less than cost. Some of it is secondary power that sells for 1.25 mills per kilowatt. I realize that this may be considered dump power, but it certainly is not used in that manner by the Aluminum Co. They get a large block of power at less than 2 mills under the same circumstances. I would point out at this time that the REA's must pay about 5.5 mills per kilowatt and they are in need of more power. The proposed increase would boost them to approximately 7.5 mills per kilowatt. It would not disturb the contract of the Aluminum Co. The REA's and the cooperatives need this power. They are being treated differently than the private aluminum company. I would point out further that the selling of Federal power to private industries at around 2 mills, and less than the cost of production, goes on in all of the valley authorities.

Now, to my friends on the other side of the aisle, who have a special group to investigate and attempt to prove that our administration is guilty of giving away the Nation's resources, I would say that some of these contracts for power in the SPA would be a good place for you to start. I know, however, that you would not dig up these contracts. Do you know why? Because they were entered into in 1947 to 1952 when Mr. Truman was in the White House and Mr. Strauss and Mr. Chapman were running the affairs of the Bureau of Reclamation and the Department of the Interior. But, in all fairness, my friends, while you are on the subject of giveaway, here is one of the best examples you can get. If some people do not know what a giveaway is, you might hold some of these contracts up so they can see and make the comparison.

There are also some splendid giveaways for you in the Bonneville Power Administration and for some reason or other most of these involve aluminum companies. Now, we are all aware of the importance and the tremendous value of the contributions that the aluminum industry has made to the defense and the progress of our country, and we know that the aluminum companies must have a ready and reasonable supply of electrical power or they could not operate. The great Northwest has developed tremendously in recent years primarily because there was an available source of power to attract many aluminum and other metals companies.

On May 21, 1956, the manager of the Bonneville Power Administration's Washington office, in reply to a letter directed to him from the senior Senator from Utah, analyzed the power sales made by the Bonneville Power Administration. This analysis appears at page 13456 in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 19, 1956. This is the same Bonneville Power Administration which would have handled the sale of power to be generated from the late Federal Hells Canyon Dam. If you are interested in giveaway, you would be interested in this analysis because it shows that approximately one-half of the total power sales made by Bonneville Power Administration were made to industry, private industry, that has been attracted to the Pacific Northwest by the 2-mill electric power from the Columbia River power dams. The defenders of this situation will argue that this rate is made because the companies are paying for dump power. Yes, they may be paying a dump-power rate, but they are getting firm power. These aluminum companies do not know the difference between dump and firm power, except in the cost. They use dump power, just as well as they can use firm power, to operate all of their electrical facilities. Last year I inserted some remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD showing the amount of power that was being sold to one of the private aluminum companies in the Pacific Northwest from the Bonneville Power Administration. This company was receiving millions of kilowatt-hours at less than a 2-mill rate which is, as I said before, considerably under the cost of production. After these remarks appeared in the RECORD, I received a letter from an official of this company in reply. He did not deny the truth of this article but he said in effect, "Why pick on us? Here is a list of 12 or 13 more companies who are in the same boat, who are getting the same treatment we are."

If you will look a little further into the operations of the Bonneville Power Administration, you will find that approximately one-fifth of the Bonneville power is being sold to private utilities in the Pacific Northwest; so when you add together the power that is being sold to the private utilities for resale to their customers, you discover that more than two-thirds of the power generated by these Government projects, public power projects, built by the Nation's taxpayers, is being sold to nonpublic sources and about one-half is being sold to private companies for less than it costs the Government to produce it. You don't have to be very smart to figure out that someone is paying the bill. Maybe the REA's, co-ops, the State agencies, the municipalities and the other public bodies who buy the balance of the power are paying all they should. But if the rates being charged the private utilities and the private industries were raised so as to pay their share of the costs, it would follow that the other customers would have to bear a proportionately smaller share of the burden. As things stand now, the biggest contribution that must be made to make up this deficit comes from the taxpayers all over the country. The taxpayers in every State in the Union are being asked all the time to pay the money it takes to subsidize private metals companies. The REA's pay about 5.5 mills per kilowatt.

Southwest Power is not paying its way. Last year, I am informed, the revenues from the sale of power fell $2.5 million short of paying the interest charges on the facilities. This has to be made up by the taxpayers. No, it is not the cooperatives or the REA's or the municipalities who are getting the big benefits out of the Southwest Power Administration. These groups have been paying about 5.5 mills for their power. It is the aluminum company sitting there with a 30-year contract for millions of kilowatt-hours of electricity that is getting the big bite out of the taxpayer. They get it at less than the cost of production. This contract with the aluminum company probably cannot be changed and it may not include any provision for review by the Interior Department and the Federal Power Commission, as the other contracts do. It may be that the contracts that were let under the Truman-Strauss-Chapman administration to the aluminum companies of the Pacific Northwest are not subject to review. But if they are, the Government should undertake the review immediately. These are subjects that ought to be carefully reviewed by the proper committees of Congress. There seems to be a big "giveaway" of public power to private groups. This cheap power cannot be had by the REA's. It helps produce a big deficit in the SPA.

So, I would say again to my friends on the other side of the aisle that while you are going about your business of trying to brand this administration as a giveaway administration you will not know what a giveaway is until you have looked carefully at some of the contracts for power made during the heyday of the Truman-Strauss-Chapman team. I shall support S. 3338, as amended, with the hope that the sharp spotlight of public opinion will be focused on some of these power contracts. I do feel the time is here when all Federal projects should pay their own way. There would be no deficit of $2.5 million in interest alone if these private groups paid a better share of the cost of electric power in the SPA. All of these power contracts should be reviewed. It should not be necessary for the taxpayers of the country to subsidize the power in the great Pacific Northwest. The record will show that nearly half of the power marketed by the Bonneville Administration is sold at less than the cost of production. I just hope the next Congress will take hold of this situation in a firm manner and try to correct this great "giveaway" of Federal power to private companies.

The Great Pretense

OF
HON. MICHAEL A. FEIGHAN
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, on June 17, 1956, it was my privilege to participate in the Georgetown University Television Forum of the Air. The question discussed on that forum was The Great Pretense. Also participating in this forum were the Honorable Edward M. O'Connor, former Commissioner of Displaced Persons, and now consultant to the Director of the United States Information Agency, and Mr. James J. McTigue, consultant to the ad hoc committee of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, who was substituting for our colleague, the Honorable THOMAS J. DODD, of Connecticut.

The Great Pretense refers to the present efforts of the masters of the Kremlin to cloak themselves with respectability in order to deceive the unsuspecting into believing that the Communists have abandoned their goal of world conquest by subversion, infiltration and force when necessary. Because of the great interest so many people have in getting all the facts about the latest tactical maneuver of the Russian Communists, under leave granted I insert in the RECORD the transcript of that forum meeting The Great Pretense:

THE GREAT PRETENSE, JUNE 17, 1956

(Participants: Mr. James J. McTigue, consultant to the ad hoc committee of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, substituting for the Honorable Thomas J. Dodd; Hon. Michael A. Feighan, Member of Congress from Ohio; Mr. Edward M. O'Connor, consultant to the Director of the United States Information Agency. Moderator: Mr. Matthew Warren.)

Mr. WARREN. The Great Pretense is the topic for the 500th consecutive broadcast of the Georgetown University Radio Forum, another in a series of educational and informative programs from Washington. The Georgetown University Forum was founded in 1946.

This is Matthew Warren speaking by transcription from the Raymond Reiss Studio, on the campus of Georgetown University, historic Jesuit seat of learning in the Nation's Capital.

Today's discussion will be The Great Pretense. The participants are James J. McTigue, consultant to the ad hoc committee of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, substituting for the Honorable Thomas J. Dodd, who is ill (Mr. Dodd is a Member of Congress from Connecticut); the Honorable Michael A. Feighan, Member of Congress from Ohio; Mr. Edward M. O'Connor, consultant to the Director, United States Information Agency. All three of our speakers were members of the Select Committee To Investigate Communist Aggression in the 83d Congress.

Transcripts of today's broadcast are available. Send 10 cents to cover the cost of printing and mailing, with your name and address to the Georgetown University Forum, Washington 7, D. C. Please mention also the subject matter of the transcript desired.

Today's Forum takes its title from a significant document issued on May 19. The document was published by the House Un-American Committee and is a symposium on the anti-Stalinism now current in the Soviet Union. We of the Forum feel obligated to alert Americans to the current changes in Soviet strategy and at the same time to remind all of us of basic objectives of the world of communism. So we of the Georgetown University have asked three most competent analysts of Soviet behavior to give you their evaluation of recent Soviet changes. Mr. O'Connor, what is the great pretense?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Matthew, as you have described it, in one sense it is a publication of a symposium on anti-Stalinism in the 20th Congress of the Communist Party which was held in February of this year.

I thought I might, as a beginner, give my impression of the main points established in this printed symposium. I think the first thing would be that the anti-Stalin campaign is an effort of the present Communist leaders to remove from themselves all guilt for the long list of crimes against humanity committed in the name of communism. The second thing is that the anti-Stalin campaign is but a part of the larger Russian offensive to get the free world to accept peaceful coexistence, that is, the creation of the illusion that human freedom and tyranny can live side by side in safety and at peace with one another. The third point is that this anti-Stalin campaign in no way signifies a change in any of the basic policy of the Communist conspiracy but merely heralds a significant change in tactics. Therefore, the word of caution. We ought to remember that this symposium is a contribution indeed to the thinking and to the alerting of the American people to the dangers in this change in tactics. But we ought not to consider this symposium as the end all, because the tactics of the Russians, the Communists, are very changing and there will be many more in the months and years ahead.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. O'Connor, this is a very vital publication, The Great Pretense, a symposium on anti-Stalinism and the 20th Congress of the Soviet Communist Party. Many of our Americans across the Nation are familiar with the publications of our Congress; and the United States Government Printing Office has added this to their long list, and very many do not read these articles as much as they should. Can you tell us how they can get hold of this?

Mr. O'CONNOR. They can get this publication by writing to the Government Printing Office and for the payment of 25 cents, I believe anyone can secure this publication.

Mr. FEIGHAN. You mentioned, Mr. O'Connor, that this new approach heralded no change in Communist tactics. I think in that connection it would be informative to refer to The Great Pretense for a moment in an article by Whittaker Chambers. The article is entitled "Is Stalin's Russia Weakening?" In that article, Whittaker Chambers says on the subject of tactics, among other things, as follows: "In brief, communism's great change dating from the 20th Congress is a change of tactics not of intentions. Communism is cleaning house in order to make its personnel, its formations, its tactics more acceptable, efficient, up to date, and thus to hasten its project of dividing, wooing, and of winning the West preparatory to overrunning the West. That Communist purpose never changes."

Mr. O'CONNOR. I agree completely in that statement by Whittaker Chambers. I believe he is an eminent authority and one who has lived close to the conspiracy for years. I think he is a real student of its twists and turns.

Mr. FEIGHAN. I might add, Mr. Warren, Mr. William Henry Chamberlain also in his analysis showed very clearly that this Russian Communist change is one of tactics only. He said that there has been no change in Russia in such basic Stalinite methods as the forced regimentation of the peasants in collective farms, the denial of such basic human rights as freedom of speech, press, voting, and trade union organization. Nor is there any apparent willingness on the part of the new Soviet leaders to relinquish their grip on the vast territories in Eastern and Central Europe which Stalin took by force and held in violation of sound pledges to respect the self-determination of peoples. It is quite obvious that if the Russians were sincere they would do away with the slave labor camps throughout their vast empire. They would give freedom to the people, such as freedom of religion, press and speech, and the right to vote, the right of self-determination. They would give enough for these enslaved nations to be free. But in their enunciations they only talk about freedom, but they will not give the people an opportunity to have an expression of freedom by a ballot or in any other manner.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Congressman FEIGHAN, that theme runs through this report by the House Un-American Activities. I would like to cite another such quotation as the Congressman has given us, by the professor of international relations at Syracuse University, contributed to this symposium under the title of, "Risks of Anti-Stalinism." Here is what he says on this subject, speaking, of course, of the effort of the Russian leaders to wash their hands of these crimes: "Can they successfully wash off their hands the responsibility for the Socialist purges and the forced labor camps which they have not abolished after his death? Can they claim his succession while degrading their former master who they publicly extolled at the previous 19th Congress." That is a fundamental question which runs as a central theme throughout this report. How can these people from Khrushchev on down possibly purge themselves of these tremendous crimes when the very offenses and crimes against humanity which were committed by Stalin and at his direction are continued within the vast empire of the Communists. This, it seems to me, is a very basic question.

Mr. FEIGHAN. I might add there that Khrushchev, the present Secretary of the Communist Party, was known in the Ukraine as the hangman of the Ukraine, because he was the one who perpetrated and carried out the manmade famine and many of the massacres, not only in the Ukraine but in many other nations in the U. S. S. R.

Mr. MCTIGUE. Right along those lines, Congressman FEIGHAN, and in line with what Mr. O'Connor has just discussed, I would like to make reference to Mr. William C. Bullitt's article in The Great Pretense. Mr. Bullitt is our former Ambassador to the Soviet Union from 1933 to 1936. The article by Mr. Bullitt is entitled, "A Talk With Voroshilov." Voroshilov is at present the chairman of the Communist Party Presidium. In this article, in a conversation with Voroshilov, Mr. Bullitt reports as follows. He is talking about the murders of the Czarist officers and their wives and children in Kiev. He says, "What did you do then after the men were shot?" "Oh," said Voroshilov, "after we shot the men and boys we put all women and girls into brothels for our Army." "Do you think," asked Mr. Bullitt, "that was a very decent thing to do?" "My army needed women," said Voroshilov, "and I was concerned with my army's health and not with the health of those women, and it didn't make any difference anyhow because they were all dead within 3 months." So, this is the type of leadership, Mr. O'Connor, which is trying now to disassociate itself with Stalin's crime; is that correct?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, indeed it is. I don't think, Mr. McTigue, that this description which has been given by Bill Bullitt, a great patriot and a great American statesman, is limited only to Voroshilov. I think, as Congressman FEIGHAN has pointed out, Khrushchev gained the title of hangman of the Ukraine. He got that title only because he was the major domo in the forced famine and thereby the starvation of over 5 million people, plus the liquidations in the Ukraine and in Byelorussia, following World War II. I heard he also had a hand in the death of over 2 million Moslems in Turkistan between 1925 and 1927, and a whole lot of other crimes have been attributed to him. Let's take Zhukov, as another example. These days we hear him being extolled as the possible guardian of the peace. We must remember that Zhukov is fundamentally, by his own admission, a hard-rock Communist. The story is going around that while he was supposed to have been in exile in Odessa he was masterminding the takeover of China. There is also some reason to believe that Zhukov was the master mind behind the Communist aggression in China. We could go on down the list of these people who are the major characters in the Communist central authority, and I think every one of the records would be very similar, if not identical, to those which we have described.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. McTigue, as a consultant to the ad hoc committee of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, you will recall perhaps there was some difficulty in interpreting this term "ad hoc" at a recent congressional hearing. Would you explain that to me?

Mr. MCTIGUE. I recall that, Mr. Warren. "Ad hoc," if I recall my Latin as I learned it from the good Jesuits of Georgetown University, means, "for this purpose." Consequently, an ad hoc committee is a committee for a particular purpose, let us say, a special temporary committee.

The ad hoc committee of the Foreign Affairs Committee is presided over by Chairman THOMAS DODD, of Connecticut. The committee's jurisdiction, which was voted by motion of the full House Foreign Affairs Committee, directs the ad hoc committee to investigate the treatment of American civilians and American military personnel who were detained or who were imprisoned in Red China. Mr. DODD, I am sure, has no intention in pursuance of this investigation of taking an account, a dreary reaccount, if you will, of the experiences, the terrifying experiences undergone by these prisoners and civilians in the forms of beatings, and so forth, and so on; rather, Mr. DODD has in mind that this investigation will bring home forcibly to the American people the psychological warfare that the Red Chinese are now conducting. Among other questions we will seek to determine is whether these international bandits are holding these 11 civilian prisoners of war as ransom for their eventual, that is, Red China's eventual admission into the U. N. I could go on at some length about this, Mr. Warren, but I know our time is short. I do, however, want to make this observation, if I may: It is a great honor and privilege to substitute for Congressman DODD on this program. It occurs to me that a substitute for Mr. DODD on a subject like this is somewhat like sending in a substitute to hit for Mickey Mantle. However, let me say this: The world knows of Congressman DODD's record at Nuremberg. He knew the enemy then; he knows the enemy now.

Mr. WARREN. Congressman FEIGHAN, you have a long and outstanding record in Congress alerting the people of America to the facts of communism. Are you now convinced that this new look in Communist Russia is really a great pretense?

Mr. FEIGHAN. I really think it could better be described as the master fakery of the ages. There is absolutely no air of sincerity in their new tactical maneuvers whatever. They are fully devoted to the idea of world conquest, the destruction of nations, and nationhood. Any idea that we could coexist with them is, in my opinion, utter foolishness. In fact, I have been opposed even to the meetings at the so-called summit, because, in my opinion, the greatest accomplishment, if you could call it such, of the so-called meetings at the summit was to humanize the evil little despots of the Kremlin and to wipe off the blood, the guilty blood of many millions of martyrs and nations from the hands of Khrushchev and Bulganin. I think it is about time that we recognize that there is no sincerity, no change of policy of world conquest by the Russians, and consequently we should endeavor to engage in a political offensive in which we will eventually bring about the destruction of this ogre of world communism which deprives people of their freedom and keeps so many people and nations under the yoke of Communist bondage and slavery.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Warren, I concur with Mr. FEIGHAN in the belief that the Russians attended the Geneva summit conferences strictly for the purpose of furthering their campaign of peaceful coexistence. Whatever the purposes of the leaders of the West may have been, there is no denying that central fact. The Russians went to Geneva with the clear purpose of laying the foundation for the worldwide offensive in which they are now engaged. It is significant, in my considered judgment, to note that when the foreign ministers met several months after the meeting at the summit to bring into specific point and action the rather generalized thinking that took place at the summit conference, it is noted that they fell into complete disagreement and indeed Mr. Molotov broke up the meeting by issuing ultimatum after ultimatum, which, of course, the leaders of the West could not accept. Then this was followed by a visit to South Asia by Khrushchev and Bulganin where they did nothing but belabor the West. They belabored the British and the French and accused the United States as being the biggest imperialist power in the world.

This brings me to the point of a quotation from The Great Pretense. Harry Schwartz, a very able newspaperman who writes for the New York Times, had this to say on the subject: "The Soviet Union of the 20th Congress had posed before it the great enemy of colonialism. Here is our opportunity to expose the Soviet Union as the major colonial power on earth today. The riots in Georgia in March testified more to the continuing strength of Georgia national feeling than to love of Stalinist dictatorship. If freedom is good for India and Burma, why is it not good for Uzbekistan, for Armenia, for the Ukraine and Latvia, and for all the people whose freedom has been taken from them by the czars or their Communist successors." Here they are, the biggest colonial imperial power in all of history, calling us, the lovers of independence and the ones who have fought for the rights of nations, the imperial power. I think we could do something about that.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. O'Connor, I notice from the newspapers yesterday Shepilov, the new Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union, was over in Cairo condemning the United States and the West as a great colonial power. I think it is essential that truth be brought to the world. I think one of the mediums by which this can be done is through the United Nations. Mr. DODD and four other Congressmen and myself introduced a House concurrent resolution last year calling up on the Secretary of State to send to each member nation of the U. N. a copy of the committee report of the Committee To Investigate Communist Aggression, in which we had eye-witness testimony of over 300 witnesses which exposed the imperialism and colonialism and the terrible tyranny of the Russians.

We also requested that the Secretary of State draw up a resolution to be introduced by our Ambassador to the U. N., setting forth that the Russians were a threat to the peace and that they have been guilty of aggression. Unfortunately, that bill which passed the Foreign Affairs Committee, 17 to 5, was stalled in the House Rules Committee. It was certainly my hope that that will be acted on now, because I think truth is one of the biggest factors that will be effective in the cause of true peace.

Mr. WARREN. Congressman, as reported in this symposium on anti-Stalinism, as reported in The Great Pretense, Khrushchev, speaking at the opening of the 20th Congress of the party in Moscow gave the free world an ultimatum: Choose between coexistence and war. He offered no other choice in the relationship between the free and the regimented world. What do we do about this? What is the alternative? Congressman FEIGHAN, must we accept this ultimatum?

Mr. FEIGHAN. Absolutely not. Constantine Brown in the article in The Great Pretense brings up this subject of coexistence. Our committee 2 years ago in its report recognized that the Kremlin was engaged in an all-out propaganda offensive as the advocates of peaceful coexistence between the Communist empire and the free world in order to gain time, to delude the free world as to its real intentions, to divide and destroy the free-world alliances, and to prepare the way for world war III. It seems there has been a dangerous oversimplification of the courses of action open to us in this present world crisis, either preventive war or a peaceful coexistence. Our committee very flatly rejected both of these courses of action as alien to the national interest. Instead, we recommended that we undertake——

Mr. MCTIGUE. May I interrupt, Congressman FEIGHAN?

Mr. FEIGHAN. Yes.

Mr. MCTIGUE. To ask you, I think that the committee that we were all associated with rejected after hearing the eye-witness testimony of the victims of this system, and very much the symposium that we have, The Great Pretense, merely extends the proof, the more current proof of the judgments that were made at the time. Would you agree with that?

Mr. FEIGHAN. Yes, a reaffirmation of our findings.

Mr. MCTIGUE. And hopefully this will continue, the good judgment of people in authoritative positions like this recognizing the threat. As I recall it, some other recommendations were made by the committee, were they not, Congressman, to defeat this coexistence?

Mr. FEIGHAN. Yes, indeed. We recommended that the President get all the free countries of the world together and set forth their determination that all nations should have the right of national self-determination and be free. We also recommended that there be a severance by the free nations of both diplomatic and trade relations with the Communist-controlled countries.

Mr. MCTIGUE. At this juncture, is it an illusion to think that we can do business with the Soviets, the Communists?

Mr. FEIGHAN. I think it is because history shows very conclusively that whenever any nation has done business with the Russians they have always come out on the short end.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I concur completely in that. I would like at this point, Mr. Warren —you have asked me what we can do about this. I would like to make a couple of suggestions. The first is that Mr. FEIGHAN last year, as I recollect it, Congressman, correct me if I am wrong, introduced in the Congress a resolution to create a joint committee of the Congress on overseas information programs, conducted by the United States Government in order to carry on a real campaign of truth, to tell the people of the world where we stand and expose the Russians for what they really are. I think that is a practical step in a political offensive against communism.

The second one is this, recommended by TOM DODD, that an international juridical commission be established within the framework of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization so as to record the crimes against humanity of communism; in other words, to establish a permanent record. If such a record were established, as he recommended, there would be no ducking on the part of the leaders in the Kremlin because they would be strictly on the hook. Therefore, it seems to me that we ought in these days continue to record these crimes by the eyewitnesses because the masters in the Kremlin will continue to try and get off the hook and escape guilt for these terrible crimes.

Mr. MCTIGUE. When there comes a final accounting, Mr. O'Connor, there will be no evading the charges or the terrible atrocities which were committed by these Communists during the period of occupation and conquests, and so forth. That was on the basis of Mr. Dodd's experience at Nuremberg.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Exactly. I think in addition to that, Mr. McTigue, such a record would stand as a warning to all free peoples to be on guard against anyone who attempts to impose a totalitarian rule and to be determined to free those who are held in bondage of such rule.

Mr. MCTIGUE. Serving notice, in other words.

Mr. WARREN. Gentlemen, can we accept this as a fact, that first the Communist Party has changed its strategy radically; secondly, that the Soviet Union has launched a new type aggression; and in the third place, that we must be aware of this and fight back to the best of our ability?

Mr. MCTIGUE. If we don't, we are going to lose, Mr. Warren.

Mr. WARREN. Thank you very much, gentlemen. I am sorry, our time is up for further discussion of the The Great Pretense. The participants in today's program, Mr. James J. McTigue, consultant to the ad hoc committee of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, substituting today for the Honorable Thomas J. Dodd, who is ill; the Honorable Michael A. Feighan, Member of Congress from Ohio; Mr. Edward M. O'Connor, consultant to the Director, United States Information Agency.

Questions and Answers on the Dividend Provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DANIEL A. REED
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 which provide a modest amount of relief from the double taxation of dividends have been the subject of much misunderstanding and, I am afraid, deliberate misrepresentation. Inasmuch as I sponsored the new tax law, I feel a personal responsibility for setting the record straight.

I have collected some typical questions which I have received concerning the dividend provisions, and have prepared answers which I believe will help in achieving a true understanding of these meritorious amendments:

Question. What is meant by the "double taxation" of dividends?

Answer. The double taxation of dividends exists because dividends are subject to income tax twice—once in the hands of the corporation which earns them and then in the hands of the stockholders to whom they are paid. Of course, a dividend is simply an amount which a corporation pays out of its earnings to its owners—that is, its stockholders—as a return on their investment.

The double tax effect is illustrated clearly if for the moment we ignore the modest relief now accorded by the revised tax law. Since corporations pay a 52-percent income tax, the earnings available for distribution to their owners are more than cut in half before they can be distributed as dividends. Then, when the stockholders receive what is left—and, of course, the company must keep some of its earnings itself in order to finance its operations—those stockholders themselves must pay an income tax of from 20 to 91 percent, depending on their individual incomes, on these same earnings which have already been more than cut in half by taxes. As a result of this double taxation, the combined tax burden on the distributed earnings of a corporation ranges from a little over 61 percent for persons in the lowest income-tax bracket (such as a widow living on a $2,000 income) to a little over 95 percent for persons in the highest bracket. Of course, this double burden hits the person of small means the hardest. The combined corporate and individual income-tax load borne by the dividends received by such a person from his savings is over 3 times the 20-percent rate which he pays on any other type of income, including wages.

I should also point out that it is only corporation earnings which are subject to this discriminatory double taxation. Individuals who operate their business as a partnership rather than as a corporation pay only one tax, their individual income tax. The partnership is not taxed first on its earnings before they are distributed to its partners. Furthermore, if a person operates a business, such as a grocery store, as an individual proprietor, he too is taxed only once.

Question. Aren't wages subject to the same double taxation?

Answer. Absolutely not. When a business figures its income for tax purposes, it first deducts any wages it pays its employees. Therefore, it pays no income tax at all on this amount. The only income tax paid on wages is the tax paid by the employees themselves.

Just suppose that wages were subject to the same unfair tax treatment as dividends have been today—here's what would happen: A corporation would have to pay a 52-percent tax on its employees' wages before they were even paid. Such a tax would reduce by more than half the amount which the corporation could pay out in wages. In other words, payrolls in this country would be cut by more than half. I think that you would agree that such a tax system would be indefensible and disastrous. Yet that is exactly what was happening to dividends. All the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 did was to remove a small portion of this unjust discrimination.

Question. Does the new tax law give the same type of relief to interest on bank deposits, savings bonds, and other forms of interest?

Answer. No, it does not—for a very simple reason. Interest is not subject to double taxation. Just like wages, a bank can deduct the interest it pays before figuring its income tax. In fact, any taxpayer is entitled to deduct his interest payments. Of course, the Government pays no income tax so the interest on its bonds is also free from double taxation.

Question. Do you think it right that dividends pay a lower income tax than wages?

Answer. Of course not. The Internal Revenue Code of 1954 does not result in dividends getting a better tax break than wages. I have already pointed out that in the absence of the new provision the lowest combined corporation and individual income-tax burden on dividends would be 61 percent, while that on wages is only 20 percent. Therefore, the average taxpayer, the man with a small income, would bear over three times the tax burden on dividends that he does on wages. Thus, dividends already have been bearing a much higher tax load than wages. All the new tax law does is cut down this extra burden by a very small amount. The 4-percent dividend tax credit which it provides merely cuts from 61 percent to 57 percent the combined tax burden on dividends. Even so, these dividends are still taxed almost three times as much as wages. Moreover, the first $50 of dividend receipts, which the new law excludes from individual income tax, continues to be taxed at the corporate level at 52 percent as compared to the 20-percent tax which applies to wages in the first individual income tax bracket.

Question. How does the new law relieve double taxation of dividends?

Answer. Very simply. First, every taxpayer can completely exclude from his income up to $50 of dividends. This does not mean that he can exclude any dividend payment which is $50 or less, but merely that out of his total dividend receipts he can exclude a total of up to $50. Therefore, a taxpayer whose total dividends from all sources do not exceed $50 pays no tax whatever on his dividends. This will be a tremendous benefit to small stockholders, to individuals who have invested a small portion of their savings in stocks.

Second, in addition to the $50 exclusion, a taxpayer is given a tax credit equal to 4 percent of any dividends in excess of the exclusion. Here's how it works: Take as an example a widow with a total income of $2,000, of which $150 consists of dividends. First, she completely excludes $50, as I have already explained. Then she figures her income tax on the remaining $1,950 just as usual, including the $100 of her dividends still subject to tax. Let's say that her tax on this whole amount comes to $120. Then she figures 4 percent of her taxable dividends of $100. That comes to $4. She simply deducts that $4 from the $120 tax she has computed. Her final tax will be $116. This reflects a total tax reduction of $14 in this case as a result of the new provisions, $4 due to the tax credit and $10 on account of the exclusion; that is, 20 percent of $50.

Question. Why does the new law provide a credit which comes off the tax rather than a simple deduction to be taken in computing taxable income? Doesn't this method favor well-to-do taxpayers?

Answer. Just the contrary is true. The deduction method would favor wealthy taxpayers. For example, a $100 deduction would mean a tax saving of only $20 to a person in the first bracket but it would mean a saving of up to $91 for individuals in the upper brackets.

The tax-credit method adopted in the new law means that every taxpayer, no matter what his income, receives exactly the same amount of tax relief with respect to the same amount of dividends. For example, the 4-percent tax credit gives a person in the first bracket a $4 tax cut on $100 in dividends. A person in the top bracket receives exactly the same $4 tax cut, and no more.

As a matter of fact, the method contained in the new law gives proportionately much more relief to lower-bracket individuals than to upper-bracket taxpayers. Without the credit an individual in the first bracket would pay a $20 tax on $100 in dividends. The 4-percent tax credit cuts that $20 tax to $16—a 20-percent reduction in his tax on those dividends. On the other hand, a top-bracket taxpayer without the credit would pay a $91 tax on the same $100 in dividends. The 4-percent tax credit reduces that $91 tax to $87—only about a 4-percent reduction in his tax on those dividends, instead of 20 percent.

Question. Why doesn't the new law reduce double taxation by allowing a corporation to deduct all or part of its dividends in figuring its tax, just as it can wages?

Answer. This is undoubtedly one method by which double taxation of dividends could be reduced or even eliminated, and it was given careful study. The trouble is that, if you give a corporation a deduction for dividends, you create a tremendous pressure on management to distribute earnings. Therefore, it was felt that such a tax system would interfere with sound business judgment as to how much of a corporation's earnings can safely be distributed and how much should be retained in the business. It was also felt that such a system would discriminate particularly against small, new companies who are most dependent upon retained earnings to finance their growth.

These reasons, plus our previous unfortunate experience with an undistributed profits tax, led to the decision to give relief at the individual shareholder level.

Question. Do any other countries in the world give relief from double taxation of dividends?

Answer. They certainly do. England has given such relief for well over 100 years. Under the British system, a taxpayer can claim a credit for the amount of tax actually paid by the corporation on his dividends. The fact that England has given such relief for over a century is significant in view of the fact that we usually think of the British income tax as especially heavy.

Canada already gives a 20-percent tax credit for dividends. This is exactly the same method contained in our new tax law except that our credit is only 4 percent. Thus, Canada already gives five times the dividend tax relief that we provide. Of course, our new law also gives a complete exclusion of up to $50 of dividends in order to help small stockholders. Canada does not do this.

Sweden, which is usually considered to be one of the most progressive countries in Europe, also gives relief from double taxation of dividends.

In fact, not only is the new dividend provision not something revolutionary, but it is actually simple equity which other countries have recognized years ago. The truth is that the United States has been extremely backward in this regard.

Question. Even assuming that other countries have given relief from the double taxation of dividends, isn't such a proposal still pretty revolutionary in the United States?

Answer. Just the contrary. Our income tax was first adopted in 1913. It was provided then that dividends should not be subject to higher tax than other sources of income. To accomplish this, dividends were exempt from the normal tax in the hands of individuals. Since initially the corporate tax and the individual normal tax were at the same rate, this meant in effect that dividends did not bear the burden of double taxation. While these rate relationships were not maintained, dividends were consistently exempt from the individual normal tax, and in 1918 the exemption was as high as 12 percent on some income. The exemption from normal tax continued for 23 years, right up to 1936. It is interesting to note that the exemption in 1936 was 4 percent—exactly the same amount of relief which the new tax-revision law provides.

In 1936, President Roosevelt recommended the complete elimination of double taxation by exempting from the corporate income tax any earnings which were distributed in dividends. In his message accompanying this recommendation that the corporate income tax only be imposed on undistributed income, the President stated that his proposal "would constitute distinct progress in tax reform."

Since that time, prominent individuals from all parts of the country, both Democrats and Republicans alike, have recommended immediate steps to remove double taxation of dividends.

In 1944, for example, a special committee of the then Democratic Congress made the following recommendation:

"Consideration should be given to the elimination of the present double taxation of dividend income, either by treating the tax on corporate income as a withholding tax and exempting dividends from the personal normal tax, or by some equivalent provision."

The chairman of that group was Representative JERE COOPER, of Tennessee, now ranking Democratic member and chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee.

In 1947, all 10 Democratic members of the House Ways and Means Committee strongly criticized the Republican majority for not taking up the question of double taxation of dividends.

Therefore, you can see that not only is this type of provision not unusual in other countries, it represents a concept which is far from new in our own country.

Question. Is it true that most of the tax relief contained in the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 went to stockholders?

Answer. This is absolutely not true. The 1954 tax law gave $827 million tax relief in 1954 to individual taxpayers and $536 million tax relief to business. Of this total tax relief of $1,363 million, stockholders received $204 million—or only about one-seventh of the total—because of the partial relief from double taxation. Moreover, more liberal deductions for dependents, deductions allowed working mothers for the expense of child care, bigger allowances for medical expenses, and tax reduction for retired people—these alone added up to well over $400 million relief for individual taxpayers, more than twice the relief given from double taxation of dividends.

One other fact is frequently overlooked and that is that the new law extended for 1 year the 52 percent corporate income tax which would otherwise have gone down to 47 percent April 1, 1954. This meant an additional $1.2 billion tax burden which had to be borne indirectly by corporation stockholders—a tax load which was approximately six times the relief these same individuals received from the double taxation of dividends.

Question. Who are the stockholders who will benefit from the new provision? Aren't stockholders the wealthiest group in the country?

Answer. There are some 6,500,000 stockholders in publicly held corporations. Certainly, some of them are wealthy, and some of them are poor. However, on the whole, they represent a pretty fair cross section of our people.

Let's take a look at some figures which show who the stockholders of this country are:

Four and three-tenths percent of American stockholders have combined family incomes of less than $2,000 a year.

Almost 10 percent of American stockholders have combined family incomes of less than $3,000 a year.

Almost 20 percent of American stockholders have combined family incomes of less than $4,000 a year.

Over 30 percent of American stockholders have combined family incomes of less than $5,000 a year.

Finally, over 75 percent of American stockholders have combined family incomes of less than $10,000 a year.

Thus, the great majority of the stockholders of this country are in the low- and middle-income groups.

One of the biggest companies in the country is the United States Steel Corp. I think it safe to assume that its stockholders are fairly typical. Here are some facts about United States Steel's stockholders which a recent survey brought out:

Only 10 percent of its stockholders had incomes over $25,000.

Nearly three-fifths of them—56 percent—had incomes of less than $5,000 a year.

It had as many stockholders with incomes below $4,300 as there were with incomes above that amount.

Finally—and this is the most interesting figure of all—53 percent of United States Steel's stockholders had incomes below the average wage paid to the company's steelworkers.

Now, let's take a look at the number of tax returns which show dividend income. For 1952, the latest year for which the figures are available, 4,219,000 returns were filed which showed dividends as part of the taxpayer's income; 1,896,000 of those returns—about 45 percent of the total—report adjusted gross income from all sources of less than $5,000.

Therefore, those who try to tell you that the dividend provision helps only the rich either do not know the facts, or they are trying deliberately to mislead you.

Hundreds of thousands of housewives are stockholders. Many thousands of elderly retired people depend upon their small stockholdings for their livelihood. Most important of all, let us not overlook the many thousands of thrifty workers who every day, more and more, are purchasing small amounts of stock in their employer's business through payroll deductions. This wholesome trend means that a growing proportion of our country's wage earners are acquiring a direct stake in our free-enterprise system through stock ownership.

Question. Why should we encourage people to buy stocks?

Answer. The answer is simple—in order to create jobs for the American people. To put a man to work, there must be a plant for him to work in. There must be tools and machinery for him to work with. It takes money to provide those things. It is estimated that it takes between ten and fifteen thousand dollars of new capital to create one new job. When you realize that upward of 700,000 young people come into the labor market and seek employment for the first time every year, you get an idea of the tremendous amount of new capital investment that we need every year if we are to provide the job opportunities these young Americans deserve. There is only one fundamental source of this new capital and that is the earnings of our people. The savings from those earnings must provide the capital out of which new jobs and a higher standard of living can be created. When a thrifty individual saves a part of his earnings and invests those savings, he is not only providing for his own security but he is helping to build a strong future for America.

Question. Why can't corporations raise new capital by borrowing instead of by selling stock?

Answer. They can—at least large, well-established businesses can.

Of course, small businesses, especially those just being started, frequently are not in a position to borrow. Just because their businesses are new and not yet established, they are usually considered too risky for bank loans. Therefore, new business must depend to a very large extent upon capital raised through the sale of stocks. This is of great significance, because it is these new and relatively small concerns of today which will provide the strength of our economy tomorrow.

Big business usually can borrow to meet its capital requirements. In fact, it is advantageous for it to borrow because the interest is deductible for tax purposes, while if it raises capital through the sale of stock it gets no deduction for any dividends it pays. This present discriminatory treatment of equity (stock) financing is one reason why business generally has become more and more dependent on debt financing. For every dollar raised since the last war by new stock issues, industry has raised almost $3 by bond issues, mortgages, and bank loans and supplied $9 from retained earnings and depreciation reserves. To provide capital funds, industry found it necessary to double its debt and to reduce the percentage of earnings paid out in dividends. The result has been that total corporate debt at the end of 1953 was $211 billion, more than double what it was at the end of World War II.

This is a very unhealthy situation. Borrowed money has to be used in relatively safe undertakings. It cannot be used ordinarily for experimentation, for carrying out new methods and processes, for developing new products. These things take "risk" capital, capital which is willing to take a chance. If we were perfectly satisfied to let this country stand still, then it might be all right to have business depend on borrowed money in this manner. But if we want our American economy to expand and to provide a steadily rising standard of living for our people, then we must encourage the raising of capital through the sale of stock rather than through borrowing.

These therefore are the two major objectives of the dividend provision contained in the new tax law:

First, to give some relief from discriminatory double taxation; and Second, to encourage the development of risk capital—capital which is willing to take a chance on the future of America.

The Defeat of H. R. 12061 Was a Victory for Private Enterprise

OF

HON. JOHN TABER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

A STEP TOWARD SOCIALISM

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, on July 24 the House considered at length and refused to pass H. R. 12061, known as the Gore-Holifield bill, to put the Federal Government into the atomic-power business. This bill, had it been passed, would have had far-reaching and adverse effects on the survival of our country, and on the American freedom as we have known it. It would have been a long step toward complete socialization of American industry. The history of the embracement of socialism has been a history of the downfall of nations and the loss of personal freedoms. Surely we in America, where the private-enterprise system has given us the highest standard of living in the world today, will not tolerate turning to a system which has been a failure throughout history, and which has destroyed other nations.

THE DANGER TO OUR COUNTRY

The passage of H. R. 12061 would have authorized and directed actions that honorable, competent, and patriotic witnesses testified would adversely affect military and defense activities of the United States.

The testimony of the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, Admiral Strauss, and of his scientist associate, Dr. Libby, as well as that of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Admiral Radford, was that the shortage of competent scientific personnel is the most serious problem today.

The bill provided for construction, by the Federal Government, of an unspecified number of large-scale atomic powerplants, and of an unknown number of smaller scale atomic powerplants. These plants would have been uneconomic. They would have been obsolete almost as soon as they were constructed. Their operation would have required large Federal subsidies, possibly in excess of $100 million annually.

It would be unthinkable and the height of folly to jeopardize our defense position, even our Nation's existence, by spreading the layer of competent scientific and technical personnel thinner, as we would have done, by embarking on this "crash" program.

WHY?

In view of the potential threat to the security of our Nation, a logical question is, Why were we being asked to take this step down the road toward socialism? What were the purported reasons given by the proponents?

A look at the record discloses quite clearly that the reasons advanced were without foundation in fact. It is the same old, old story of trying to use a somewhat plausible basis of action to hide the thinly disguised, real purpose of the bill.

The proponents of this "crash" program of Federal construction at atomic powerplants claimed this program was necessary because no one is building the various designs of nuclear reactors. The record does not bear this out. On page 49, of part I, of the hearings on the second supplemental bill for 1957, Mr. Strauss, AEC Chairman, was asked whether the Federal Government should build more plants. The answer was:

I think the Federal Government should only build plants in the event we have a design for a reactor that we think should be built and where private industry won't build it. Then I think we should.

Mr. Strauss then said:

We have no reactor as of the moment which we feel is ready to go into large-scale construction that has not been contracted for or negotiated for by private industry.

To which Mr. W. K. Davis, Director of the Division of Reactor Development, added:

That is absolutely correct.

Again on page 40 of part I of the hearings, Mr. Strauss said:

Every type that is promising in the opinion of the Commission is either today building or projected as a prototype or full-scale plant or is in active investigation in one of the laboratories of the Commission.

Various spokesmen for private industry have testified or issued statements to the effect that they propose to continue to take a leading part in the research and development of nuclear power reactors with the ultimate aim of economic power production. It has been estimated that their present expenditures are at a rate of $30 million a year and plans are now outstanding for expending several hundred millions of dollars for nuclear powerplants.

The Atomic Energy Act of 1954 was passed less than 2 years ago. It was not until the passage of this act that private industry, and public bodies and cooperatives, were permitted to take an active interest in the development of nuclear powerplants. Any reasonable person, without a preconceived desire to ignore the facts in order to make a case for the crash Federal program, will be astounded at the progress that has been made in a little over a year after the first round of proposals were received, in the spring of 1955.

Table II on page 98 of part II of the House hearings on the second supplemental appropriation bill, 1957, indicates the magnitude of the program, now under way or contemplated.

In view of the progress that has been made in a little over a year since AEC opened the gate for private, cooperative, and publicly owned groups to participate in atomic power development, one must wonder why this urgency to get the Federal Government involved in constructing and operating full-scale atomic powerplants.

The proposal for the crash Federal program was introduced in the other body on July 30, 1955, just 11 months after the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 was signed and only a few months after the last date of filing proposals with the Atomic Energy Commission for the first round of non-Federal participation in reactor development. Can anyone doubt or deny that initially the Gore bill was a public power proposal pure and simple?

Even though H. R. 12061 represented some changes from the original Gore bill, the basic design was still there, and to confirm this, the Washington Evening Star of Wednesday, July 18, 1956, quoted the author of the bill, in the other body, as saying with respect to the present bill:

> He regards its provisions for governmental construction of atomic-power plants as one of the keystones of a four-point public-power program he expects the Democrats to spell out in their platform at the party's Chicago convention.

Can anything be clearer?

With all the ballyhoo about getting something started, there was no definite information in the bill, nor the accompanying report, as to the number, size, type, or location of the nuclear reactors to be constructed. The basis for the estimated cost was, and still is, a mystery.

The Nation should be thankful for the House's refusal to commit the taxpayers to spending $400 million—it is admitted that this is a general overall estimate—or maybe several times that amount, for uneconomic nuclear-power plants of unknown types, size, and safety characteristics. There can be little question, had H. R. 12061 passed, that it would have received a deserved veto.

Government Must Be Limited to Its Legitimate Constitutional Functions

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. RALPH W. GWINN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. GWINN. Mr. Speaker, on July 11, I inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a speech by Mr. Willis Stone delivered before the Congress of Freedom at Dallas, Tex., last April 7.

This speech contained figures which may seem incredible. But a check has been made and I find that included in the principal statistical sources drawn upon for facts were such authentic publications as our own United States Government Manual, the Federal budgets for recent years, the audit reports of the Comptroller General on Government-owned corporations, the annual reports of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the reports and task force reports of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, the statistical abstracts of the United States, and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. Stone has developed the thesis that the misuse of the taxing power is making us captives of the Federal bureaucracy. I cannot resist, therefore, supporting Mr. Stone's thesis by again pointing out the legitimate functions of Government to which its activities should be limited. Moral wrongs, whether by Government or by individuals, cannot long be tolerated.

We do have legitimate areas laid down in the Constitution within which Government can function. All others are illegitimate. These illegitimate functions I hate as much as anyone.

There is just one legitimate area, and only one, where the Central Government is honorable and, indeed, admirable, and, on the whole, honest. That area has to do with the defense of the people's rights and property, the maintenance of law and order, and the sacrifice having to do with national defense.

These are legitimate functions of Government not merely because the Constitution or the contract with Government says so. They are proper functions because the moral and natural law made them so, long before the Constitution. They are in the nature of things. The individual has the same rights and powers with the same limitations imposed on him by the moral and natural law. He can use force to defend himself and his property. And that is the only time he can use force on another person without his consent. He can transfer that right and power to Government as his agent. And since all rights and powers come from the Creator to the individual, he can convey no different or higher right or power to Government than he himself possesses.

Even if people should vote by a majority to give more power to Government than they themselves possess as individuals, the transfer would be no good. When Satan offered to Jesus, in the hour of His greatest temptation, the powers and privileges of the kingdoms of the world, Jesus rejected them utterly. Satan had no such power as he pretended to have to transfer to Jesus. He had simply assumed to have an immoral and illegal power over the people which he had no right to convey.

When the Government goes beyond that restricted area which is the only natural and moral area possible for Government to occupy, then without exception it becomes dishonorable, full of misrepresentation and corruption. It exploits the people to do special favors for special groups in return for their votes. It pretends to be able to manage people and their property better than they can manage for themselves. It attempts to play God in the lives of the people.

GOVERNMENT IS MORALLY WRONG

It is beginning to dawn upon us that using the force of Government to take other people's property to do good according to Government's notion of what is good is all dead wrong. The fact that the whole world is morally wrong by taking people's private property and making it government-owned emphasizes the extent of the world collapse of morals. And, of course, what is morally wrong is contrary to the laws of God. The world violates them with contempt. When Government violates the laws of God by doing what no individual can morally do, then it is just as guilty of wrong as the individual would be guilty. What we have been doing has always been regarded economically wrong. It is indeed both economically and morally wrong.

For example, a lot of our old neighbors, some of our children, fell in love with the mountains and deserts of the great West. They knew before they went west that there was no water in the deserts. They went anyway. They never dreamed of tapping every eastern family $25 for every billion dollars needed for water. Yet when they organized themselves into political groups they said to their Congressmen, "You go back there and take $25 on the average from every family in the East, or we will not reelect you to Congress." So, the Congressmen have done very well. They have already collected about $150 from each family, or about $6 billion altogether for that purpose.

ANOTHER MORAL WRONG

As another example of the immoral and ridiculous, take a look at TVA in Tennessee. That was our first planting of a Socialist rose in a patch of weeds, otherwise called the free economy. All competition was killed off for its benefit. The rose has had to be artificially fed ever since 1922. And the feeding has cost us in recent years $190 million per year, a total of over $2 billion. That is another $50 per family Government has outrageously presumed to have the power to take from us. It sells power below cost so that 110,000 families heat their houses with electricity at your expense. TVA never can earn a surplus at such rates to build new facilities for a growing population. And Government can never raise the rates and keep the votes of the people. There will always be a shortage of power so long as TVA has to depend on Congress for its life. Industry will not move into Tennessee because they cannot depend on Congress to continue to carry such a weakling. Congress cannot depend on itself either in that regard. TVA does not pay a dime toward the national defense—it is exempt from all taxes. It has been a blight on the State of Tennessee. It has constantly fallen behind all the other 11 southeastern private power-producing States in agricultural products, in manufacturing, in retail sales, in growth of new business, in postal receipts. All this is in accordance to the Chamber of Commerce of the United States survey in 1953.

On all of our Socialist projects above described, the Government spends $10 billion annually, and loses most of it. That is $250 annually per family. And it is growing much worse. There is no restraint or reversal of the trend in sight.

WHO CAN STOP ALL THIS?—THE PRESIDENT CAN'T

Clearly the President cannot stop it. When he runs for reelection this fall, he will be met by a committee at nearly every State line asking, one after the other, "How much, Mr. President, will you take from others to give to us for more power this year?"

CONGRESS CAN'T STOP IT

Congress certainly cannot stop it. Congress has tried and failed.

THE REMEDY IS CONSTITUTIONAL, NOT LEGISLATIVE

We are now in somewhat the same position as that of our ancestors just prior to 1789. We, the people, must, as they did then, reassert and redefine, so that even the Supreme Court cannot misinterpret, the constitutional limitations on the functions of the Government. The taxing and spending powers of Congress must be limited again. We must first of all correct the dreadful mistake made in 1913, called the 16th amendment, which gave unlimited power to Congress to tax and spend. We must chain the politicians, as Jefferson said, to the limitations of the Constitution so they cannot break away from them.

We should make of ourselves a true example of freedom again in the world. It does not exist today. Thus we might hope to repeat the contribution which we made in the past against the police states of the world. Thus we could hope to reestablish peace at home and in the world.

Alaska Taxation

OF

HON. E. L. BARTLETT

DELEGATE FROM ALASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, the application of Federal income taxes to individuals living in Alaska and to businesses operating there has been a matter of increasing concern as the cost of living has gone up and as the cost of doing business has gone up. Attention has been even more closely focused on this subject since there has been a determination that the cost-of-living allowance paid to Federal employees there—and elsewhere outside the continental limits of the United States—is not subject to income taxes. Comparisons are made between Alaska and Hawaii, where all Federal taxes and all other Federal laws apply, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, to which the United States Federal income tax has never been extended. It has been urged by some that Federal taxes should be abolished insofar as Alaska is concerned. Others have argued that there ought to be treatment for non-Federal workers—and businesses—comparable to that accorded Federal employees. Still others, including Gov. B. Frank Heintzleman, have advocated a Federal tax holiday. To the best of my knowledge, it has never been exactly spelled out how this would operate.

It is understood, of course, that Alaskans are not alone in having to hand over to the tax collector so much of the income they derive from wages or salaries, or profits they make from business. Everyone in the 48 States and in our sister Territory of Hawaii is required to pay to the Federal Government much, much more than before World War II. The difference is one of degree. That is to say, the Alaska wage earner is required to earn much more than he would in the States for living based upon minimum standards; yet to attain this living he is projected into an income-tax bracket the effect of which is to take from him much more than would be the case if he were living in an area of lower cost.

I am writing this report to give my fellow Alaskans the benefit of the knowledge I have been able to acquire on the subject. It is one which may be made to lend itself, and very easily, to an emotional approach. This is an election year. In the heat of a campaign it is easy enough for a candidate to promise the voters that if he is elected he will do away with taxes and provide at the same time more services; it is just as easy to promise the moon and the stars. It has not been my habit to make empty promises, and I do not intend to start now. I only intend to report.

It has been said in Alaska that there should not be taxation without representation. I believe there should not be. There should not be taxation without representation anywhere under the American flag. It is contrary to the very concepts upon which this Government was founded. Too long continued, it becomes not only offensive but in my opinion downright immoral. But here again I must warn myself that emotionalism must not be substituted for the factual. It was over 6 years ago that I requested from the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress an opinion on the constitutionality of Federal taxes as applied to Alaska. That opinion, written in the American Law Section of the Legislative Reference Service, had this to say upon the proposition of taxation without representation:

> The further contention that lack of representation invalidates a tax was laid at rest in Heald v. District of Columbia ((1922) 259 U. S. 114), when the Supreme Court stated:
> "Finally it is earnestly contended that the act is void, because it subjects the residents of the District to taxation without representation. Residents of the District lack the suffrage and have politically no voice in the expenditure of the money raised by taxation. Money so raised is paid into the Treasury of the United States, where it is held, not as a separate fund for the District, but subject to the disposal of Congress, like other revenues raised by Federal taxation. The objection that the tax is void because of these facts is fundamental and comprehensive. It is not limited in application to the tax on intangibles, but goes to the validity of all taxation of residents of the District. If sound, it would seem to apply not only to taxes levied upon residents of the District for the support of the government of the District; but also to those taxes which are levied upon them for the support generally of the Government of the United States. It is sufficient to say that the objection is not sound. There is no constitutional provision which so limits the power of Congress that taxes can be imposed only upon those who have political representation."

Mr. Speaker, it was in the spring of 1954 that the late Delegate Joseph R. Farrington, of Hawaii, and I joined in a proposal made to the Treasury Department that the same treatment given Federal employees in respect to cost-of-living allowances be granted to those in private employment in Hawaii and Alaska. Hon. M. B. Folsom, then Under Secretary of the Treasury and now Secretary of the Department of Health, Welfare, and Education, rejected our proposal on behalf of the Treasury Department.

In the autumn of 1954 Mayor Cyril A. Coyne, of Skagway, Alaska, came to Washington to renew the effort to convince Treasury officials that they should support tax exemption for Alaska. This was after the Central Labor Council of Skagway had decided to seek action. Mayor Coyne, a group of interested men in Washington, D. C., and I met with Under Secretary Folsom and one of his principal advisers. Early in 1955 the Treasury Department, through Mr. Folsom, again declined to take affirmative action. In writing Mayor Coyne, the Treasury Under Secretary said:

> I appreciate the point which your group raised with reference to your higher cost of living but there are, of course, also great differences in the cost of living within the 48 States. A differential tax treatment based on cost of living would appear to open the way to really immense complications and new and different sorts of discriminations between different sections and regions.

In writing to me on the same subject, Under Secretary Folsom said in part:

> The tax exemption of certain Government cost-of-living allowances does perhaps create an awkward precedent and I can understand your feeling and that of Mayor Coyne and his associates. However, I believe that the tax exemption of the Government allowances was adopted as an alternative to higher gross allowances. For most people it seems likely that pay scales over the years have come to reflect the living cost. Special tax exemptions under such circumstances would thus not seem to be called for.

In the fall of 1955 Governor Heintzleman, of Alaska, in a speech made in Portland, Oreg., proposed that Alaska be given a 20-year moratorium on Federal income taxation. Later it was reported from Washington that this idea had not been cleared with the Eisenhower administration.

Indeed, then Secretary of the Interior Douglas McKay dismissed the Governor's proposal with the comment:

> I think that was just Frank's idea.

The Secretary was reported to have also definitely stated the suggestion had not even been discussed with him, much less cleared with the Eisenhower administration. The newspaper article to which I refer added:

> McKay went on to indicate that while it might be a fine thing for Alaska, a tax moratorium for Alaska has about as much chance of passing by Congress as a bill to replace the stars and stripes on the American flag with the hammer and sickle.

In a special dispatch to the Anchorage Daily News, Washington Correspondent David Fernsler reported:

> Involved also in doubts over the Heintzleman proposal is the well-recognized fact that one Congress cannot bind another. Legislation by this Congress to grant a tax holiday would not be binding upon the next Congress. Any succeeding Congress could change the order of things.
> In the case of Alaska where investments in business would be sought, this would be most important. Investors might hesitate to embark on a long-range program without more binding assurance than this that they would escape United States taxes.

For my part, Mr. Speaker, I called attention to all this in a letter written to Acting Secretary of the Interior Davis on May 17 of this year, and stated in part:

It would be most helpful to me if I could learn from you first if Governor Heintzleman has ever taken up with the Department of the Interior this proposal for a Federal tax incentive or holiday relating to Alaska. If he has, can you inform me if the Department proposes to seek legislative action in harmony with Governor Heintzleman's suggestion? Likewise, I should be most appreciative if you will let me know if generally the Department of the Interior is sympathetic with Governor Heintzleman's plan to take industry to Alaska by decreasing or abolishing the Federal taxes and if the Department believes that such a proposition is sound legally in view of the fact that Alaska is an incorporated Territory.

The reply, dated June 11, came to me from Assistant Secretary of the Interior D'Ewart, which said in part:

Governor Heintzleman on several occasions has discussed with officials of the Department his views with respect to encouraging the industrial development of the Territory. We are in complete and wholehearted agreement with the Governor that mining and other industries in Alaska should be expanded. However, we have requested Governor Heintzleman to submit to us a more detailed and specific proposal embodying his views on the subject so that this Department may give it formal consideration. For this reason we have not looked into the legal aspects of the matter. Without question incentives of the type apparently contemplated by the Governor could be put into effect only as a result of congressional action.

Mr. Speaker, even then I did not stop. My next letter was addressed to Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey on June 22 in which I reviewed the history of the subject and then said:

There are wide differences, of course, between living costs in New York City or Washington, D. C., for example, and a small town in Mississippi. Nevertheless, this argument fails to satisfy. The "wide difference" to which Mr. Folsom alluded is not sufficient to require the Federal Government to grant a cost-of-living allowance to the Federal employees in Washington, D. C., or New York City. Yet the Federal Government must grant the allowance in Alaska not only as a matter of simple justice but to keep personnel there. An accurate cost-of-living survey has not been made for several years but since the cost of living has not decreased notably anywhere, the latest available figures will not, I am confident, be too far out of line. When the last survey was conducted the cost of living in Anchorage, Alaska, was something on the order of 41 percent more than in Washington, D. C., and in Fairbanks, Alaska, it was something like 48 percent more. That is the essential factor, I suggest, which ought to permit the Treasury Department to give sympathetic consideration to a tax adjustment for Alaska without being accused of favoring one section of the country.

Governor Heintzleman, of Alaska, has proposed repeatedly in public statements and in speeches that tax exemptions (whether total or partial is not clear) be allowed by the Federal Government for a period of 20 years. This, he has stated, would, more than anything else, attract capital to Alaska and permit constructive development of the Territory's wealth of natural resources. I must assume that in some measure or other Governor Heintzleman speaks for the administration in this, since as the chief executive official of the Territory and an appointee of the President he is the administration's spokesman in matters relating to Alaska.

After receiving Mr. Folsom's letter I judged it would be a mere gesture and a fruitless effort if I were to introduce legislation in the Congress bearing on this subject. And it is not my intention to do so at this time. Rather, it occurred to me that it would be far preferable to write this letter to you explaining the situation and the need in the hope that instead of receiving the formal views of the Treasury Department by way of report on any bill which might be introduced, I might have a prior expression from you. Therefore, I respectfully request that Federal taxation policies, as they relate to the welfare of individual Alaskans and the development of that great Territory, be carefully examined with a view to determining if we could not jointly correct that which certainly has the surface appearance of being discriminatory and of being hurtful to the best interests of the United States in that it hinders growth of business and industry and employment of labor.

Secretary Humphrey was kind in replying to me without delay. But he held out no hope for tax relief in his letter of July 3 when he said:

I regret that I cannot give you any encouragement for Treasury Department support for such legislation. Under Secretary Folsom's letter of February 3 to you indicated the problem which the Treasury has in dealing with the numerous requests for special tax treatment and allowances for different purposes. You recognize in your letter that substantial differences in the cost of living also exist within the 48 States. The fact that certain cost-of-living allowances to Federal employees were made nontaxable by the Congress was presumably an alternative to a higher direct adjustment in pay. As Mr. Folsom pointed out, the practice regarding Federal compensation cannot be presumed to reflect a general practice, since in most cases it seems likely that regular compensation will have come to reflect the living cost. A general increase in exemptions or a cost-of-living deduction would give a special tax benefit even to those whose compensation has already been adjusted to reflect any cost-of-living differences on the normal taxable basis.

Not yet persuaded, Mr. Speaker, I wrote Secretary Humphrey once more, elaborating on the point previously made and making specific reference to the possibility of a tax holiday for business, to which the Treasury Secretary replied on July 12:

I am afraid that I would have about the same reaction to a proposal for a tax holiday for business income in Alaska. There are so many proposals for special relief of one sort and another. They would all add up to a really tremendous revenue loss that would prevent any reduction in general tax rates for many years to come. It is so important for the whole country to get all the rates down as soon as we can that I could not agree to starting on a series of special exemptions that would prevent general tax relief.

I do appreciate very much the spirit in which you have written me and I wish that I might be more encouraging to you. I have had to disagree with so many other similar suggestions for other good purposes that I do not see how I could make an exception in the special situation which you describe in Alaska, important though it is.

Next I thought it would be appropriate to consult with our esteemed colleague, Hon. WILBUR D. MILLS, of Arkansas. I took this matter up with Mr. MILLS because he had recently been appointed chairman of the Ways and Means Subcommittee to study income-tax matters. In a letter which he wrote me Mr. MILLS held out no more hope for special consideration for Alaska than had Secretary Humphrey. I present his letter here:

I have read your letters to the Honorable George M. Humphrey of June 22 and July 6, 1956, with considerable interest. As an attorney, I must confess that I am somewhat startled by your suggestions that some tax preference should be provided for resident individuals and businesses of the Territory of Alaska.

As I recall, the organic act governing Alaska provides that the Constitution of the United States and all of the laws thereof shall have the same force and effect within the Territory of Alaska as elsewhere in the United States. In other words, it would appear that the uniformity clause of the Constitution requires that all Federal tax laws apply uniformly to Alaska, just as to any other part of the United States.

In saying this, I am not unaware of the doubts expressed by some as to whether the Federal income tax qualifies as a duty, impost or excise within the meaning of the uniformity clause. However, I remember the case of Stratton's Independence v. Howbert held a Federal corporate income tax to be an excise tax, measured by income, on the privilege of doing business as a corporation.

It has also been argued that Congress' power to enact legislation governing the Territories is derived from article IV, section 3, clause 2 of the Constitution, and that this power is independent of the prohibition contained in the uniformity clause. This question has never been decided by the courts. However, I am inclined to think that if and when it arises, the courts will decide that the mandate of the uniformity clause must prevail.

Aside from the constitutional doubts that I have about your suggestion that Alaska be accorded some tax preference, I am also concerned about the economic basis and justification for such a preference. Both of us are aware that the cost of living is not uniform throughout the United States. Granting a tax preference for Alaska would set a precedent which would compel like treatment for other high-cost areas within the United States and eventually lead to unbearable complexity in the Internal Revenue Code.

In closing, let me suggest that it is possible that a tax preference for resident individuals or businesses of Alaska could do irreparable harm to the Territory's chances of becoming a State of the Union. Severe though the economic problems of the Territory may be, nevertheless, I do not believe that the answer to them lies in a tax holiday for the Territory.

I then talked with the ranking minority member of the House Ways and Means Committee, the Honorable DANIEL A. REED. Mr. REED told me, "I can readily appreciate the reasons you have set forth with regard to the application of a lower Federal income tax in Alaska. On the other hand, I should think that Alaskans generally would wish to avoid being treated differently from the residents of the States. Moreover, I believe that you will agree that practically all of the reasons for a differential tax treatment with regard to Alaska also apply, although perhaps with lesser force, in many of the States. The difference is really largely one of degree. I really think that adoption of such a plan might start us along a very dangerous road."

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that administration support for the elimination or reduction of Federal income taxes in Alaska cannot be expected. Secretary Humphrey has made that clear. Mr. Speaker, the Democratic member of the House Ways and Means Committee, junior in service only to Chairman COOPER, has indicated the substantial doubt of relief which he entertained. Mr. Speaker, the esteemed ranking minority member, Mr. REED, has not been persuaded that Alaskans should enjoy a special tax treatment.

In the face of all this, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to delude or betray my fellow Alaskans by telling them that tax relief can be arranged simply and without too much effort. All the evidence—and it is massive—points to the contrary. Constitutional considerations, a seeming fear that special benefits for Alaskans might create a chain reaction, and considerations of practical application—these are the high barriers to tax relief in the Territory.

Statement Concerning the Activities of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, House of Representatives, During the 84th Congress

OF

HON. TOM MURRAY

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, during the 84th Congress the Post Office and Civil Service Committee of the House of Representatives had one of its busiest and most productive two sessions. During this Congress 655 House bills and resolutions and 30 Senate bills were referred to the House Post Office and Civil Sevice Committee. The committee recommended favorably 26 House bills and 18 Senate bills. Thirty-five bills acted on by the committee became law. Six bills recommended by the committee and passed by the House are pending in the Senate.

The committee approved the following reports:

House Report No. 434: The General Accounting Office's Report on Leave Practices in Post Offices, April 21, 1955.

House Report No. 435: The General Accounting Office's Report on Financial Management of the Post Office Department, April 21, 1955.

House Report No. 1740: Study of Manpower Management in the Federal Government, February 2, 1956.

House Report No. 1741: General and Financial Management, Decentralization and Reorganization of the Post Office Department, February 2, 1956.

House Report No. 1744: Leave Administration in the Departments and Agencies, February 6, 1956.

House Report No. 1844: United States Civil Service Commission, March 1, 1956.

House Report No. 2109: Personnel Programs and Policies of the Federal Government in Overseas Operations, May 3, 1956.

House Report No. 2961: Study of Manpower Utilization and Personnel Management in the Federal Government—Interim Report—August 6, 1956.

MAJOR LEGISLATION NOW PUBLIC LAW—SALARY INCREASES FOR 1,573,000 FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

The committee held extensive hearings on legislation to increase the salaries and classify the positions of officers and employees of the postal field service. Deliberations of the committee on this extremely complex and difficult subject resulted in approval of a committee bill which was passed by the House. Virtually all of the principles of this bill are included in Public Law 68, 84th Congress, which provides salary increases averaging 8.1 percent for all postal field service employees and establishing a modern, realistic system for the classification of their positions on the basis of the relationships of the various positions and the levels of the duties and responsibilities thereof.

The committee also held complete hearings and recommended legislation with respect to salary increases for classified Federal employees, resulting in enactment of Public Law 94, which gave each employee a 7½-percent increase.

INCREASED ANNUITIES FOR 328,000 RETIRED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

The third of a series of increases for Federal employees already retired was approved in the first session of this Congress. Under this legislation, Public Law 369, 84th Congress, the annuities of those on the retirement rolls June 30, 1955, were increased by 12 percent on the first $1,500 and 8 percent on all over $1,500. Annuities of those who retired after that date but before January 1, 1958, will be increased but lesser percentages on a gradually declining scale.

IMPROVED FEDERAL CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT 2,400,000 FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Title IV of Public Law 854, 84th Congress, completely rewrites the Civil Service Retirement Act. Under its provisions the average annuity benefit for Federal employees is increased by 25 percent and this increase affects the annuities of the surviving spouses. The average increase in annuities of surviving children is 150 percent. Other important features of the law are: First, an annuity is provided in case of involuntary separation after 50 years of age with 20 years of service; second, there is a minimum annuity of 40 percent assured for those retiring for disability; third, there is a cut of 50 percent in the amount an individual's annuity is reduced in cases where an employee retires when less than 60 years of age; fourth, an employee may provide an annuity for his widow by taking a reduction in his annuity of only 2½ percent for the first $2,400 and 10 percent for the remainder. This compares to the present reduction of 5 percent for the first $1,500 and 10 percent for the remainder.

This law also provides for a more realistic approach to handling the civil service retirement fund. It establishes as a goal the normal cost plus interest representing the Government's contribution to the fund and provides that each department and agency will contribute to the fund at a payroll cost of 6½ percent an amount equivalent to that contributed by the employees.

MERIT SYSTEM EXTENDED TO 60,000 FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Public Law 380, 84th Congress, authorized the granting of career-type appointments for indefinite Federal employees who were in positions in the competitive civil service on January 23, 1955, who had passed competitive qualifying examinations or who would pass such examinations within 1 year and who had 3 years of satisfactory service in the competitive civil service.

Public Law 836, 84th Congress, provided the same benefits for postal employees.

REORGANIZATION OF THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

The merit system of Federal employment is improved and strengthened through the reorganization of the Civil Service Commission. This reorganization was recommended in House Report No. 1844 and is provided in title II of Public Law 854, 84th Congress, which establishes 6-year staggered terms of office for United States Civil Service Commissioners.

The President will designate a Chairman and Vice Chairman of the Commission and the line of succession to the chairmanship is established through the Commissioners rather than through the executive director, who is not a Presidential appointee.

REVISION OF SALARIES IN EXECUTIVE POSITIONS

The pay in executive positions—primarily Presidential appointees—had lagged behind that of Federal employees generally. Title I of Public Law 854, 84th Congress, provides top salaries of $25,000 for Cabinet officers and salaries of $22,500, $22,000, $21,000, $20,500, $20,000, $19,000, $18,000, $17,500, and $17,000 for other executive officers and heads of independent departments, agencies, commissions, and boards. It spells out the individual positions and sets specific salaries. It also authorizes and fixes the compensation of certain secretarial, executive, and administrative staff assistants to the President.

This title also adjusts certain salaries of specialized professional and technical personnel so as to bring them in conformity with the executive salaries established under the bill. The top two grades of the general schedule and the three top grades of the postal field service schedule are also adjusted with the top salary limitation being established at $16,000.

SALARIES PROTECTED WHEN POSITIONS ARE DOWNGRADED

Public Law 594, 84th Congress, protects the salary of an officer or employee subject to the Classification Act of 1949 who, on and after the effective date, is in a position paid under the general service schedule and whose position has been placed in a lower grade due to reclassification subsequent to July 1, 1954, provided that such officer or employee has held this position continuously and that the duties and responsibilities of such position have not been materially changed.

It also provides that when such position becomes vacant the rate of compensation of any individual subsequently appointed to fill the vacancy shall be fixed in accordance with the Classification Act of 1949. The provisions of this act do not apply to grades 16, 17, and 18 of the general schedule.

OVER ONE-HALF MILLION FEDERAL EMPLOYEES BONDED WITHOUT CHARGE

Public Law 323 of the 84th Congress authorized the procurement by the Government of blanket, position schedule, or other types of surety bonds, suitable for the numbers and types of employees involved, for Federal and military personnel required to be bonded.

For many years Federal employees have complained that they were required to purchase their bonds because they happened to be in a position that required that they be bonded. This was particularly true of postal employees. Postmasters and supervisors in large post offices were required to carry heavy bonds at a substantial personal cost to them.

ENFORCEMENT OF POSTAL LAWS STRENGTHENED

Public Law 821, 84th Congress, which permits the impounding of mail matter for a 20-day period will greatly strengthen the arm of the Postmaster General in enforcement of the postal laws prohibiting the perpetrating of fraud and the sending of obscene matter through the mails. This has become an increasing problem with the Post Office Department. The sending of obscene matter has been listed as one of the major causes for the increase in juvenile delinquency.

Under Public Law 821 the Postmaster General will be able to act promptly in preventing law breakers from harvesting thousands of dollars in ill-gotten gains.

HIGHWAY POSTAL SERVICE

Public Law 862, 84th Congress, establishes a basic act governing the Highway Postal Service. Up to this time the Highway Postal Service has been operating under the laws relating to star routes. The growth of this service as the result of the discontinuance of branch railway lines and the need for more substantial and modern equipment made it necessary to provide legislation which would be designed specifiaclly for the Highway Postal Service. This legislation is contained in Public Law 862, 84th Congress.

UNIFORM ALLOWANCE FOR 200,000 FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Public Law 37 extended the benefits of the Federal Employees Uniform Allowance Act to all Government employees required to wear uniforms.

POSTAL-RATE REVISION

While legislation revising postal rates recommended by the committee did not become law, it is of such importance that it should not go without mention. Failure to increase postal rates leaves the postal service facing one of the largest rates of deficit in its history.

In the first place the committee held extensive hearings and recommended legislation which would have increased postal revenues by $430 million annually. This legislation passed the House by a substantial margin. Hearings were begun in the Senate but were not completed by the end of the Congress. It is expected that action will be taken early next year on this very important problem.

In recommending this legislation the committee pointed out that the real reason for the postal deficit was increased costs over which the Department had no control. The most important of these increased costs were increased employee benefits. These benefits since 1945 and counting the recent retirement legislation amount to $1,500,000,000 a year.

In recommending the legislation to the House, the committee emphasized that first-class letter mail was still being carried at the 1933 rate—3 cents an ounce—and the users of first-class letter mail had not had a single increase to meet the increased cost of these benefits.

The main provisions of postal-rate increase bill were: First, increasing the first-class letter rate from 3 cents to 4 cents an ounce and the domestic airmail rate from 6 cents to 7 cents an ounce; and, second, increasing the newspapers and magazines on the portion sent outside the county of publication by 30 percent on the reading portion and 120 percent on the advertising portion.

The principal increases in third-class mail were from 2 cents to 3 cents for individual mailings and a minimum rate per piece of from 1½ cents to 2 cents.

SUBCOMMITTEE HEARINGS

Subcommittee hearings held under the authority of House Resolution 304 were as follows: Subcommittee on Manpower Utilization and Departmental Personnel Management, November 2, 3, 4, 1955; June 25, 27, July 2, 1956; Subcommittee on Post Office and Postal Operations held hearings on the subject of the sending of unordered merchandise and obscene matter through the mail on February 28, 29, March 2, 5, 1956.

The Subcommittee on Civil Service Commission and Personnel Programs held hearings at overseas installations during the fall of 1955 under the authority of the Legislative Reorganization Act—Public Law 601, 79th Congress.

SPECIAL REPORT

The Committee on Retirement Policy for Federal Personnel, which was appointed pursuant to section 2 of Public Law 555, 82d Congress, submitted the fiifth and final part of its report to Congress on June 29, 1954. This 1,155-page report contains detailed analyses of all retirement and pension systems applicable to Federal civilian and military personnel, certain recommendations with respect thereto, and other pertinent data.

Because of the volume and exceptionally broad scope of this report, a brief summary thereof was prepared and printed as a committee print for ready reference by the Members. The summary sets forth the principal recommendations of the Committee on Retirement Policy for Federal Personnel and related comments.

COMMITTEE STUDIES AND INVESTIGATIONS

Under the authority of House Resolution 304, the committee has conducted extensive investigations and studies into three general categories and problems coming under the committee jurisdiction as follows: First, the Federal civil service; second, postal operations; and third, the utilization of manpower throughout the Federal Government.

THE FEDERAL CIVIL SERVICE

The committee issued House Report No. 1844, covering the Federal civil service. This is generally considered to be one of the most far-reaching reports on the Federal civil-service system, recommending a completely new and modern approach to personnel management. Among other things, the report recommended completely rewriting the old Civil Service Act of 1883. Many of the recommendations of this report have already been placed into effect.

Among some of the major recommendations which have been approved are a reorganization of the Civil Service Commission whereby the Commissioners are placed on a 6-year-term basis. The Commission will continue to be bipartisan, one term expiring every 2 years. At the same time, it was recommended that the operations of the Civil Service Commission, as well as policy matters, be directed by the Civil Service Commissioners and that a regular succession to the acting chairmanship be established. These provisions were written into Public Law 854.

The report also recommended that the civil-service retirement fund be placed on a sounder basis by requiring that the employee contributions be matched by a like contribution from each Government agency. Thus, a major part of the retirement cost would become a payroll cost and the retirement fund would be assured of a more constant Government contribution. Also, the general principle of the normal plus interest basis of funding was recommended. Public Law 854 provides for the normal plus interest basis for the retirement fund and for the payroll contribution as recommended by the committee.

The report suggested that the Civil Service Commission should take a more aggressive attitude in conducting its audits to determine whether or not job levels are being inflated by many devious administrative processes, primarily reorganizations. The Civil Service Commisson has agreed between now and January to conduct such inquiries and legislation has been introduced which will provide it on a permanent basis.

Nearly 50 percent of the recommendations made by this report have already been placed into effect, including most of the major recommendations.

Under authority of the Legislative Reorganization Act—Public Law 601, 79th Congress—a subcommittee of the committee held extensive hearings in the European area covering problems of Federal employees overseas. A report was issued, House Report No. 2109. Legislation was drafted and introduced—H. R. 12193 and H. R. 12194—which will improve and provide uniformity in the leave, home leave, health and medical services, educational benefits, and other related benefits for Federal employees serving outside the United States.

POSTAL OPERATIONS

A discerning report covering the reorganization of the postal service was filed as House Report No. 1741. This report analyzes the effect of the reorganization and decentralization of the Post Office Department and made the following recommendations:

(a) That the Postmaster General consider the proposal to organize the 15 regional headquarters under the general direction of the regional operations manager;

(b) That more authority be delegated to the postmasters who should report directly to the regional office;

(c) That the plan of describing the district manager as the supervisor of postmasters would lead to empire building and place 23,000 postmasters in rather unimportant positions and should be reviewed;

(d) That consideration be given to a reduction in the staff assigned to the regional personnel units;

(e) That the industrial engineer organization be centralized in the headquarters at Washington, D. C.;

(f) That the appointment of postmasters of all classes and the authority to establish and discontinue post offices be centralized in the Post Office Department in Washington.

The Subcommittee on Postal Operations also examined into the closing of fourth-class post offices and, by an interim agreement, this program has been substantially slowed down, based upon this investigation. The Postmaster General has reported to the committee he is adopting the following program:

(a) When a vacancy occurs in the position of postmaster in a small office, a specific survey will be made to determine whether the office should be continued and a new appointment made.

(b) As part of the regular annual inspection of post offices, consideration will continue to be given to the question of the need for each office, and such information will be recorded. However, pending the receipt of the report and recommendations of our committee, such offices recommended for closing will be closed only if opposition is not significant or if the closing is accompanied by the contracting of a rural station in the same community.

Hearings were held covering complaints concerning the receipt of unordered merchandise and obscene matter going through the mail. Legislation was introduced and is now Public Law 821 which strengthens the arm of the Postmaster General in enforcing laws prohibiting the sending of obscene material through the mail.

The subcommittee also suggested to the Postmaster General that both second- and third-class mailers should be required to separate their mail by zones in the 110 cities where postal zones are in effect. Some second-class mailers are presently doing this—third-class mailers perform this service in the city where mailed only. This will result in a substantial manpower savings for the postal service and, at the same time, the mailers will need to zone their mail only one time.

MANPOWER UTILIZATION

An extensive study was made of manpower utilization throughout the Federal Government. The program, initiated in the 83d Congress, has been continued and expanded. As a result of this program there are today 35,000 less positions in the Federal Government than were planned by the departments and agencies.

Detailed reports have been filed—House Report No. 1740, February 2, 1956, and House Report No. 2961, August 6, 1956—demonstrating how a better manpower-utilization program has been established throughout the Federal Government and the groundwork laid for a permanent program of this type.

Legislation was drafted and introduced and is now Public Law 801 which will assist in the control of manpower on new projects. It does this by requiring that where any new projects are recommended by the executive branch estimates will include an estimate of the total number of personnel required to carry it out.

The Vice Presidential Situation in the Republican Party

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH R. McCARTHY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement prepared by me.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I have long felt that I should publicly express regret for having supported Harold Stassen in the 1948 presidential campaign. Stassen's unsavory attempt to dump Vice President NIXON is only the last in a long series of actions that, in my opinion, qualify Stassen as one of the most contemptible politicians of our era. His recent career has been such that I have had to oppose Stassen at nearly every turn since 1952, but the NIXON episode is final proof that anyone who ever thought well of Stassen was sadly deluded.

I call Stassen's attack on NIXON unsavory, not because he is opposing a man who I happen to think has done a good job; but because the attack obviously has the single purpose of promoting Harold Stassen's personal political fortunes—whatever may be the cost to the Republican Party and to the Nation. Harold Stassen is obsessed by an overpowering ambition to become President. As for his methods—anything goes that promises to place Stassen's name in the limelight.

STASSEN'S SECRET POLL

Take, for example, the so-called secret poll that, according to Stassen, showed that the Republican ticket would run 6 percent stronger with Gov. Christian Herter, of Massachusetts, as the vice presidential candidate than with NIXON. It is impossible to believe that Stassen was telling the truth about this poll. Whether the poll was never taken, or Stassen lied about the results of it, I do not know. But it is inconceivable that Governor Herter, whom a vast majority of Americans had never heard of, would have run ahead of a man who is known by all Americans and well-liked by most of them. Other polls bear out this conclusion. For example, a Roper poll, taken about the time of Stassen's alleged poll, asked the question: "If Eisenhower decides not to run, whom would you like to see as the Republican presidential candidate?" NIXON was selected by 12 percent of those who indicated a choice; Herter by barely 1 percent.

A REPUTATION FOR UNTRUTHFULNESS

There were other reasons that prompted Washington observers to conclude that Stassen's poll was a phony. Stassen had been known to falsify the facts before. He falsified the facts, both in his official reports to Congress and in his testimony before a Senate committee, in an effort to cover up the fact that the United States was permitting its allies to ship strategic war materials to Communist nations. I quote from the Senate investigations committee's official report on East-West trade (p. 46):

"The Battle Act Administrator, Mr. Stassen, in 1954 misstated the facts in his Fifth Battle Act Report, when he reported: 'Minerals and metals of basic importance to the Soviet military power, such as aluminum, copper, nickel, molybdenum, cobalt, magnesium, tungsten, and titanium remain on the embargo list.' In this and other portions of the Fifth Battle Act Report, Mr. Stassen misrepresented facts, which thus misled the Congress and the American people. Moreover, when he testified before this subcommittee, Mr. Stassen appeared to be an arrogant, evasive, and uncandid witness. The subcommittee feels that Mr. Stassen is to be severely criticized for his conduct in this matter."

It is no wonder, in the light of his record, that the motives for Stassen's attack on NIXON have been suspect. Moreover, Stassen's pose of martyrdom, in the face of almost universal criticism of his actions, fools no one. Those who know Harold Stassen know that he has never been a martyr to any "cause" except his own.

STASSEN'S REAL MOTIVATIONS

What, then, does Stassen hope to gain for himself? For one thing, Stassen believes that if he should succeed in dumping NIXON, there is a good possibility that the vice presidential nomination will be his. He knows that the leftwing of the Republican Party wants desperately to get rid of NIXON, and he believes that if NIXON is dumped, the triumphant leftwingers will be in a mood to reward the man who led the dumping campaign. The fact that the Herter-for-Vice-President campaign is, in reality, a Stassen-for-Vice-President campaign is amply demonstrated in the following news item. Referring to the Herter headquarters set up by Stassen, a Washington newspaper reported: "Heading up the volunteer crew at the Ike and Chris headquarters is H. Brooks Baker * * * who also serves as chairman of Young Americans for Eisenhower First, and Stassen Second."

(I should add, in case there are any doubts about it, that this organization was set up several months ago, under Stassen's auspices, to drum up support for making Stassen the vice presidential candidate.)

Actually, however, Stassen is not placing all of his bets on getting the vice presidential nomination this year. He is probably playing for much higher stakes. Stassen knows that at the present time there is no heir apparent to President Eisenhower as the leader of the leftwing of the GOP. There are many who aspire to that title besides Stassen—Sherman Adams, Milton Eisenhower, Tom Dewey, Paul Hoffman, to name a few. But none has yet definitely emerged as the man who will be the leftwing's leader when President Eisenhower leaves office. Stassen believes that his attack on NIXON will give him a large head start over his rivals. Stassen believes, moreover, that the leftwingers will control the Republican Party in the future, and that in 1960 or in 1964, they will be disposed to make the hero of the anti-NIXON campaign the GOP presidential candidate. Stassen figures there is no better way to ingratiate himself with the leftwingers than to lead a fight against NIXON, a man whom the leftwingers fear and dislike. His chances will be especially good, Stassen believes, if an Eisenhower-NIXON ticket should be defeated in November. In that event, the leftwingers will place the blame for a Republican defeat on NIXON, and Stassen will be hailed as the man who called the turn, and thus the man who should be nominated for President in 1960.

These, I firmly believe, are Harold Stassen's real motivations. It is likely, however, that Stassen will fall victim to his own overpowering ambition. I think that the Republican Party and the American people will reward his dump NIXON efforts by dumping Stassen himself into political oblivion, which is where he has belonged for some time.

A Report to the People by Hon. Chet Holifield, of California

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. CHET HOLIFIELD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, it is customary at the close of a Congress for Members to report to the people back home. I have one of the largest constituencies in the country and, I may say, one of the most informed.

Among the people of my district—the 19th District of the great State of California—there is a broad base of liberalism and understanding and good will. These qualities are strong foundations of our democracy, which most of us recognize whether we are Democrats or Republicans.

In the seven Congresses, from 1943 to date, in which I have served continuously as Representative of the 19th District of California, I have learned a great deal about the intricacies of the legislative process.

As a charter member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and chairman of its Legislative Authorization Subcommittee, as a member of the House Committee on Government Operations, and chairman of its Military Operations Subcommittee, and as a member of the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, it has been my privilege and opportunity to sponsor important legislation and to become intimately acquainted with a wide range of Government affairs.

To this I may add the additional honor conferred on me by you, Mr. Speaker, of serving as a member of the Hoover Commission. In this capacity, as you may know, I supported constructive measures for economy and efficiency in government, but I opposed with all the power at my command any efforts to cut down essential services or to jeopardize governmental programs for the welfare of homeowners, consumers, small business, veterans, working people, small farmers, and other groups important to the Nation's economy.

In each Congress many thousands of bills are introduced. The hard-working committees of the Congress can consider only a few hundred of them. Among those that finally survive to get consideration on the floor of the House, some may be voted down, others may die in the Senate. Those that pass both Houses may be vetoed by the President.

Our system of government is one of checks and balances against unwise legislation. Sometimes, however, good legislation gets blocked along with the bad. Therefore, it is difficult, in the final analysis, to measure congressional achievement simply by the number of bills passed or the legislative votes cast under parliamentary procedures.

This I can say sincerely. I vote my convictions based on the broad and enduring principles of our democracy. The great majority of people in my district understand and endorse these principles.

Now for a brief summary of the successes and failures of the 84th Congress, which has just come to a close.

In many ways this has been one of the most hard-working and constructive Congresses. In other ways it failed to pass important legislation, either because of party differences that could not be overcome, or because the President has been too far removed from the daily scene to give sure and vigorous direction to his own legislative program.

While it is not my purpose here to dwell on the party positions on each individual measure, I believe the record will show that the Democratic Party has been a responsible and constructive party. In fact, it has been more responsive to the President's legislative program in many instances than has the President's own party, the Republicans.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social security now is an accepted feature of American life. Hardly more than 20 years ago, under the guiding hand of Franklin D. Roosevelt, social security became part of the law of the land. In the following years the legislation has been improved by various amendments.

It has been my constant endeavor in the years I have served in this House, to improve the social-security program by working for expanded coverage, increased benefit payments, and other valuable measures.

In this Congress I was happy to vote for an amendment to the Social Security Act which provides that benefits for women will begin at age 62 and to disabled persons at age 50. Previously benefits for both could not begin until age 65. Under this new law, 30,700 disabled persons in California will be eligible immediately for benefits. Reduction of the retirement age for women will enable 15,000 additional women to be eligible immediately for retirement benefits and an additional 64,000 women for the reduced benefits available for those who retire earlier.

The law also extends coverage to lawyers, dentists and other professionals except doctors, and to certain farmers. Aid grants to the States are increased for the needy, blind, and dependent children.

VETERAN' AND SERVICEMEN'S LEGISLATION

Of the 22 million veterans in civilian life, almost 5 million served during the Korean conflict. The Veterans' Administration which serves the veterans' needs, is one of the largest and most important agencies of the Federal Government. A great deal of legislation concerns the activities of this agency.

During the 84th Congress I voted for bills to provide educational assistance to children of servicemen who died in the line of duty during the Korean and past wars; extending educational benefits to veterans, extending the veterans' home-loan program and various other measures which were enacted into law. I voted also to increase benefits and disability payments to veterans.

Legislation which I introduced was accepted in an omnibus amendment bill which restored to a veteran his original housing privileges, where his property was condemned for public use, such as freeway rights-of-way or was destroyed by flood or other natural causes. My legislation also extended the GI home financing privilege from July 1957 to January 1965, to World War II veterans.

Various laws were passed to help servicemen, including the placing of military personnel under social security and increasing benefit payments to survivors of servicemen and veterans; provision for medical care of dependents of members of the Armed Forces; and increased pay of 6-month trainees under the Reserve Act from $50 to $78 a month.

INCREASE IN MINIMUM WAGE

Apart from assistance to Federal employees including those in the postal service, the most important labor legislation passed by the present Congress was a bill to increase the minimum wage from 75 cents an hour to $1 an hour.

The Eisenhower administration tried to limit the amount to 90 cents an hour. The Democratic Congress, however, passed a bill at the $1 level and it became law.

This wage applies to low-paid workers who produce goods which are shipped in interstate commerce.

Our relatively high wage levels in California make such legislation of great interest to our State; the economic advantage it brings generally is obvious. The light manufacturing industry of our State must compete with the low wages of the States in the South. We prefer such competition to take place on a level which guarantees that every American worker will at least have the minimum necessities.

WATER AND FLOOD CONTROL

The Eisenhower administration does not favor large Federal power projects unless the private utilities can control the revenue-producing features, mainly the output of electricity from the water falling over large dams.

Two projects sponsored by the Republican administration, namely, the Upper Colorado River Basin storage project and the so-called Fryingpan-Arkansas project, would threaten the southern California water supply from the Colorado River. Consequently, I opposed those projects.

Federal flood-control appropriations, which I supported in the Congress, will bring several million dollars' worth of assistance to Los Angeles basin flood-control projects.

SMALL BUSINESS

Many small businesses are closing their doors. Since 1953 small-business failures have increased 21 percent. Tight money and difficulties in getting Government loans are primary causes. A Small Business Administration was established ostensibly to grant such loans and its revolving fund was increased to a total of $175 million.

However, I am advised that since 1953 some 300,000 individuals and companies have applied for small-business loans, and of this number, only 7,000 have received favorable action.

The Small Business Administration is only a shadow agency because it does not have any real support by the Eisenhower administration.

CLASSROOM NEEDS

Our achievements in social security and highway improvement were not matched in the case of legislation to aid education. A bill authorizing $1.6 billion in Federal aid to States to build more classrooms over a 4-year program failed to pass the House by a small margin of votes.

The State of California, which has about 3 million children aged 5 to 17, would have received an annual allotment of more than $32 million, or about $130 million from this program.

If approved, this legislation would have helped greatly to relieve serious shortages of classrooms. The funds were to be allocated to the States on the basis of school-age population. The States would have been assured, however, that there would be no Federal Government interference with local school systems.

In this case, I am convinced the President could have obtained passage of the legislation, if the White House had taken a firm stand and had exercised positive leadership over the Republicans in Congress. Many of these Republicans, after maneuvering hamstrung the legislation by supporting the Powell amendment, which would have insured the defeat of the bill by raising national issues, turned around and voted against the bill when the Powell amendment was attached to the bill.

The Congress did succeed however in passing a law which authorized $378 million in Federal aid for school construction, maintenance, and operating costs in areas where Federal activities have caused the school-age population to be expanded. This legislation dates back to 1939, when defense and—later—war industries threw heavy additional burdens on many communities in educating children. Last year California received about $15 million under this program and will receive slightly more under the new rate of Federal assistance.

BETTER HIGHWAYS

One of the outstanding achievements of this Congress was the enactment of the $33.4 billion highway-construction program for a 13-year period. This law includes a Federal 90-percent share of the cost of completing a 41,000-mile interstate highway system and increased regular aid for State highways through 1959. This will furnish $367,500,000 of Federal moneys for California roads.

The financing for this huge highway program which will help to modernize America's highways and add greatly to the safety and convenience of motoring, is to be financed by increased excise taxes on motor fuels, trucks, trailers, and tires to yield $14.8 billion in the next 16 years. The Republican administration originally had proposed a different financing scheme which would have involved bond issues and extra profit to bankers and bondholders without any discernible advantage to the average motorist. The Democratic majority took a different, and, in my opinion, a more equitable approach raising the necessary revenues through taxes on major commercial and other users of the highways. The congressional majority prevailed and the President accepted our views in the matter.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

I voted for appropriations for our national defense and aid to other nations of the free world in order to keep us strong against the threat of communistic aggression. We should not fall into the trap of allowing our military defenses to be weakened, because of the new smile approach of the Soviet leaders. Deeds, which prove their real attitude, should be our standard of judgment, not deceitful smiles and hypocritical words.

The foreign-aid bill that passed the Congress was increased some over last year. Many Members of Congress are concerned that there has been too much emphasis on strictly military appropriations and not enough on economic and technical aid to help underdeveloped countries that seek to improve their standard of living and who, in the absence of such help, are a natural prey for Soviet aims. We should take every wise and prudent step that is possible to establish world peace.

TAXES

No tax legislation was passed to help the average family of moderate income. Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey succeeded in forcing through the Congress the so-called rich man's tax bill which gives 73 percent of long run tax relief to corporations and only 9 percent to people with incomes of $5,000. I voted against this bill. The facts concerning this unfair tax legislation revealed that 80 percent of the American taxpayers received only 9 percent of the reductions in this Republican tax bill.

The Democratic Members of Congress, including myself, voted to enact a tax bill giving an across-the-board $20 tax reduction credit to each and every taxpayer. Republican opposition defeated this legislation. Today our national debt is at an alltime high, and interest rates on this debt have been increased for the benefit of the money lenders.

CIVIL RIGHTS

Civil rights legislation was not enacted by the Congress, although action was taken in the House of Representatives, which I supported. The purpose of this legislation was to afford greater protection to personal liberties and voting rights of all citizens regardless of race, color, or creed.

Civil rights, unfortunately, represent a neglected field. The administration has made only perfunctory supporting gestures, sectional differences in the Congress make it an extremely difficult area of legislation.

As always, I shall continue to fight for the constitutional rights of every American citizen and for full opportunity to develop and use their talents according to the American heritage of freedom.

NATURAL GAS PRICE RAISE BILL

There was considerable debate in the Congress concerning the natural gas bill and the influence of lobbyists in attempting to get this legislation enacted. I voted against the bill because it would have removed Federal regulation of the price of gas at the wellhead which is shipped in interstate commerce, and would have raised the price of gas to consumers.

Notwithstanding a strong vote against the bill, it was passed by the House and Senate, but later vetoed by the President on the grounds that improper lobbying influence had been used. The President indicated that he favored the legislation otherwise.

Had this bill become law, it would have cost every user of natural gas in California $1 more per month.

POST OFFICE LEGISLATION

As a member of the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, I assisted in the enactment of legislation which brought better pay to post-office employees, both in office and supervisory positions and in the postal field service. Increased pay and opportunities for advancement were provided, and also payment of time and a half for overtime and holiday work for some grades, and compensatory time for other grades. A 10-percent bonus is allowed for night work.

However, I voted against Republican-sponsored legislation to increase the cost of sending first-class letters from 3 cents to 4 cents and airmail letters from 6 cents to 7 cents. A majority of the Republican Members and a few Democratic Members passed this bill in the House; it failed in the Senate.

The proposed increase was intended to fasten on the ordinary sender of first-class letters, the burden of the present subsidy which the Government gives to magazines, books, catalogs, and newspapers. I shall continue to oppose such unfair legislation.

BETTER HOUSING

Homeowners, homeseekers, and people who now live in slum areas, will benefit from the housing legislation of the 84th Congress. Needless to say, as a long-time supporter of improved Federal housing legislation, I voted for the housing bill, although some of its desirable amendments were defeated.

The housing bill will provide another $3 billion of mortgage insurance authority and will extend the VA home-loan program for another year.

Loans to finance repairs can be made over 5-year periods instead of the present 3-year maximum. This will allow smaller monthly payments. It has been estimated that 1 million more American families will improve their homes because of this legislation. The program extended to September 30, 1959, would allow the Federal Housing Administration Commissioner to waive requirement of 6 months occupancy before an owner can qualify for a loan. The housing legislation also would allow the Federal Housing Administration to insure new long-term mortgage loans for persons whose property is damaged by floods, hurricanes or other disaster; authorizes construction of 70,000 units of federally subsidized low-rent housing for low-income groups in 2 years; authorizes Federal loans and capital grants for slum clearance and urban renewal projects to improve blighted areas, makes added provision for housing for military personnel, college students, farmers, and farm labor camps.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

Among the important legislation passed by the 84th Congress in the health and welfare fields are the authorization of $30 million in Federal funds to assist States in providing Salk polio vaccine for needy children and expectant mothers; more effective control of narcotics, including drastic penalties for illicit drug peddlers who sell to children; authorization of $30 million of Federal aid each year for 3 years for the construction of non-Federal research facilities related to various crippling and killing diseases, such as cancer and heart afflictions. I voted for these bills.

BENEFITS FOR FEDERAL WORKERS

One of the disturbing features of our national economy is the fact that the cost of living is at an all-time high. The pay raises granted by Congress last year, amounting to 7.15 percent increases for regular civil-service workers and 8.6 percent for postal workers, certainly were justified.

This year the 84th Congress enacted several laws to improve civil-service employment and liberalized the retirement benefits of Federal workers. Increased benefits upon retirement will amount to 20 to 25 percent under the new legislation. Family survivorship benefits have been increased by as much as 150 percent and all other phases of retirement and survivorship benefits have been made more liberal.

ILO Convention on Forced Labor

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HUBERT H. HUMPHREY
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, I have prepared a short statement concerning the position taken by the United States Government at the recent International Labor Conference in Geneva on the issue of an international convention on forced labor. Senators will remember that I have been concerned with this issue throughout the 2d session of the 84th Congress, and I ask unanimous consent that my statement be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HUBERT H. HUMPHREY ON AN ILO CONVENTION ON FORCED LABOR

Mr. President, I wish to say a few words about the position of the United States Government on the question of an ILO convention on forced labor.

The Senate will remember that I have been somewhat critical of the timid position the United States Government appeared to be taking on this important issue. As a consequence, I introduced Senate Resolution 248, Senate Joint Resolution 117, and Senate Concurrent Resolution 75. The effect of these resolutions would be for the Senate to express its view that the Government of the United States should exercise leadership in the ILO to develop and adopt an international convention which will effectively outlaw forced labor for political and economic purposes.

The United States delegation recently returned from the International Labor Conference which was held in Geneva, Switzerland, from June 6 to June 28. I am pleased to state that the delegation voted in favor of placing on the agenda of the next International Labor Conference in June 1957, the question of forced labor for a second discussion, with a view to a final decision on a convention on the subject. To the extent that a change in policy has been reflected in these actions, I have been considerably encouraged.

The United States delegation at the International Labor Conference introduced an amendment to the text suggested by the International Labor Office, which governments had studied for many months. This amendment would provide that international trade and commerce in goods produced by any forced or compulsory labor should be prohibited.

While many of the delegations at the conference agreed in principle with or expressed sympathetic interest in the United States proposal, they considered that they had not had sufficient opportunity to study the proposal in all of its implications, the governments having been advised of it only a week or two before the opening of the conference. It was, therefore, agreed by the conference committee on forced labor that the United States proposal would be given consideration next year.

I quote the following from the report of that committee:

"In view of the fact that the United States proposal was submitted only at this session of the conference, and not earlier, a number of governments felt that more time for study was needed before a decision could be taken on this proposal. The employers' and workers' members indicated that they were not at this stage expressing any views either for or against the United States amendment. The committee decided that the amendment proposed by the United States would be appropriate for consideration by the governments during the ensuing year, along with the conclusions directed toward a convention. The committee, therefore, adopted a proposal that governments should be afforded time for further study of the amendment in connection with the final draft of the convention to be prepared during the year and that the International Labor Office be requested to send the United States amendment to the governments along with the conclusions, on the understanding that governments would consider it and that it would be taken up in connection with the final draft of the convention at the next session of the conference. It was pointed out that since at this session it was at the first discussion stage, no delay need be caused by the action taken by the committee."

This report was approved unanimously by the conference.

As a consequence of the action taken by the 39th International Labor Conference, the United States proposal will be contained in the further documentation prepared by the International Labor Office and distributed to governments prior to the 1956 conference, and will be considered by governments in connection with their preparations for that conference. It will be taken up again in June 1957.

There is, of course, no way of telling at this time what attitudes governments will take toward the numerous amendments which were introduced, including that of the United States Government and the text of a convention which will finally emerge. Governments will wish to study all these amendments with great care during the ensuing year. I am encouraged, however, by this more constructive approach of the United States Government on the matter of an ILO Convention relating to forced labor, and I wish to commend it for its position.

A New Look in Government Employment

OF
HON. TOM MURRAY
OF TENNESSEE
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, with the close of the 84th Congress, I believe it is time to take stock of the many changes and improvements that have been made during the past few years in our Federal civil service. The unanimous approval by Congress, in the closing days of this session, of greatly liberalized retirement benefits, is a fitting climax to a long series of legislative actions granting employee benefits and strengthening the merit system in the Government.

As often is the case, the full value of these changes and improvements may not be realized and appreciated because of the many legislative and administrative actions that have brought them about over a period of time. The true picture is presented only by noting the sum total of the advances made in recent years. Never in our history has so short a span of time marked such great strides for Federal employees as those taken in the past half decade.

Now, this did not just happen. It has taken long, hard, and constant work by the Congress and its committees that are charged with civil-service responsibility. I believe it is now time to spread on the record the major changes and improvements that have brought us to a firm and effective basis for personnel management in the Government and an immeasurably more attractive career service for Federal employees.

POSTWAR ADJUSTMENT

As a ready gage to our progress, we need only recall the years after World War II. The aftermath of that war, the innumerable problems of Government seeking a return to normalcy after tremendous expansion, had not yet been cleared up when the Korean conflict brought further disruption. Government payrolls were topheavy with emergency workers. Countless temporary and indefinite employees had no protection against sudden dismissal, regardless of efficiency and loyal service. There was no strong career system of Government employment. Morale of workers was at a low ebb, and its state was matched by the public regard for its servants.

The severe dislocations of those war emergencies had an equally adverse effect on efficiency and economy throughout the Government. Under the pressures and demands of critical emergencies and readjustments that followed, officials were unable to devote adequate time and attention to maintaining a strong civil service, must less to improvements needed to keep pace with modern practices and the growing complexity of the Government. The results were almost chaotic. Frankly, after World War II we faced a seemingly hopeless task. It is with some sense of gratification, therefore, that this record is presented as a review of the steps which have brought order out of chaos.

INCREASED SALARIES

High on the list of employee interests, of course, is the matter of salaries. The proper levels of salaries and the relationships of positions in our mammoth Government has no counterpart in private industry. The problem is not only of size, but of limitless complexity. It is a real task to keep abreast of the needs of the Government and its employees, let alone make up ground lost in periods of national emergency.

Consideration of the Government's salary and position classification structure occupied a major share of the time of your Post Office and Civil Service Committee in the first session of the 84th Congress. This Congress brought the salaries of our half million postal employees and of all other Federal employees into line with those in private industry and with increased costs of living due to the great expansion in the national economy.

POSTAL EMPLOYEES SALARY INCREASES

The Postal Field Service Compensation Act of 1955 is a great milestone in postal activities. This law gave postal field service employees an average salary increase in excess of 8 percent. More important, it established for the first time a salary structure with the proper relationship between the various positions in the postal service based on the actual level of duties and responsibilities. It replaced an archaic jumble of laws and special provisions that was incomprehensible to any but experts—an uncoordinated hodgepodge that gave only dissatisfaction to employees and management alike.

Other Federal employees also were given generous salary increases and the laws relating to their compensation and position classification were clarified and brought up to date by the Federal Employees Salary Increase Act of 1955. Unnecessary and unrealistic variances in treatment of groups and classes of employees were eliminated. These employees now are in a position to know what they can count on in the way of salaries, working conditions, retention rights, and other benefits.

INCREASED ANNUITIES FOR RETIRED EMPLOYEES

Retirement benefits are one of the key factors in building and maintaining a strong and efficient personnel program, whether in Government or private industry. Our civil service retirement plan, established in 1920, had had no major revision since 1948 until the present Congress. Piecemeal legislation over the years had had a number of benefits without making provision for adequate financing. Moreover, retirement benefits had become far out of balance as between retired employees and present employees. Three liberal increases were granted retired employees in the past 8 years, while no major change had been made in the basic retirement law as it affected active employees.

IMPROVED CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT

This situation was corrected by Public Law 854, 84th Congress, giving $340 million in added retirement benefits to Federal employees. The Government will bear $295 million of the cost.

The average annuity benefit is increased by 25 percent, and this increase extends to annuities of the surviving spouses. The average increase in annuities of surviving children is 150 percent. A retiring employee may elect to provide survivor benefits after only 5 years of service, instead of 15 years under the previous law.

An annuity is provided in case of involuntary separation after age 50 with 20 years of service. The rights to an annuity on involuntary separation at any age with 25 years' service, and to optional retirement at age 55 after 30 years of service, are continued.

When an employee retires before reaching 60, the reduction in his annuity will be about one-half of the reduction he previously had to take. If he dies, his widow will receive an immediate annuity regardless of whether there are surviving children, and there will no longer be any reduction in the widow's annuity if she is under age 60.

An employee retired for disability will have a guaranteed minimum annuity of 40 percent of his average salary or the annuity he would have earned had he worked until age 60, whichever is the lesser.

An annuitant reemployed because of special skill or ability, who works one full year before final separation, will have his original annuity plus an annuity based on the reemployed service.

These are just the major new benefits of this legislation, which completely rewrites the civil-service retirement law in clear and readily understood terms. A great deal of surplus language and almost incomprehensible provisions of past piecemeal legislation are eliminated.

BETTER FINANCING OF RETIREMENT FUND

Although this legislation greatly liberalizes retirement benefits, in the judgment of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee one of its most important results is the establishment, for the first time, of a sound method of financing the civil-service retirement fund. Beginning in 1952, with the creation of a Committee on Retirement Policy for Federal Personnel under Public Law 555, 82d Congress, our committee has made an exhaustive study of the financing of the fund. This has become an increasingly serious problem—so much so that failure to take immediate action to strengthen the financing might have threatened the entire retirement structure. The deficit in the fund had grown to astronomical proportions, reaching $13.5 billion a year ago. Potential obligations of the fund so far exceeded its assets as to cast grave doubt on any guaranty that present and future employees could be assured of the retirement benefits for which they pay and which, in effect, the Government has underwritten as at least a moral obligation.

The committee recommendations for the financing of our retirement system to insure its soundness were printed in House Report No. 1844, 84th Congress. The three essential principles are written into Public Law 854. First of all, employees' contributions to the fund must be on a par with the benefits they receive. Second, the Government must contribute equally with the employees as a part of its payroll cost, to be paid into the fund by each department and agency. Third, the Congress should appropriate to the fund each year an additional amount, over and above payroll contributions by the departments and agencies, to cover interest on the past deficit and any further cost of the fund not met by employee contributions and matching contributions by the departments and agencies. This method of financing, known as the normal cost plus interest method, is approved by retirement and actuarial authorities. It will maintain the retirement system on a sound financial basis and prevent further increase in the deficit.

IMPROVED CAREER OPPORTUNITIES

The current shortage of qualified scientific, professional, and technical personnel highlights the unsatisfactory conditions of Federal employment that stem from the war periods and the readjustments that followed. There is little doubt that past lack of career opportunity laid the foundation for loss of potentially valuable workers today.

Just a few years ago, for example, only 65 percent of all Federal employees could regard their positions as permanent in nature. Now, more than 90 percent are in career-type appointments. The true career civil service benefits both employees and the Government. Uncertainty of tenure is removed, and each individual can devote his best efforts to the service.

The establishment of a strong career system of employment was worked out in cooperation between the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and the Civil Service Commission. The basic principles of the program are set forth in the statement of managers on the part of the House on the conference agreement that became Public Law 763, 83d Congress. This legislation also places a necessary ceiling on the total number of permanent Federal employees and provides guidance for maintaining a proper level of permanent Federal employment in case of emergency expansion in the future and return to normal operations thereafter.

EXTENSION OF MERIT SYSTEM

Some 200,000 employees were made eligible for career appointments by Public Law 380, 84th Congress, and an additional large number of temporary but long-time postal employees were given similar opportunity by Public Law 836, 84th Congress.

INCREASED NUMBER OF SCIENTIFIC POSITIONS

In a further step to relieve the present shortage of scientific, professional, and administrative personnel, your committee reported, and the House in its wisdom approved H. R. 11040 in the present Congress, to create a total of 685 such positions. The other body did not act on this bill, but included a lesser number of these positions in legislation (H. R. 7619) to provide needed salary adjustments for Cabinet members and other top executives of the Government along with an increase from $14,800 to $16,000 in the maximum Classification Act salary, which passed the House last year. It is believed that the Congress will want to review the requirements for additional scientific, professional, and high administrative positions early in the next Congress. Such additional positions were urgently requested in the presentations made to our committee by officials charged with the responsibility for maintaining a national defense capable of meeting the threat of any potential enemy.

REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

The House Post Office and Civil Service Committee has conducted a penetrating study of the Civil Service Commission in the present Congress. Its findings and recommendations are printed in House Report No. 1844, 84th Congress. This study was directed at methods of strengthening the Commission and thereby enabling it to assume and exercise effective leadership in the field of personnel management in the Government.

As noted previously, the committee's recommendations in this report with respect to retirement financing are now part of Public Law 854. Likewise, its recommendation in the same report for top-level reorganization of the Civil Service Commission is part of Public Law 854. This law provides for 6-year, staggered terms for the Civil Service Commissioners, for the appointment of a Vice Chairman as well as a Chairman of the Commission, and for a line of succession to the duties and responsibilities of the Chairman through the Vice Chairman and the third member of the Commission. This will greatly strengthen the Commission, in both internal operations and dealings with other parts of the Government. It gives assurance of continuity of top-level leadership for the Commission—a must if this central personnel agency of the Government is to pull its weight and carry out the responsibility vested in it by Congress.

EMPLOYEE GROUP INSURANCE

Another weakness that had developed over the years with respect to the Federal civil service was the lack of a Government-sponsored insurance program for its employees. Private industry for many years has taken the lead in such programs, often contributing a major part or all of the cost, and it has become a desirable and accepted part of the fringe benefits of employees throughout the United States. The Congress, working in cooperation with the Civil Service Commission, established a new low-cost group life insurance program for civilian employees of the Government on a voluntary participation basis, providing coverage for term life in amounts equal to each employee's salary raised to the next higher $1,000 level and double indemnity and dismemberment insurance. The cost to each employee is not to exceed 25 cents biweekly for each $1,000 and the Government contributes 12½ cents. Certain inequities and gaps in this legislation were corrected in the present Congress, extending the coverage to well over 130,000 employees not previously covered and allowing continued coverage in case of an employee who is disabled and receives disability benefits under the Federal Employees' Compensation Act. These provisions bring the Government up to date and place its employees on a par with those in private industry in the matter of insurance benefits.

SALARIES SAVED IF JOB DOWNGRADED

The repeated fluctuations in employment levels and requirements of the Government for many years have created severe hardship and inequities because of backlogs in the classification of positions. The Classification Act of 1949 makes the level of every classified position subject to review by the Civil Service Commission. The Commission fell far behind in its tremendous classification audit workload. Then, as positions were reviewed many were placed at lower levels with consequent reduction in salaries of incumbents through no fault of their own. This condition became an extremely serious morale problem, since the employees quite justifiably felt that they had no protection whatever from downgradings and loss of salary which might prevent them from taking care of obligations they had assumed on the basis of the salaries of their positions before downgrading. The committee study of this situation demonstrated the need for legislative action to correct it, which was confirmed by the Comptroller General of the United States. Corrective action is authorized by Public Law 594, 84th Congress. This law provides that an employee will suffer no loss in salary if his position is placed at a lower grade level. It does not, of course, save an employee's salary if he is demoted for cause.

During the past two Congresses a large number of bills have been introduced to provide various fringe benefits for Federal employees, that is, specific types of benefits which do not fall within the ambit of major legislation previously discussed. The committee made a thorough study of all of these proposals, and those found desirable were incorporated in a single general Fringe Benefits Act. This act for the first time provided for an employees' uniform allowance of $100 a year. This allowance was extended by the 84th Congress to apply on an equitable basis to all employees required to wear uniforms in the performance of official duties. In addition, it established a greatly broadened and far more attractive incentive-awards program for Federal employees which already has proved its worth through tremendous increases in employee participation in suggestion programs and millions of dollars of savings to the Government.

BETTER OVERTIME PAY

The Postal Field Service Compensation Act of 1955, the Federal Employees Salary Increase Act of 1955, and the Fringe Benefits Act of 1954 also provided new and liberalized systems of premium compensation for overtime, night, and holiday work for Federal employees so that all such employees now are on a generally uniform basis for such work.

FREE BONDS

Each Federal employee in a position requiring bonding was required, until the present Congress, to pay the premium of his own bond, even though it was primarily for the protection of the Government. The same was true of any employee who must obtain a notary-public commission for use in his official duties. In effect, therefore, the salary of such an employee was reduced by the amount of his bond premium or the cost of the notary commission, as the case might be, in comparison to the salaries of other employees performing work at the same level of responsibility. The discriminatory effect of this situation long has been recognized, but previous efforts to obtain corrective legislation have been unsuccessful. The 84th Congress approved Public Law 323, authorizing the Government to purchase these bonds at no expense to the employees, and Public Law 681, authorizing an allowance to cover the cost of a notarial commission obtained for official purposes. The first report of the Secretary of the Treasury on operations under the bonding law was received on the last day of this session, and shows that the new system not only has given a definite boost to the morale of the employees concerned but, also, will accomplish real savings for the Government.

THE NEW LOOK IN GOVERNMENT EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Speaker, I can probably best summarize this statement by saying that the condition of Federal employment today is entirely different from that of a decade ago. Today's employee has security in his job. He has had salary increases amounting to over 60 percent. His retirement annuity has been directly increased by over 25 percent with new and much more liberal provisions for his surviving widow and children. The actual increases are much more than this when considered in connection with the salary increases. If he dies his beneficiaries receive a year's salary as a result of the low cost life insurance which has been provided. He has opportunity for both honorary and monetary awards up to $25,000 for outstanding service or improvements in Government operations. He has protection against reduction in his salary in cases where his position has been downgraded as a result of reclassification. He has better opportunity for recognition of his qualifications and effort through improved classification systems and promotion programs. He has reemployment and priority placement rights in cases where he is separated due to reduction in force in his agency. He has greatly improved appeals rights through betterments in the appeals procedure and system. Compensation for overtime, Sunday, and holiday work has been greatly increased and standardized. His annual and sick leave privileges have been extended and improved. If he is required to wear a uniform this uniform is now furnished by way of an allowance. If his duty requires that he be bonded he no longer is required to furnish his own bond. In cases where a notary's commission is required authority has been granted to the department and agency to defray the expenses formerly paid by the employee.

In my judgment, in no other employment, whether it be private or governmental, does the employee have as many benefits as he does in the Federal Government. These benefits are in the main the result of recommendations made to the executive branch and legislation approved by this committee over the past few years.

Harold McGrath

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HERBERT H. LEHMAN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement by me on the retirement of Harold McGrath, Superintendent of the Radio-Television Gallery in the Capitol.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Within a few days Mr. Harold McGrath, Superintendent of the Radio-Television Gallery, will retire and return to his home in Walla Walla, Wash. Mr. McGrath has served in his present position since February 1940. Prior to that time he was Secretary to Senator Lewis B. Schwellenbach, of Washington State.

During the incumbency of Mr. McGrath as Superintendent of the Radio-Television Gallery the service has been tremendously expanded and the number of accredited members has increased more than tenfold.

I am sure that I reflect the sentiments of all my colleagues in the Senate when I say that Mr. McGrath will be greatly missed.

During the 7 years that I have served in the Senate I have frequently come into contact with Mr. McGrath. I found him not only uniformly conscientious and courteous but invariably friendly and cooperative. Mrs. Lehman has always shared my regard and affection for Mr. McGrath. I also had the pleasure of knowing Mrs. McGrath. I have rarely seen devotion equal to that shown by Mr. McGrath toward his wife, who passed away after a long illness less than a year ago.

I will always remember Mr. McGrath for his friendliness, his patience, and his understanding of the needs of the Members of the Senate. I wish Mr. McGrath many more years of good health, contentment, and service, and I hope that he will frequently visit his many friends in Congress.

The Congressional Session in Review

OF
HON. BURR P. HARRISON OF VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the 84th Congress has adjourned, and its achievements and shortcomings now are being appraised. The record of the Congress is being evaluated by its Members, and by nonmembers, of all shades of political coloration.

I shall not presume to "rate" the Congress but shall restrict myself to brief mentions of the principal legislative actions.

How much will the activities of the session just concluded cost the taxpayers? A summary placed in the RECORD by Chairman CANNON of the House Appropriations Committee shows that the Congress sent to the White House appropriation bills providing a total of approximately $60,573,000,000 as against about $61,143,000,000 requested by President Eisenhower in his original budget and supplemental estimates. This indicates that Congress shaved $570,000,000 from Mr. Eisenhower's figures on an overall basis.

According to Mr. CANNON'S accompanying statement, "rescissions of prior appropriations included in the several bills aggregate approximately $900 million, bringing the total reduction in spending authority to about $1,470,000,000."

This refers, of course, to the overall total of appropriations. In some of the appropriation bills, Congress voted more money than requested. In the Department of Defense bill, for example, the tabulation shows that the President wanted $34,147,000,000 to run the Armed Forces in the year which began July 1. Congress voted $509,000,000 more than that. This does not mean that the Congress approved every defense expense item and then some. It cut down in some places but increased by $900 million the appropriation for bomber and fighter aircraft and related weapons of the Air Force.

Although Secretary of Defense Wilson insisted he did not want this extra money, and would not use it if he got it, the testimony of high Air Force officers that Russia had been catching up with us rapidly in air developments weighed heavily with members of congressional committees handling the defense appropriations.

It is clear that we shall continue to spend huge amounts for our national safety as the tension and uncertainty in world affairs persist.

Among the costly new items related to defense are expansion of the early-warning radar system which it is hoped would give us a chance of avoiding being crushed by a sneak air attack. This calls for at least $72 million.

The Navy is ready to spend upward of $1,400,000,000 building and modernizing warships. Another supersized aircraft carrier and a cruiser to be powered by atomic energy are scheduled. Many ships are to be adapted to carry atomic weapons.

Expansion of base facilities of the Armed Forces, both at home and overseas, is figured to cost about $2,100,000,000.

It is a grim and depressing thing to contemplate—this tremendous expenditure of our wealth on weapons, countermeasures, and the training and maintenance of personnel to operate the equipment of warfare—but few citizens would contend that we should reduce our defenses sharply and take a chance on the sincerity of occasional Russian smiles.

Our national debt, meanwhile, stands approximately $6,600,000,000 higher than 3 years ago. In 3 successive years, the President has asked and received from Congress temporary increases in the legal limit of the national debt. For 2 years, the request was to raise it from $275 billion to $281 billion. This year, in the light of an apparent budget surplus of approximately $1,700,000,000 as of June 30, Mr. Eisenhower asked for authority to exceed the legal limit by only $3 billion. The discouraging aspect of the debt-reduction problem is that, even if the $1,700,000,000 apparent surplus were credited against the debt, the Federal Government still would be mortgaged to an appreciably higher extent than 3 years ago.

In fiscal year 1956, which ended June 30, we spent approximately $42,100,000,000 on national security, as against about $48,200,000,000 for national defense in fiscal year 1954, when we still were paying big bills attributable to the Korean war.

Sad to relate, economy in nondefense Federal spending has not made progress. The costs of Government, apart from national security, totaled about $19,600,000,000 in fiscal year 1954. In fiscal year 1956, just ended, they amounted to an estimated $24,300,000,000—an increase of about 24 percent.

Although Congress did not give Mr. Eisenhower all the money he asked for foreign aid, it nevertheless made available, including unexpended balances from prior appropriations, more than $4 billion for military, economic and technical aid to foreign countries which we consider friendly, or hope are friendly. That means 4,000 millions of American tax dollars may be sent abroad this fiscal year in the continuing effort to bolster the free world in the contest with international Communist aggression.

As other defense-related items, we might note authorization of substantial additional expenditures on research projects of the Atomic Energy Commission and the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics; renewal, for 2 years, of the President's authority to allocate and fix priorities, and the strengthening of penalties against seditious conspiracy and advocacy of overthrow of the Government.

In the field of international relations, congressional actions included extension for 2 years of Presidential authority to impose export controls; simplification of the customs laws; reemphasis of the position of Congress that Communist China should not be admitted to the United Nations; authorization of loan of naval vessels to West Germany, Brazil, Greece, Portugal, Spain, and friendly Far Eastern nations, and ratification by the Senate of the International Wheat Agreement.

In veterans' and servicemen's legislation, the Congress authorized a special program of educational assistance for the sons and daughters of those who died in service in World War II and the Korean war. Following a study by a special committee headed by Representative PORTER HARDY, of Virginia, a new schedule of benefits for survivors of servicemen was approved, and all military personnel were provided social-security coverage.

A new plan of medical care for dependents of servicemen was voted.

The GI home loan guaranty program for World War II veterans was extended to July 25, 1958, and other actions included an increase from $50 to $78 a month in the pay of the 6-month trainees under the Reserve Act; provision of a lump-sum readjustment payment for reservists released from active duty involuntarily; extension to July 15, 1957, of the payment of pay of servicemen missing or captured in Korea; provision for burial in Arlington National Cemetery of an unknown soldier of the Korean war; and setting up an income-tax credit for retirement income of members of the armed services.

The House voted increases in the service-connected disability pensions of all veterans; the pensions of Spanish-American War widows, and the non-service-connected pensions of World War I veterans, but further congressional action was not had on these bills.

Legislation affecting natural resources included approval, at the request of the President, of a huge dam-and-reservoir project in the West, known as the upper Colorado River storage project, with an estimated initial cost of $760 million and the expectation that the ultimate bill will be much higher.

If the actual appropriations, as needed, follow the authorizations voted, numerous other big dam projects in the West will be built at a cost of many millions. The cost of just one of these many projects could give us a complete program of flood control and soil conservation in this section of Virginia if we concentrated on the smaller, upstream measures instead of the big dams. A total of $1,300,000,000 was authorized for river and harbor improvements and flood and beach-erosion projects of the Army engineers.

One of the most controversial pieces of legislation was a measure to exempt independent producers of natural gas from Federal regulation. It was vetoed by the President.

Although opposed by many, including the State Water Control Board of Virginia, as an unjustified extension of Federal influence over State and community problems, use of Federal funds to assist in construction of sewage-treatment plants was approved—$50 million a year for 5 years.

Congress directed a new survey to determine whether it is practical to harness for power the tremendous tides of the Passamaquoddy region of the Maine-Canada border as a joint project of the United States and Canada.

Probably the most far-reaching pieces of domestic legislation were the Soil Bank Act, the Highway Act, and the social-security amendments.

The first, representing the major farm legislation of the session, is a $1,200,000,000 experiment in reducing the domestic surplus of farm commodities by payments intended to encourage farmers to take a portion of their lands out of production.

The soil bank has two parts—the acreage reserve, in which farmers are paid to underplant their acreage allotments of certain basic crops, leaving part of the land idle, and the conservation reserve, in which the Federal Government will "rent" a portion of the farmer's land, provided he agrees to plant it in trees or other soil-conserving cover and refrain from grazing it or harvesting the growth.

In somewhat varying forms, the soil bank idea was urged by the President, the congressional leaderships of both political parties, and all major farm organizations. The bill which authorized it followed one vetoed by the President, in which high rigid price supports on certain basic farm commodities had been included. The measure eventually signed by Mr. Eisenhower did include fixed feed-grain price supports at 76 percent of parity, and provisions intended to encourage disposal of our agricultural surpluses abroad.

The Highway Act authorizes $33,400,000,000 over a 13-year period for an expanded program of road-building with emphasis on the so-called 40,000-mile National Interstate System of through highways. The present Federal-State cost-sharing programs for other highways also will be continued.

Control of projects in the National Interstate System will be left to the State highway authorities, subject to Federal approval of route layouts, width of right-of-way, steepness of grade, materials to be used, and so forth. This differs from the original proposal of Mr. Eisenhower, which would have set up a special Federal corporation, with authority to condemn land and sell bonds to pay for the work, which bonds were not to be counted as part of the public debt, although sold by an agency of Uncle Sam.

To help pay for the road-building, it was deemed necessary to raise the Federal excise taxes on motor fuels, tires, trucks and trailers.

The social security changes provide for starting benefits to women at 62—although at a somewhat reduced rate than if they wait until 65—and to totally and permanently disabled persons at 50. Social security coverage is extended to lawyers, dentists, and virtually all other self-employed persons except physicians and osteopaths.

The Congress continued FHA housing loan insurance, authorized some more Government-built housing in the cities for subsidized rental; provided FHA loans for repair of homes damaged by floods and other major disasters; set up a flood insurance program; extended the Salk polio vaccine distribution to needy families for a year; extended and broadened the school lunch program; voted use of $7,500,000 a year for 5 years to help provide library services for rural areas; set up a training program to relieve the nurse shortage; authorized expanded research in crippling and killing diseases and chronic illnesses; tightened penalties, including provision of a discretionary death penalty, for narcotics peddlers, and extended the vocational rehabilitation program.

It also authorized the FBI to enter kidnaping cases when the victim has not been recovered in 24 hours; liberalized civil service retirement benefits; adopted certain Hoover Commission recommendations on budget and accounting procedures; established "In God We Trust" as the official motto of the United States; authorized research in atomic-powered merchant vessels; exempted farmers from the Federal gas and oil taxes on fuel and lubricants used off the highways; liberalized certain farm loan programs; again increased borrowing authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation and expanded the watershed protection program.

Many of the legislative enactments carried out recommendations of President Eisenhower. Others originated within the Congress. Some of the proposals of President Eisenhower failed of approval, among them the so-called civil rights bill, relaxation of immigration restrictions, statehood for Hawaii, and federally supervised school construction program.

The Record of the 84th Congress on the Administration's Program in the Fields of Labor, Health, Education, and Welfare

OF

HON. H. ALEXANDER SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement by me on the record of the 84th Congress on the administration's program in the fields of labor, health, education, and welfare.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I should like to review the accomplishments of this Congress in the field of labor and public welfare legislation referred to the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. Unfortunately, the accomplishments are few, in comparison with the program proposed by the President over the past 2 years.

This report clearly indicates to what extent this Congress has supported the Eisenhower program and to what extent it has not.

Before presenting this analysis, I wish to emphasize an important development in the committee itself during the 84th Congress, and especially the 2d session. Senator HILL and I as the respective ranking members of the committee have directed the Democratic and Republican staff members of the committee to work together as much as possible on legislation which both parties were supporting. Partially as a result of this cooperation such legislation that has been agreed upon has been reported by practically unanimous votes of the committee and has in nearly all cases received prompt action on the floor of the Senate. It is to be regretted that we could not handle the full program of the administration by this procedure. I refer especially to the committee's failure to consider and act upon the school-construction bill.

At the outset I want to make it clear that the order in which I discuss particular items does not necessarily reflect the importance of each one.

I. IN THE FIELD OF LABOR

The President, in his state of the Union messages of 1955 and 1956, recommended a number of labor measures which he deemed vital to the welfare of the American people and especially to the workers. Three of the most important items recommended were: Improvements in the Fair Labor Standards Act; legislation to improve the safety of workers on their jobs; and a proposal to protect the beneficiaries of union health and welfare plans. In addition, there is the continuing problem of improving the Taft-Hartley Act.

The President's 1956 state of the Union message said "legislation to improve the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Act is still needed." This is one area of labor legislation in which Congress has acted. S. 2280, cosponsored by 23 Senators from both sides of the aisle was enacted after hearings on a number of bills sponsored separately by leading Senators from both parties. This enactment substantially raised the far too low benefit level and improved other features of the workmen's compensation law applicable to longshoremen and harbor workers throughout the country and to all types of workers located in the District of Columbia. This is a substantial accomplishment which has been long overdue.

Occupational safety

I regret that two very important occupational safety measures which the administration has urged have not been enacted. One measure is designed to improve occupational safety in the Federal Government. The Federal Government as the largest single employer in the United States has a special responsibility in protecting the safety of its own employees. In recognition of this obligation, the President, in his 1956 budget message, stated: "To encourage precautionary safety measures, the administration will propose legislation which will provide, in conformity with the best business practices, that employing agencies shall bear the cost of [workmen's compensation] benefits paid for their employees."

At present, all costs of workmen's compensation for all Federal agencies are charged against one central fund administered by the Department of Labor. It is believed that each agency will become more safety conscious if workmen's compensation costs are charged to each agency rather than to one central fund.

S. 1309 and S. 3582 were introduced in 1955 and 1956, respectively, by myself and the distinguished senior Senators from New Hampshire and Massachusetts, in an effort to accomplish this purpose. No action has been reported on these bills, but hearings have been held on a measure, S. 3517, introduced by the junior Senator from Minnesota and 12 of his colleagues from the other side of the aisle, which would reorganize the safety functions of the Federal Government. The purpose of this bill, to improve the job safety of Federal employees, is the same as that of the administration bills. It does not, however, include the administration's charge-back provision. In his comments on S. 3517, the Secretary of Labor has urged that favorable consideration be given to such a provision as embodied in S. 3582 and to other improvements in the proposal which would make it more effective in accomplishing its purpose. As an example, the bill should be amended to place in the Secretary of Labor, who now is charged with safety responsibilities for Federal employment, rather than in some subordinate official of his Department, the added powers and functions in the area of Federal safety which the bill would provide.

The President called attention to another occupational safety measure this year in both his state of the Union and budget messages. This is a program for grants to the States to aid them in establishing more vigorous and effective occupational safety programs. Such a measure, he stated, is a matter of great importance demanding immediate attention. To carry out this recommendation, S. 1091 has been introduced by the senior Senators from New York, Massachussets, Connecticut, and Minnesota, the junior Senators from Pennsylvania and Ohio, and myself. We consider this measure to be of the greatest importance. More than 2 million industrial accidents occur each year with untold hours of wasted manpower, needless human suffering, and financial loss running into billions of dollars. Over 85 percent of these injuries can be prevented if effective programs are instituted. Yet the present Congress has taken no action on this vital item.

It is tragic, indeed, that such safety measures, designed to protect the workers of the Nation, are passed over.

Temporary insurance benefits to certain workers in the District of Columbia

The wage loss workers suffer during periods of idleness forced upon them through no fault of their own can cause great hardship. This country has recognized this in such income-insurance programs as workmen's compensation, unemployment insurance, and old-age and survivors insurance. Little has been provided, however, to protect the worker against wage losses due to illness and injury that is not work connected. Recognizing the responsibility of the Federal Government for legislation in the District of Columbia, the President's 1956 state of the Union message recommended appropriate legislation, and S. 2753 was introduced, cosponsored by my esteemed colleagues, the senior Senator from New York and the junior Senator from New Jersey. This bill would provide insurance benefits, for a temporary period, to workers in the District of Columbia who suffer loss of income due to nonoccupational disabilities. Several States have adopted laws of this type and it was hoped that the Congress would meet its responsibility for legislation for the District of Columbia and provide this much-needed protection. To date, it has failed to do so, however.

Labor relations legislation

The President has reiterated in his 1955 and 1956 state of the Union messages the recommendation he made in his special labor message in 1954 for amending the Taft-Hartley Act. He stressed particularly amendments dealing with the rights of economic strikers to vote and the need for equalizing the obligation under the act to file disclaimers of Communist affiliation. To date no action has been taken on any such amendments.

A new proposal in the field of labor relations which the President considers of great importance is legislation to protect the beneficiaries of union welfare and benefit plans by adequate disclosure of the financial affairs of such plans. S. 3051, introduced by the distinguished senior Senator from New York and the junior Senator from Colorado at the request of the administration, is designed to accomplish this purpose. The registration and full disclosure required by this bill should act as a strong deterrent to malpractice, mismanagement, and waste of these funds. Another bill, S. 3872, to accomplish much the same purpose has been introduced by the senior Senators from Illinois and Montana, who were joined by the distinguished senior Senator from New York. This latter bill, however, places handling of registration of the plans in the Securities and Exchange Commission whereas the administration believes the Department of Labor is the appropriate agency for this function. Again, the Congress has not acted on this important legislation.

There were two major administration proposals regarding the Federal minimum-wage law. In his 1955 and 1956 state of the Union messages, the President recommended both an increased minimum wage and extended coverage of the law. The first of his recommendations has been enacted into law. The recommendation for extended coverage, however, has not been acted upon, although Secretary Mitchell is prepared to testify and give specific recommendations to Congress on this item. The many millions of workers who are in need of such legislation are thus still without its benefits, and this Congress has again failed to be responsible to the needs of workers of this country.

The President has also requested in his past two state of the Union messages that "legislation be passed to clarify and strengthen the 8-hour laws for the benefit of workers who are subject to Federal wage standards on Federal and federally assisted construction and other public work." To accomplish this purpose, S. 1204 was introduced by the senior Senator from New York, myself, and the junior Senators from New Jersey, Ohio, Colorado, and Connecticut. This bill was intended to revise the three separate 8-hour laws into a single law. It would simplify the provisions, include a 40-hour week—a provision long needed in this particular field—and would extend coverage of this act to comply more fully with the original intention of these various 8-hour laws. Again, as with so many of these proposals, there has been no action taken upon this measure.

Area development

We all know that there are some sectors of our essentially productive and healthy economy in which substantial and persistent unemployment prevail and that these areas need help to revitalize themselves. The President recognized this when he said in his 1956 state of the Union message, "We must help deal with the pockets of chronic unemployment that here and there mar the Nation's general industrial prosperity. Economic changes in recent years have been often so rapid and far-reaching that areas committed to a single local resource or industrial activity have found themselves temporarily deprived of their markets and their livelihood. Such conditions mean severe hardship for thousands of people as the slow process of adaptation to new circumstances goes on. This process can be speeded up * * * improving such communities must, of course, remain the primary responsibility of the people living there and their States. But a soundly conceived Federal partnership program can be of real assistance to them in their efforts."

Early in this session I introduced a bill, S. 2892, embodying what are believed to be essential principles for such legislation. Twenty-two of my distinguished colleagues from this side of the aisle joined me in sponsoring this measure. The principles we have embodied in this legislation were set down by President Eisenhower in his 1956 Economic Report, as follows:

1. Emphasis on lasting improvement rather than temporary relief, in aid of distressed areas but not at the expense of others.

2. Recognition of primary responsibility in the States and local communities.

3. Federal assistance only through appropriate State and local channels, and only as a participant with State and local organizations.

There has been no action in the Senate on this important bill. Hearings have not even been held. The Committee on Labor and Public Welfare has reported out another bill, S. 2663, which was introduced by the senior Senator from Illinois and 7 of his colleagues from the other side of the aisle. A similar bill has been reported in the House.

Minority members of the committee worked closely with the majority members on S. 2663 in an effort to improve its provisions. When S. 2663 was reported from committee, it was with two exceptions a fairly reasonable bill and, while it went further than the administration bill, it did embody most of the provisions and protections of that administration measure.

However, sweeping amendments from the Democratic side to S. 2663 were offered and approved on the floor. These amendments removed from the bill the "runaway shop" protections, thereby encouraging the creation of new depressed areas and endangering the livelihood of many numbers in highly industrialized areas.

In its amended form S. 2663 passed the Senate, but was not acted upon by the House.

Equal pay for equal work

Another area of labor legislation to which President Eisenhower referred in his recent state of the Union message is that of equal pay for equal work without discrimination because of sex. This is a matter of simple justice. With the large number of women in the labor force, in many cases engaged in work done previously by men or working alongside men, it is only reasonable that these women be paid according to their work and not according to their sex. And yet, S. 3352, introduced by the senior Senator from New York, the junior Senators from Colorado, Ohio, and Maine, and the two Senators from Connecticut, has been ignored since its introduction in March of this year.

Other important legislation

There is an important measure which would extend the protection of our laws relating to assaults and homicides against officers and employees of the United States to those persons enforcing the Federal labor statutes which has not been acted upon. Most Federal employees who perform law enforcement duties are covered by provisions of the Federal Criminal Code relating to the protection of Federal officers and employees. This protection does not extend, however, to Labor Department employees. To cover these employees, the distinguished senior Senator from Utah has introduced S. 1150. H. R. 6997, a comparable measure, has been passed by the House, but action is still pending in the Senate. This proposal should be acted upon.

The Puerto Rican Legislative Assembly by concurrent resolution of February 18, 1955, expressed its desire for the extension of the provisions of title III of the Social Security Act and the Federal Unemployment Tax Act to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. This would enable the Federal-State unemployment insurance system, which does not presently extend to Puerto Rico, to be put into effect there. There is a high rate of unemployment persistent in Puerto Rico and the need for this application of the unemployment insurance system is great. My esteemed colleague, the senior Senator from New York, introduced S. 2183 on June 10, 1955, to accomplish this purpose. But, this bill, too, has been shelved.

Another unemployment-insurance measure has failed of enactment. The President in his state of the Union and economic messages of 1955 recommended improvement of the District of Columbia unemployment-insurance law to provide a uniform maximum duration of 26 weeks for benefits and improvement of the disqualification provisions. S. 1163 was introduced by the junior Senators from Maryland, Maine, and Montana, and the senior Senator from West Virginia to carry out this recommendation. The sponsors of this bill were joined by the junior Senators from New Jersey and Michigan and the senior Senator from Oregon in sponsoring a substitute measure, S. 1835. This bill has passed the Senate and been referred to the House District Committee. No further action has taken place.

In all jurisdictions, except the District of Columbia, the State or Territory handles both the public employment services and the unemployment-insurance functions, thus being enabled to operate them as a coordinated system. This insures a maximum offer of jobs to unemployed claimants as well as an efficient and economical administration of the two programs. At the present time, the public employment service for the District is operated by the Federal Government while the unemployment-insurance law is administered by the District government. To remedy this situation, my esteemed colleague, the junior Senator from New Jersey, introduced S. 3642, a bill to transfer the District of Columbia public employment service from the United States Department of Labor to the Government of the District of Columbia. This legislation had the backing of the administration. Yet it, too, has not been acted upon by this Congress.

I wish to call attention to one final measure which, I am happy to note, has been passed by both the Senate and the House and has been signed by the President. I refer to S. 3391, a bill designed to protect migrant workers by authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate their interstate transportation by motor vehicle. Over the past 50 years the migration of large numbers of workers for temporary farm employment has presented problems regarding their safe transportation from place to place about the country. This legislation is designed to do something constructive to help alleviate this problem.

II. IN THE FIELD OF HEALTH

Although many important parts of President Eisenhower's health program were not given consideration, a fair amount of progress in this field was made.

The President, in his health message of January 31, 1955, stated that "the Congress should take steps to strengthen the Public Health Service Commissioned Corps by improving its status." S. 2587 was introduced to reach this objective. The bill, which is now public law, amended the Public Health Service Act to authorize the President to declare the Commissioned Corps to be a military service in time of emergency involving the national defense as well as in time of war.

The committee also considered and favorably reported two other vitally important administration health bills. One, S. 1948, provided grants to States for carrying out the purposes of the Poliomyelitis Vaccination Assistance Act of 1955. The second bill, S. 2940, extends the time limit on availability of funds through June 30, 1957.

S. 886, the omnibus health bill, which embodied health recommendations made in the President's health messages of 1955 and 1956, and in his state of the Union message of 1955, received brief hearings, but no action was taken on the bill as a whole.

Of the six titled in the bill, Title I, Reinsurance; Title II, Mortgage Loan Insurance for Construction of Health Facilities; and Title V, Public Health Grants, which would replace the present separate authorizations with an authorization for grants for support of public-health services generally and for extension and improvement of such services and grants for special projects, received no action in the 1956 session.

However, Title III, Practical Nurse Training; Title IV, Graduate Training of Professional Nurses and Public Health Personnel; and Title VI, Mental Health Grants, were considered and in modified form included in the Health Amendments Act of 1956, S. 3958, which has been passed by both House and Senate.

Also embodied in S. 3958 was the principal objective of S. 3075, an administration bill which had been recommended by the President in his 1956 health message. While S. 3075, which provided for the extension of the Hospital Survey and Construction Act, received no action as such, it was essentially the same as S. 3958 which has passed both the House and Senate.

Another phase of the President's program favorably reported by the committee and enacted into law during this Congress was S. 3076. This bill provided for a continuing national survey on disease and illness and other special supplementary studies. This program will provide statistical estimates on the extent of the major diseases, injuries, and impairments, on the nature and duration of the resulting disability, and on the amount and type of medical and related services received.

Although the committee was successful in enacting into law part of the President's health proposals, it has failed in some very important areas of the administration's program. S. 3252 was introduced to amend the Public Health Service Act to authorize a 5-year program of Federal construction grants to assist medical and dental schools to expand and improve their research and teaching facilities, and to assist other public and nonprofit institutions engaged in medical and dental research to expand their research facilities.

The President, in his health message of January 26, 1956, said: "I recommend that Congress enact legislation authorizing $250 million for a 5-year program to assist in construction of research and teaching facilities for schools of medicine, osteopathy, public health, and dentistry, and other research institutions. These institutions would be required to supply at least equal amounts in matching funds."

S. 849, which the Congress approved, is a modified version of S. 3252, but it does not contain one of the most significant provisions of S. 3252. There is no provision for construction of medical and dental training facilities. The information we received at the hearings indicates the vital need for these facilities. We have only to read the figures of the large number of potential doctors and dentists turned away from our schools for lack of training facilities, to know that the need for this legislation is acute. If our ever-growing population is to have a well-trained and sufficiently large medical and dental profession, this legislation must be passed.

Another vital piece of health legislation which received no action by the committee was S. 4172. This bill would authorize approval of voluntary agreements between private insurance organizations for pooling their resources in developing plans or policies designated to meet current needs for adequate health prepayment protection.

The list of health bills proposed by the administration, which will die for want of action by the committee, grows as we add S. 4132. This bill, introduced by the distinguished junior Senator from Connecticut, Senator PURTELL, to implement the recommendation of the President in his 1956 budget message, provides for the transfer of Freedmen's Hospital to Howard University. The bill was designed to carry out the recommendations of the Freedmen's Hospital Study Commission. This proposed legislation is based on recognition of (1) continuing and increasing needs for medical, nursing, and allied professional personnel; (2) the need for new substantive law which would establish the long-term mission of Freedmen's Hospital; (3) Howard University's expanding medical training program; and (4) hospital service needs of the greater Washington community.

III. IN THE FIELD OF EDUCATION

Although the President has succeeded in getting action on part of his health program, his recommendations in the field of education did not fare so well. The greatest single failure of this committee has been its failure to take action on the President's school construction proposal. At the beginning of the 84th Congress extensive hearings were held by the committee on several school construction bills. Members of the committee heard from witnesses who reemphasized the seriousness of the problem. The shortage of schools for the children of America has created a critical and ever-growing problem in our educational system. Certainly every member of the committee is aware of this crisis.

Yet as quickly as the interest of the majority members of the committee in school construction had arisen, so did it die. Hearings were held on the first administration bill, S. 968, on February 16, 17, 18, and 21, 1955. Hearings were also held on the Democratic-sponsored bill on January 27, 28, and 31, 1955. The first administration bill was revised and introduced as S. 2905 in the second session, but no hearings were held on the revised bill or on any other school construction bill throughout the second session. S. 2905 contained the following substantive titles (there is a fifth title with definitions and miscellaneous provisions): Title I, authorized Federal purchases of obligations of local educational agencies where such obligations cannot otherwise be marketed at reasonable rates of interest; title II, authorized Federal advances of funds to reserves established by States; title III, authorized grants to States to assist them in helping local educational agencies; title IV, authorized grants to States to assist them in meeting the administrative costs of developing State programs.

Action on school construction was one of the first orders of business and in the first session appeared to be of paramount importance to the members of the committee. However, in the second session, while the interest of the Republican members remained great, all action and the previous interest displayed by the Democratic membership seemed to lessen considerably. No amount of urging on the part of members of the minority could rekindle the interest displayed by the Democrats at the beginning of the 84th Congress. The efforts of the ranking Republican on the committee to reach an agreeable compromise with the majority members were to no avail. Today we are without a school construction bill and without a cure for the cancer that is eating away at our educational system.

One of the few bills in the area of education to escape this inactivity was the extension of Public Law 815. Although the bill, H. R. 11695, which passed both Houses was not the exact administration version, it was an acceptable one. Among other things, it extends Public Law 815, 81st Congress, which provides for school construction assistance to local educational agencies in areas that had been burdened with substantial increases in school attendance as a result of defense and related Federal activities.

Because of the need to provide immediate stimulus to the initiation of widespread planning, studies, and action by the States and localities in the field of higher education, the President's Committee on Education Beyond the High School recommended the appropriation of one-time grants to the States to encourage and assist each State in establishing a State Committee on Education Beyond the High School. These State counterparts to the national committee are essential not only for coordination of study and planning activities in the States but also to provide a nationwide mechanism for liaison with the national committee.

Legislation introduced to implement this recommendation would have provided $800,000 to the States. An additional $300,000 was asked for to support the President's committee.

Unfortunately no funds were appropriated by the Congress for the State committees, and only $150,000 was appropriated for the President's committee.

One important education measure urged by the President in his 1956 state of the Union message which recently passed the Senate but failed to get House action is S. 3620. This bill provides for the training of teachers of the mentally retarded. Enactment of this legislation would insure substantial progress toward achieving the following objectives: (a) Reducing the number of the mentally retarded who need and require institutional care; (b) reducing the degree of dependency of the mentally retarded who live at home; (c) making the mentally retarded more nearly self-supporting; (d) reducing, by grouping the mentally retarded into special classes for special instruction, the disproportionate amount of time and attention which the mentally retarded inevitably require in the average classroom; (e) increasing the significance of life for mentally retarded children; (f) bringing added satisfaction to those families of which mentally retarded children are a part.

IV. IN THE FIELD OF WELFARE

The President recognized a long-sought objective of persons associated with the arts when, in his 1955 state of the Union message, he recommended establishing a Federal Advisory Commission on the Arts. The purpose of the Commission as set forth in S. 3054 is to undertake studies of, and make recommendations related to, appropriate methods for encouragement of creative activity in the performance and practice of the arts, and of participation in and appreciation of the arts. Hearings were held on S. 3054 and similar bills, and the committee then favorably reported S. 3419. While the bill which finally passed the Senate was not identical to S. 3054, it contained many of the principal proposals of the administration and was considered an acceptable compromise. Unfortunately this bill was not acted upon by the House.

In the closing days of the second session the committee acted upon a juvenile delinquency bill. The administration bill, S. 894, authorized a 5-year program of Federal grants to assist States and localities in strengthening and improving their programs for the control of juvenile delinquency. Particular emphasis was given to effectuating coordination of programs of various States and local agencies concerned with the control of juvenile delinquency. The bill which finally emerged from the committee, S. 4267, did contain some of the provisions of the administration bill. Certain provisions of the bill reported out of the committee were based on studies and investigations made by a committee headed by Senator Hendrickson in the 83d Congress.

I have briefly here attempted to review the course of many of the administration's labor, health, education, and welfare proposals referred to the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare during this 84th Congress. The list is by no means complete. Yet it can be seen that little has been done by this Congress with all too many of the proposals of the administration in these fields. I feel that this is a serious failure to meet our obligations in these important areas.

Investigation of the Rehabilitation of Narcotic Addicts

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HERBERT H. LEHMAN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I have prepared a statement commenting on a resolution which I have introduced proposing an investigation into ways and means of rehabilitating narcotic addicts who are some of the most pitiable and unfortunate people in the world.

I do not expect that any action will be taken on this resolution at this session but I hope to see that it is introduced as soon as Congress convenes next year. This is a most appealing problem.

I ask unanimous consent that the statement I have prepared in support of Senate Resolution 322 and certain attachments thereto, consisting of letters from some of my constituents, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HERBERT H. LEHMAN ON SENATE RESOLUTION 322 PROPOSING AN INVESTIGATION OF THE REHABILITATION OF NARCOTIC ADDICTS

Mr. President, during this session of the Congress, we have enacted legislation drastically increasing the penalties for the violation of the Federal narcotics laws. However, this legislation was of the police type and dealt only with the detection, apprehension and sentencing of those engaged in the illicit drug traffic. We have enacted no legislation specifically dealing with the rehabilitation of narcotic addicts and the preventive measures needed to prevent their recidivism.

The Senate will recall that when the Narcotics Control Act was being debated on the Senate floor, I pointed out at length that if we wanted to get at the roots of this problem of narcotic addiction, we should focus our attention on the rehabilitative phases of the problem.

The Narcotics Control Act was a result of extensive hearings on the illicit narcotics traffic conducted by the Subcommittee on Improvements in the Federal Criminal Code, a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary. This subcommittee conducted its investigations under the able leadership of the distinguished junior Senator from Texas. That subcommittee quite properly oriented its investigation in the direction of ascertaining those areas of the Federal judicial system and machinery as well as of the enforcement agencies of the executive branch that needed strengthening. It heard some witnesses who discussed some of the problems attendant upon the rehabilitation of drug addicts, but its central focus was upon the detection, apprehension, prosecution and sentencing of persons dealing in illicit narcotic drugs. It did issue a report dealing with some aspects of the treatment of rehabilitation and the role of the United States Public Health Service in treatment. The report did not deal with the role of the United States Office of Education and the various State and local educational agencies in educating our youth to the dangers of narcotic drugs—and how such educational processes might be safely carried on. The report did not deal with the role of the United States Office of Vocational Rehabilitation and the State vocational rehabilitation agencies, of which there is one in each State, in the aftercare of narcotic addicts who no longer need hospitalization. The report did not deal with the possibilities of setting up some sort of regional hospital system for the care of narcotic addicts. These are all important areas. If we are to make a start toward the rehabilitation of these addicts, we must give them our earnest and thorough attention.

Now I hasten to assure the junior Senator from Texas that I mention these areas not covered in his report without the slightest intention of criticising the fine work which he and the other members of that subcommittee have done in their investigations. For I know—as the Senate knows full well also—that the subcommittee deliberately limited its areas of activity because it did not want to impinge in any way upon the jurisdiction of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. For his zeal in so doing, I heartily commend the junior Senator from Texas and his colleagues. And to make certain that the rehabilitative features of the problem of narcotic addiction were not overlooked, the chairman of that subcommittee directed copies of the testimony received to the chairman of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, the distinguished senior Senator from Alabama. In commenting on the floor of the Senate upon his action in doing so, the junior Senator from Texas stated it to be his belief that both the law enforcement and the rehabilitative aspects of the problem were equally important, but should be handled in separate bills after consideration by separate committees.

And so, the mandate to act is clearly upon the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. As a member of that committee, I am most anxious that it act—that it act in an intelligent way by making legislative proposals only after a thorough exploration not only of what is being done, but also what it is possible to do to bring about the successful rehabilitation of narcotic addicts. To achieve such an exploration, I introduced a few days ago Senate Resolution 322 calling upon the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare to conduct such an investigation. I ask unanimous consent that the text of that resolution be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, from my own experience here in the Senate, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Juvenile Delinquency of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, as well as my experience as Governor of the State of New York, I have been made well aware of and have become increasingly concerned with the problems attendant upon the growing problem of drug addiction, especially among our young persons.

The answer, Mr. President, to this problem is not bigger and bigger prisons, jails, and reformatories. The answer lies in prevention and treatment at the earliest possible moment, while there is still time to save these unfortunate addicts. The answer lies in finding out what facilities and services are needed for their successful rehabilitation and making certain that those facilities are there when needed.

Now, Mr. President, disregarding for a moment the social values involved—and I do not concede that we can ever lose sight of them even for a moment—consider the proposal simply from a dollar-and-cents point of view. It is far cheaper to provide the services a young narcotic addict needs for his rehabilitation than to confine him in a Federal penal institution at an annual cost—a recurring cost, I remind you—of almost $2,000.

What good does it do to lock this young addict up in prison without making the attempt—the real, sincere, fortified attempt to achieve his rehabilitation? Rather than contenting ourselves with his confinement, we should dedicate whatever is needed for our resources to apply every bit of skill and knowledge we have to transforming this young narcotic offender from a taxpayer into a tax consumer.

I realize that it is late in the session and that there is little chance for action on my resolution. I introduced it as an indication of the direction and the manner in which I think this problem can be attacked. In doing so, I wish to make it abundantly clear that I do not foreclose, but, rather, expect action in certain areas in the meantime. There are doubtless certain things which the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare could recommend immediately. I am hopeful it will do so. There are other areas in which certain additional investigations must be made, certain additional data gathered, certain additional testimony adduced before the exact direction in which we should move can be formulated.

Mr. President, I have received numerous communications from agencies, organizations, and individuals supporting the stand I have taken that the approach we should take to the drug-addiction problem should be rehabilitative rather than punitive. I ask unanimous consent that some of these letters be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

I hope, Mr. President, that early in the next session of the Congress favorable action will be taken along the lines of Senate Resolution 322 and that the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare will proceed as expeditiously as possible in its investigation so that it can with all possible dispatch recommend to the Congress legislative measures which will deal with the problems of the rehabilitation of drug addicts in a sound and constructive manner.

Senate Resolution 322

Resolved, That the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete study of the rehabilitation of narcotic addicts in the United States. In the conduct of such investigation, special attention shall be given to (1) determining the nature and extent of the facilities and services available and needed for the successful rehabilitation of narcotic addicts; (2) the adequacy of existing laws providing for the treatment of youthful and juvenile addicts; (3) the extent and effectiveness of the cooperation and coordination of the various departments and agencies of the Federal Government both among themselves and with the various State and local agencies concerned with the rehabilitation of drug addicts; and (4) the efficacy of the Nation's present approach to the rehabilitation of drug addicts with special emphasis upon youthful and juvenile addicts.

SEC. 2. The committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such places and times during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate, to hold such hearings, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and, within the amount appropriated therefor, to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. Subpenas shall be issued by the chairman of the committee or the subcommittee, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman.

SEC. 3. The committee shall report its findings, together with its recommendations for such legislation as it deems advisable to the Senate at the earliest date practicable but not later than January 31, 1957.

SEC. 4. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to employ upon a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

Dr. DANIEL BLAIN,
Medical Director, American Psychiatric Association, Washington, D. C.

DEAR DR. BLAIN: Thank you for your letter enclosing a statement critical of legislative proposals concerning narcotic drug addiction.

I am, of course, in general agreement with the approach you take to this problem—the treatment rather than the punitive one. I also am in accord with your position that what is needed is more treatment, more rehabilitation, more research, and the personnel and facilities to make these all possible. As you know, when the Narcotics Control Act was being considered in the Senate, I took the floor to speak out against the approach being taken.

Thank you for writing as you did and sending me the views of your organization. I appreciate greatly receiving them.

Yours very sincerely.

AMERICAN PSYCHIATRIC ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., June 12, 1956.

Hon. HERBERT H. LEHMAN,
The United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LEHMAN: I am enclosing a statement critical of legislative proposals concerning drug addiction now pending before the Congress. We shall certainly appreciate any attention you may give to it.

Sincerely yours,

DANIEL BLAIN, M. D.,
Medical Director.

The enclosed statement critical of current legislative proposals in Congress regarding drug addiction has been prepared by the American Psychiatric Association for public release. The statement makes the following major points with reference to the effects of S. 3760, S. 3901, and H. R. 11106:

1. From a medical point of view, the bills represent backward, rather than constructive, approaches to a national attack on drug addiction.

2. They are based on misconceptions of the nature of drug addiction as a psychiatric illness, and appear to proceed mistakenly on the assumption that drug addicts are especially responsible for a substantial number of crimes of violence.

3. The bills discourage or abolish previous flexible provision for parole, probation, and assignment of drug addicts to Federal hospitals, and thus will impede medical progress. that has been initiated under existing legislation.

The statement contends that further progress against drug addiction lies in the direction of expanding the medical attack on the problem. It is possible to envisage the gradual development of a medical program that would not only reduce drug addiction but would, at the same time, take the profits out of the illicit drug trade. New legislation should proceed in this general direction.

A STATEMENT CRITICAL OF CURRENT LEGISLATIVE PROPOSALS DEALING WITH THE NATIONAL PROBLEM OF DRUG ADDICTION

(Prepared by the American Psychiatric Association for public release, June 12, 1956)

In the opinion of psychiatrists, several legislative proposals now before Congress to tighten control of illicit traffic in drugs, chiefly by increasing penalties for possessing and selling them, represent backward steps in attacking this national problem. It is noted that public hearings on these particular bills (S. 3901, S. 3760 and H. R. 11106) have not been held, thereby giving professional opinion an opportunity to take exception to them. Although these bills differ in many details, considered as a composite they have the following effects:

They drastically increase penalties attached to possessing and selling the drugs, in one case providing the death penalty for a third conviction.

They provide for mandatory jail sentences, and in doing so substantially discourage or abolish previous flexible provisions for parole, probation, and assignment of offenders to Federal hospitals for treatment and rehabilitation.

They discourage the seeking of voluntary treatment by addicts by making it mandatory for a physician in a Federal hospital, including VA hospitals, to report such patients to public authorities, thus violating medical confidence. This would apply even to those who become addicted accidentally in connection with a prolonged physical illness.

The bills in establishing punitive measures do not distinguish between pushers, peddlers, and high-level operators in the illicit drug trade.

The bills tend to substitute extreme punishment and police power for a constructive medical program for treatment and rehabilitation of drug addicts that has slowly developed over the years in the Federal hospitals at Fort Worth, Tex., and Lexington, Ky., and also in State and city hospitals.

Such legislative proposals apparently arise out of widespread public misconceptions about the nature of drug addiction, drug addicts, and what constitutes a long term constructive approach to the problem from a medical point of view.

The main point to be made is that drug addiction is due to a psychiatric illness, in the nature of a personality and character disorder. The drug addict has approximately the same mental characteristics as the alcoholic and the barbiturate addict.

There are some 60,000 drug addicts in the United States. This is an alarming figure, but from a psychiatric point of view, it suffers by comparison with an estimated 3 million confirmed alcoholics, not to mention some 750,000 mentally ill people found in our mental hospitals on any day of the week.

The notion that a drug addict is in fact a criminal is false. He is made a criminal by law, rather than because of the effects of the drug. Opium and its derivatives, heroin and morphine, do not as such have the effect of motivating a person to commit crimes. On the contrary, they have a sedative effect and give the addict a sense of being at peace with the world.

It is during the withdrawal phase, when the drug wears off, that the addict is impelled to criminal behavior. His motivation is simple and direct: to get money to purchase more of the drug, without which he suffers extreme pain and discomfort. His crimes are not generally crimes of violence such as rape and murder. Rather, they are crimes of stealth, petty thievery, picking pockets, breaking and entering, and the like.

Alcohol, on the other hand, does have some crime-producing qualities, notably by way of stimulating people to socially irresponsible action. It is estimated that 7 out of 100 fatal automobile accidents, for example, are due to the influence of alcohol. It is commonly believed that criminals become "hopped up" on the drugs to commit crimes. This is not so. They are far more apt to take alcohol to work up courage and confidence to commit the crime.

Marihuana, taken in sufficient quantity, may have certain crime-producing qualities. Studies, however, indicate that crimes committed as a result of taking marihuana are relatively rare, and usually occur when the drug is used in conjunction with alcohol.

There is also wide misunderstanding about terms used in connection with drug addiction and the traffic in drugs, notably the terms "peddlers" and "pushers." The peddler is himself usually a drug addict. He obtains and sells the drug to other addicts as a means of obtaining his own supply. Most peddlers are not concerned with selling drugs to nonaddicts or with promoting drug addiction.

The pushers, however, for the most part are nonaddicts who are key agents in the network of criminals who seek to promote drug addiction among the population for the profits that are in it. Some drug addicts, it is true, become pushers, but the bulk of them do not.

It is also common knowledge that there is a select group of big-time operators at the top of the drug-trade hierarchy who make huge profits yearly out of supplying the drugs to sick addicts and in promoting drug addiction generally. They are the arch criminals of the trade, and Federal legislation to date has been notably unsuccessful in putting them out of business.

By not distinguishing among peddlers, pushers, and big-time operators in prescribing punishment, these legislative bills make it impossible to provide treatment and rehabilitation for the peddler addict.

It seems clear the root of the evil lies in the profits that are available in the illicit-drug trade. The situation is somewhat similar to the kind of profiteering and gangsterism that characterized the illicit-liquor trade in the 1920's. In the long run a method must be found to remove the profits. There is no reason to believe that extreme punishment for peddler addicts will help. Indeed, to the extent that such legislation discourages further treatment and rehabilitation for them, it may be expected to worsen the situation.

A sound medical program designed to make substantial inroads against drug addiction calls for the same essential ingredients as any other medical program; more treatment, more rehabilitation, more research, and the personnel and facilities to make these possible. Considerable progress has been made in recent years in Federal, State, and city hospitals in treating and rehabilitating addicts. The incidence of drug addiction has decreased over the past 30 years. This progress has been made under rigorous existing legislation and procedures (the Harrison Act). The medical assumption may be made, therefore, that further headway can be made by elaborating the treatment and rehabilitation programs that have already been started.

Much more, of course, remains to be done; but progress lies in the direction of expanding the medical attack on the problem. It is possible to envisage the gradual development of a medical approach that would not only become increasingly effective in reducing drug addiction, but would at the same time take the profits out of the illicit-drug traffic. Many proposals for making possible the prescribing of drugs for addicts under medically controlled conditions have been considered and recommended in medical circles. These proposals should be subjected to careful investigation and experiment.

Additional legislation concerning drug addiction should be directed to making further medical progress possible, rather than discouraging it. The legislative proposals now under consideration would undermine the progress that has been made and impede further progress. Thus, they are not in the public interest.

MR. GEORGE STRAUSS,
Chairman, American Civil Liberties Union, Buffalo, N. Y.

DEAR MR. STRAUSS: Thank you for your letter urging my opposition to the inclusion of the death penalty and wiretapping provisions in the Narcotics Control Act.

As you know, when this bill was being debated in the Senate, I took the floor to speak out against the approach being taken and to urge greater facilities and services for the rehabilitation of drug addicts. I also cosponsored two amendments to delete the death penalty and wiretapping provisions. While we were successful in obtaining the adoption of the latter amendment, the former amendment was rejected.

Thank you for writing as you did and bringing to my attention the views of your organization.

Yours very sincerely.

AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION,
NIAGARA FRONTIER BRANCH,
Buffalo, N. Y., June 13, 1956.

Senator HERBERT H. LEHMAN,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LEHMAN: On behalf of the Niagara Frontier Branch of the American Civil Liberties Union, I would like to call your attention to certain provisions of the so-called narcotics control bill which are objectionable from a civil-liberties point of view.

It is our feeling that the extension of the death penalty to narcotic peddling is primitive, retributive, and highly inappropriate at a time when the rest of the civilized world, for instance England, is abandoning it. We feel that if this penalty is used at all it should be reserved only for the areas in which it has been traditionally used, such as murder and rape.

We also object to the wiretapping provisions which were wisely deleted from the bill when it passed the Senate. We feel that wiretapping in any form is an unjustified invasion of the individual's right to privacy.

Although we realize that the bill has already passed the Senate, we urge you to remain vigilant that these sections do not pass if the bill is returned to your body.

Sincerely,

GEORGE STRAUSS,
Chairman.

MR. ERNEST F. WITTE,
Executive Director,
Council on Social Work Education, Inc., New York, N. Y.

DEAR MR. WITTE: Thank you for the kind remarks contained in your letter with respect to my comments concerning the letter from George Washington to the Newport Hebrew Congregation, and on the narcotics control bill.

It was considerate of you to write me as you did and to take the time and effort to comment on my remarks. I appreciate your thoughtfulness.

Yours very sincerely.

COUNCIL ON SOCIAL WORK EDUCATION, INC.,
New York, N. Y., June 13, 1956.

The Honorable HERBERT H. LEHMAN,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I have read with great interest the excerpt from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD you so kindly sent me, in which were quoted your remarks concerning the letter from George Washington to the Hebrew congregation in Newport, R. I. I found this a most inspiring document and, as you say, one that the Nation could profitably review at frequent intervals.

I have also read your remarks on the pending narcotics bill, S. 3760, and confess that in my judgment it is one of the few rational speeches made on this bill which I have been privileged to read. I hope that your views will prevail and that something constructive can be added to this measure in line with modern knowledge, which will be more effective in removing the causes for the sale and use of narcotics and in the rehabilitation of those victims who have become addicted.

Would that we had more Senator LEHMANS in the Senate.

Sincerely yours,

ERNEST F. WITTE.

THE AMERICAN PUBLIC HEALTH ASSOCIATION, INC.,
New York, N. Y., June 26, 1956.

The Honorable HERBERT H. LEHMAN,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LEHMAN: Your office was good enough to send me a copy of the floor remarks which you made on the narcotics bill, S. 3760, on May 25.

I write to congratulate you on this forthright and incisive statement which seems to me entirely sound.

I hope your hand can be strengthened in taking the emphasis away from punitive control measures and placing them on prevention and rehabilitation.

Faithfully yours,

REGINALD M. ATWATER, M. D.,
Executive Secretary.

DR. HERBERT BERGER, M. D.,
The Berger Clinic,
Tottenville, Staten Island, N. Y.

DEAR DR. BERGER: Thank you for your letter enclosing a reprint of your article on narcotic addiction, and for your telephone call to Mr. Edelstein explaining the academy's position on the Daniel bill.

I am enclosing a copy of the remarks I made on the floor of the Senate when this bill was taken up for consideration. You will note that I relied heavily upon your views and those of the academy.

I do appreciate your making your views known to me.

Yours very sincerely.

THE BERGER CLINIC,
Tottenville, Staten Island, N. Y.,
April 7, 1956.

Senator H. LEHMAN,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LEHMAN: Enclosed please find a reprint of an article on narcotic addiction which appeared in our State medical journal.

I hope that when the Daniels committee recommendtion reaches the floor of the Senate that you may feel yourself in a position to support the medical rather than the punitive management of these sick people.

These principles have been adopted by the State medical society. I should be happy to have the opportunity to discuss this matter with you in person.

Yours very truly,

HERBERT BERGER, M. D.

THE RICHMOND COUNTY MEDICAL SOCIETY'S PLAN FOR THE CONTROL OF NARCOTIC ADDICTION

(By Herbert Berger, M. D., F. A. C. P., Staten Island, N. Y.)

In January 1953 the Medical Society of the County of Richmond in New York after considerable study passed the following resolution:

"1. Whereas the medical profession in its traditional role as guardian of the public health has been distressed by the narcotic problem and its apparent increase; and

"2. Whereas the average user of narcotics must spend from $15 to $100 per day to keep himself supplied with drugs; and

"3. Whereas the crime in drug addiction stems from the inability of persons of moderate means to purchase drugs at present illegal prices; and

"4. Whereas the most serious of these crimes is the conversion of each addict into a salesman with consequent formation of new addicts; and

"5. Whereas the use of morphine and heroin in themselves do not incite these unfortunate people to crime, as both drugs are depressants; and

"6. Whereas the narcotic trade exists only because of the huge profits involved (for example, 2 pounds of heroin can be bought for $10 in China and sold after cutting and packaging for $80,000 or more): Then therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Medical Society of the County of Richmond favors the legalizing of the distribution of narcotics free of charge with proper safeguards, hereinafter to wit:

"1. Establish narcotics clinics in all cities as the need appears under the aegis of the United States Public Health Service.

"2. Register and fingerprint all who apply to prevent reregistering in other clinics.

"3. Do not demand that they be enforcibly confined, as they are now.

"4. Determine the smallest amount of pure drug that will relieve the patient of his symptoms.

"5. Administer this uncut material by the doctor or under his supervision and under sterile precautions.

"6. Keep accurate records of dosages.

"7. No supply ever to be given to the addict, dosage to be given only at the clinic.

"8. Nominal charge for the actual cost of the drug, possibly 15 to 30 cents.

"9. Make an effort to effect a cure, where possible, using hospitalization if the patient acquiesces."

The passage of this resolution excited the enthusiasm of the public press and has been followed in turn by a not inconsiderable degree of interest among social workers, psychologists, psychiatrists, the clergy, and addicts themselves. Those who are seeking a solution to the problem of juvenile delinquency, as well as a number of organizations devoted to the study of criminology, have seen fit to comment favorably on these suggestions. After appropriate action by the coordinating council of the five counties comprising the city of New York, this resolution was presented to the house of delegates of the Medical Society of the State of New York. It was referred to the council committee on public health and education and studied for an entire year. In May 1954 the house of delegates of our State society passed this resolution and referred it to the American Medical Association. The problem is now before a committee of the American Medical Association. Therefore, it seems proper that the resolution be called to the attention of physicians throughout the United States who may now have an opportunity to understand the background and the thinking that went into the preparation of these thoughts. Similar joint resolutions have been introduced into Congress. If some of the material that follows seems elementary, it is written so only because by Federal fiat the medical profession has been separated from the care of these sick people, the narcotic addicts. It is quite possible that many physicians have neither seen, recognized, nor treated a person afflicted with addiction.

THE NARCOTIC ADDICT AS A PERSON

There are few people in this enlightened country of our who are so badly misunderstood and maligned as these unfortunates. Our novelists and some of our less well-informed sources of general information have pictured him as a fiend, and a devil, subhuman, and possessed of none of the gentler civilized attributes. Since most physicians are inexperienced with the votaries of opium, even we, who of all people should be aware of this faulty characterization, know little about these individuals. I was utterly amazed to meet a veritable Casper Milquetoast, my first experience with a long-addicted person. Perhaps as this story unfolds, the reasons for our lack of authoritative information in this important medical area may become apparent.

There are no individuals who do not at times experience periods of depression or elation. A mature personality recognizes these alterations in his mood as normal. Most of us have learned that blue days are temporary and will ultimately be followed by better ones. We overcome our despair with patience or sometimes by the finding of a new hobby, a vacation, a new job or home, or perhaps a new interest. The narcotic addict, however, cannot tolerate these depressions and valleys in his daily living. He is incapable of using his own native talents for overcoming these unpleasant episodes. He wants to reach and stay at the heights of elation and happiness constantly. This is a perfectly normal, human desire shared by all of us. Our narcotic patient, however, differs in that he seeks to attain this plateau of joy chemically rather than from the use of his own inner strength and convictions. Even this small introduction to a large and involved subject should make it apparent that drug addiction isn't even a disease. It is merely a symptom of one.

What then is wrong with the euphoria that these people seek to achieve endlessly? The fault lies not with the pleasant state of mind which they hope to perpetuate, but rather with their lack of insight into themselves and their lack of understanding of reality. A problem deferred with narcotics remains unsolved. It persists tomorrow or the next day so that these individuals, like so many of the rest of us, are procrastinators of the worst sort. Whatever strength of character they may once have possessed is lost as they everlastingly retreat from life and the making of decisions. Without going into this subject to a length interesting only to the serious student of psychiatry, it becomes apparent that these are sick individuals, suffering not from narcotic addiction but from lack of will power and strength of personality. They differ little from those of us who eat too much and hardly at all from the alcoholic who seeks as well to solve life's problems chemically.

THE NATURE OF ADDICTING DRUGS

We physicians have been using narcotics for thousands of years, and we know full well the effect of these medicaments on our patients. They are sedatives, inducing sleep or relieving anxiety. With them our patients may achieve surcease from pain or worry. Their larger problems may become smaller or even insignificant to them. Can the lurid articles in the daily press make us, who have a grounding in pharmacology, believe that narcotics do anything else for an addict? Under the influence of opiates the addict like our other patients becomes relaxed and at ease. He is incapable of violent crime while under the influence of these drugs and cares nothing for sex. He is incapable of sex. Many of them tell me that their entire interest in this subject disappears when they are so sedated. In fact, many of these individuals are better citizens with narcotics than they are without. Please do not interpret this as a suggestion that they be used in the treatment of certain psychogenic states. An observation that those of us who are interested in this subject make, time and time again, is that the individual who has been using these materials as self-treatment for anxiety demonstrates all of his symptoms as he is removed ever further and further from the addicting material. Many calm and quiet individuals who are able to work steadily while using narcotics find themselves becoming antisocial, belligerent, and endlessly difficult without these substances.

This, then should introduce us to a new concept of these patients because actually every reader of this paper probably has met, and knows now, a narcotic addict who may hold a position of responsibility in his own community extending from bank presidents to doctors to locomotive engineers. These people perform their work perfectly without detection until for some reason they run afoul of the law in their efforts to gratify their habit. Compare our addict, if you will, with a diabetic. The latter is able to lead a normal life as long as he gets all of life's necessities and insulin. The drug addict, similarly, is able to function adequately as long as he receives the same necessities of life that our diabetic needs, but he, in addition, needs not insulin but narcotics.

There are two features which are ascribed to narcotics as though they exhibited these pharmacologic characteristics alone. These drugs produce both tolerance and dependence. By the former we mean that it takes ever-increasing doses to produce the same effect. Your self-treated constipated patient tends to use ever larger and larger doses of his favorite laxative in order to produce the same effect on his bowels. Dependence is some characteristic of the nerve cell which demands these materials in order to function properly. Such dependence appears in many other diseases, for example, the use of vitamin B_{12} in the treatment of pernicious anemia.

Let us picture for a moment a potential narcotic addict who has never met a peddler. He might be the antisocial person who throws a stone through the stained glass window of the church to which he does not belong or who sets fire to his school when he has been disciplined therein. Perhaps he is a member of one of our numerous lunatic fringe societies, or he may be found in our jails or in our underworld because some of his antisocial behavior has made him a criminal. Not too long ago such a person came to my attention who, after experiencing many difficulties in adolescence, became a moderate user of narcotics. For the past 45 years he has operated a railroad switch tower at a busy junction. He has been praised by his supervisor as a diligent, conscientious worker who "never misses a day" and on whom he "can depend utterly." This individual unfortunately acquired tuberculosis and came to my attention only when he was admitted to a sanitorium, thereby being separated from his usual sources of supply. In summary, then, these materials are used as self-treatment by certain mentally sick individuals. They do not incite the user to violence. In fact, the very opposite is true.

CRIME AND DRUG ADDICTION

If these drugs do not promulgate criminal tendencies, why are crime and narcotic addiction so closely allied in our minds? In the United States the addict is not recognized officially as a psychopath but rather as a criminal. Now this is an entirely man-made situation. We could make our diabetics criminals just as quickly were we to forbid them insulin. Similarly, our experience with prohibition proved to us that we could make criminals out of devotees of alcohol. We recognized this error in our thinking when the 18th amendment was repealed. Now, by the ukase of the Bureau of Narcotics, we have divorced the addict from a legitimate source of drugs. He may not obtain these materials from his physician, nor can he obtain them through his pharmacist. To him they have become a way of life. They are, in his warped reasoning, necessary for his very existence. Therefore, he obtains them through the underworld or by stealth. The peddler, like the bootlegger of the 1920's, was happy to have this artificial opportunity created for him by our legislative efforts.

Narcotics are not very expensive, costing little more than aspirin to produce. There is a rather large tax on these materials, but even so, 20 or 30 cents would supply the daily needs of most addicts. Actually, however, since the price of these materials has been artificially heightened by the nature of their source. many of these people spend from $15 to $100 a day to gratify their addiction. This, then, is the source of crime. How many individuals do any of us know who can spend $100 per day on drugs in addition to all the other expenses of living. It becomes apparent that few could hope to do this by legitimate means. Actually the situation is compounded even further by additional factors. The narcotic addict must keep his illness secret to avoid the censure of his neighbors, so that he can stay out of the clutches of the law. As we have pointed out before, the materials are sedatives so that every capacity which he may have once had for earning large sums has been lost by this action of narcotics. Therefore, as one addict described the situation, each day is spent in a frequently futile effort to acquire sufficient money to gratify the habit.

The type of crime to which these individuals turn is interesting. Since many of these people are rather meek, their methods of acquiring money are rarely violent. They are shoplifters, policy slip runners, bookies, pilferers, and the like. Murder is a rare crime among them. Females practice prostitution. Married women have been known to sell the furnishings from their homes to obtain moneys which should have been spent for food and other necessities. Many prostitutes have never seen the money their efforts have earned. Instead their procurer or madam pays them in narcotics. This tends to keep them from leaving the house. In some cities of the United States as many as 86 percent of all apprehended prostitutes were narcotic addicts.

Actually these are the least of their crimes. The most serious is the introduction of neophytes to addiction. The narcotic peddler is usually an addict. In New York City he is given 25 percent of all the narcotics he can sell. Therefore, the addict is the largest single cause of the spread of this symptom complex. Who are these initiates? In most instances they are children of high school age who are easily induced to take narcotics as a new adventure. They want desperately to be one of the crowd and intensely fear criticism of being "chicken."

THE MAGNITUDE OF THE PROBLEM

Because the sale and distribution of narcotics is illegal in the United States, we have no accurate figures as to the number of addicts in this country. Actually we know only of those individuals who run afoul of the law. This amount seems to be increasing. An estimate made in 1918 by a commission appointed by the then Secretary of the Treasury estimated that we had a million addicts. This was about four or five times the number of sufferers prior to the passage of our first law of control, the Harrison Act. None of the figures from any course, whether it be the Commissioner of Narcotics, our courts of law, the Federal hospitals for the care of narcotic addicts, our prison population, or the Bureau of Customs who seize a certain amount of narcotics each year, are accurate. The United Nations estimates that no more than 10 percent of all of the material smuggled into the United States is ever seized. In 1952, 4,000 ounces were so acquired by the Government, and if this were 10 percent of the total, then 40,000 ounces were smuggled into the country, which should be sufficient to supply 180,000 addicts. The number of individuals who have been apprehended for narcotic violations has increased 1,200 percent in the last 7 years. The adoption of our resolution will lead to the acquisition of some accurate information as to the nature of this problem and its magnitude.

THE CAUSE OF OUR PRESENT SITUATION

Most of the narcotics introduced into the United States in the latter part of the 19th century and the first 14 years of the 20th reached this country through Chinese tongs. A good deal of the material so introduced was powdered crude opium which was smoked in parlors, very much as liquor is consumed in saloons. An occasional non-Chinese member of our community used this substance. Perhaps even larger numbers of individuals had become accustomed to various proprietary medications, which were sold across drugstore counters without prescriptions, which contained more or less narcotics. Querulous children were treated with nostrums containing paregoric. This was a well-recognized remedy for teething. Women used such substances for the relief of menstrual cramps and discomfort. A great number of apprehensive people used patent medicines containing opiates rather regularly to reduce their nervous tension.

In an effort to cope with this situation which had become a matter for concern in the press of the early 20th century, there was passed the Harrison Stamp Act. The purpose of this piece of legislation was to control the sale of these materials and to tax them. Since that time each vial of narcotics carries a stamp very much like that found on bottles of liquor. It is obvious that the Congress expected that this would be a tax measure because its enforcement was placed in the Treasury Department. The term "narcotic addict" does not even appear in the act. As a result of rulings by the Chief of the Bureau of Narcotics and by subsequent interpretations of these decrees by the Supreme Court, it has become illegal for practicing physicians to administer narcotics to addicts. The legal machinations by which we in medicine were separated from these unfortunates is a story in itself. It has been told very well by Mr. Rufus King (1) recently in the Yale Law Review. Remember, the regulations were made by the Bureau and not by Congress.

All of the legislation, Federal, State, and municipal, is punitive in nature. The net result of this type of control has been to make the acquisition of narcotics ever more difficult and consequently ever more expensive. It follows then that each new measure actually incites new crime. In every instance this observation has been borne out. I am sure that those who have profited enormously from the sale of these substances welcome every new legal effort at control. There is no need to question why there are so many who are interested in "pushing" narcotics. The profits are beyond all realization. Five or $10 spent for narcotics in the Orient easily secreted under the shirt of a seaman can be smuggled into this country and sold for over $100,000 after being properly cut, diluted, and peddled. When one considers how impossible it was to prevent the smuggling of alcohol, which is thousands of times more bulky and with a considerably smaller profit involved, one can readily sense the futility of legally controlling narcotic addiction by such means.

Senator Royal S. Copeland, a physician from New York, recognized that many addicts would be left without any legitimate source of supply after the enactment of the Harrison Act. He suggested, therefore, that clinics be made available for these individuals so that they might be able to gratify their needs at small prices without recourse to the underworld. These clinics followed none of the regulatory devices which are suggested in our resolution. Nonetheless, they were attended by thousands of patients throughout the country. They were not well conceived, but they were an attempt in the right direction. They might ultimately have been made to work properly, had they been given the opportunity to correct their own errors. They were closed by a decree from the Bureau following a report by a committee of the American Medical Association in 1919 which suggested that narcotic addiction could best be cured within an institution. While the Bureau of Narcotics acted rapidly on the AMA suggestion, closing the clinics at once, it was not until 1935 before proper Government-controlled institutions were inaugurated, first at Lexington, Ky., and later in Fort Worth, Tex., in an effort to handle this problem.

At the present time the United States has become a vast game preserve stocked with hundreds of thousands of narcotic addicts, a few of whom can be apprehended at will by our enforcement officers. The apprehension of an occasional smuggler or of some user or peddler (and the latter two terms are frequently synonymous) receives newspaper headlines, and we, who may not be interested in the subject, might then feel that the problem is being solved.

PRESENT METHODS OF TREATMENT OF NARCOTIC ADDICTION

Narcotic addicts who are not convicted of a crime and, therefore, incarcerated in jails may either by their own volition or on recommendation of appropriate penal, social, or medical authorities be recommended for admission to either of the Federal hospitals. Only one of these accepts females. Treatment in these institutions is excellent, there being brought to bear on the problem not only medical but religious, social, and vocational guidance. The treatment is long, from 4 to 12 months, and costs on an average $4,000 per patient.

The relapse rate of these patients is unknown. It is probably extremely high. Authorities in the institutions speak of 69 or 75 percent in various articles. Addicts give us the impression that the relapse rate is practically 100 percent. One addict that I interviewed received his first dose of heroin, after leaving the hospital at Lexington, in Pittsburgh as he changed trains to New York City. It would seem that only 5 percent of these patients stay completely well. If this figure is true, and it is probably quite accurate, then each cure costs the taxpayers of the United States $100,000. We in medicine would never accept so poor a record in the treatment of any disease. It becomes very difficult to say much in favor of a program of therapy with so enormous a rate of failure.

Yet our Government is committed to this utterly untenable policy. Perhaps the degree of ineptitude of our methods can best be exemplified by studying the situation in England where addicts may be treated by their own physicians and where there are reported for the year 1953 311 addicts, and there may be, according to the British authorities 50 or 75 more in the entire British Isles, an area with a population of 40 million.

There is some light to be found in this picture in that in Detroit, Chicago, and New York City some followup methods are now being utilized. The report of the Provident Hospital under Dr. Walter Adams (2) in Chicago makes excellent reading, and I commend it to those of you who are interested. In New York City where the problem is most acute, particularly in our underprivileged areas, we have some facilities for the hospitalization and followup to juvenile patients, but nothing for adults.

In the therapy of so complex an individual as a narcotic addict, embracing as it does every class of human being, it becomes apparent that some, perhaps many, patients are incurably addicted. For such an individual there remains only three possibilities: (1) Incarcerate him for life, (2) put him to death, or (3) grant him some narcotics legally under proper regulation.

The first of these is too costly and would take many valuable citizens out of circulation. In addition, the addicts themselves would not voluntarily enter hospitals. They rarely go to Lexington or Fort Worth now of their own volition and then it is not to break the habit but to "kick it down" to a price they can afford.

The second has been tried at various times in dictatorships in the Orient. It hasn't worked there, and it is not likely to be enacted in any civilized country like the United States.

The third represents to us the only likely approach.

THE RICHMOND COUNTY PLAN A PRACTICAL REMEDY

The plan which has been described in the original resolution is as simple as it is direct. It embraces really only two steps:

1. Recognize the addict for what he is, a mentally sick person whose prime symptom of illness is addiction.

2. Let us bring to bear on this unfortunate psychopath the whole weight of our great knowledge in medicine, sociology, psychiatry, religion, and humanity so that this sick individual may again be made well and to rehabilitate him so that he can live without narcotics if this can possibly be done. If this is not possible with our present state of knowledge, then let us carry him on narcotics under our control until we learn enough about this subject to effect eventually a permanent cure.

What can we expect from this program?

1. To learn the magnitude of the problem.

2. To stop crimes committed by addicts in order to obtain the price of drugs.

3. To stop the introduction of addiction to new people by the present users who are trying to guarantee their own sources of supply.

4. To prevent death and disaster to those addicted individuals who inject impure, dirty, infected materials into themselves. Many lose their lives from overdosage or from "hot shots" which contain poison. This is the way the underworld disposes of a dangerous addict who has no money to purchase drugs or who informs on the higher ups.

5. To empty our jails of these noncriminals or those people who have become criminals only through our own inept legislation.

6. To give us the opportunity to study addiction so that we may eventually discover a real cure for this disease.

Naturally such a program will require careful safeguards:

1. It will demand the establishment of clinics in our larger cities and individual physicians (3) in smaller localities.

2. Narcotics should be administered only at the clinic. The addict will never be given a supply of medications.

3. He must be fingerprinted and properly identified, registered, and photographed. Only those who are actually addicts can be treated. These can be readily recognized either by incarcerating them and withdrawing them from the narcotics after strict seclusion or by the administration of narcotic antagonists such as nalline.

4. Hospitalize those patients who the medical personnel at the clinics feel can best be served by inpatient techniques. These should be individuals who request hospitalization after being so advised by the clinic physicians. They should not be forcibly incarcerated unless their physical or mental condition is so critical as to make them a menace to society.

OBJECTIONS TO THE PLAN

This plan is opposed by the Federal Bureau of Narcotics. I believe these gentlemen to be entirely sincere in their concept of narcotic addiction as a wholly criminal matter. I can only cite in rebuttal the existence of the problem after 40 years of such methods and its apparent growth under this technique. They feel that pride would keep addicts from registering in such clinics, and it is quite true that some might not, but 1,500 registered in the early clinics of 1918 on the first day. At the present time all addicts are cheats since they will do practically anything to secure the drugs they so urgently need. Under our plan some may continue to be dishonest, but that number ought to be a great deal smaller than it is now.

We hear a great deal about the contagious nature of addiction and that clinics, by bringing addicts together, will increase their numbers. Actually the necessity to sell drugs on the part of one addict to another in an effort to guarantee his own sources of supply is the most common cause of the spread of this condition. The disease itself is not contagious. There seems little reason to believe that an individual would continue to steal and commit crimes in order to obtain drugs when they can be obtained free.

Since some individuals use drugs frequently during the course of a day, we hear the objection that it will be inconvenient for them to return to the clinics as often as necessary. Pharmaceutical chemists [1] tell me that any time that the need arises they can prepare a repository narcotic that will have a 24-hour or longer effect.

CONCLUSION

It seems that narctoic addicts, like the rest of us, by normal attrition tend to reach the termination of their span on this earth. By such natural means many of our present incurable addicts will in time disappear. Should the pusher no longer find it necessary to induce our youth to become addicts to gratify his own narcotic needs, then it would seem that time alone under our technic will solve this problem even if we acquire no new information from our experience with these people when we have the opportunity to treat them. In view of the medical professions' extraordinary record of accomplishment in the past with the management of so-called incurable diseases, it seems probable, God willing, that we might find the answer to this one as well.

Miss MARY FLEMING,
Flushing, N. Y.

DEAR MISS FLEMING: Thank you for your communication with respect to the drug addiction problem.

I have for some time now been concerned with the growing amount of drug addiction in this country, particularly among our young people. The very factor of their youth makes the chances for their successful rehabilitation so much better that I feel we should do all we can to increase available facilities and services to attain that end.

I think you might be interested in reading the remarks on this topic that I made on the floor of the Senate recently. I am enclosing a copy for your information.

Thank you for writing me as you did, setting forth your views on this problem.

Yours very sincerely,

FLUSHING, N. Y., May 15, 1956.

Hon. Senator HERBERT F. LEHMAN,

DEAR SENATOR LEHMAN: I was glad to read today of the approval of the bill cracking down on the drug traffic and heroin selling especially. Several months ago I read an excellent proposal to wipe out illegal narcotics traffic. This suggestion was originally made by a group of doctors in New York State. They recommended, I believe, that any drug addict be supplied with the drug he craves free of charge by his physician. The drugs could be paid for by the Government. This would wipe out the profits of the drug racketeer and make it worthless to smuggle drugs into the United States. It would encourage addicts to seek legal treatment and encourage them to try to be cured. I believe it would make addiction easier to cure because the addict would never be forced to steal to procure the drug, and would know he could be given it as medicine. This should lessen the desperation of many addicts.

I think this would be an excellent provision to add to this narcotics bill.

Sincerely yours,

MARY FLEMING.

DEAR MR. ALEXANDER: Thank you for your communication with respect to the drug-addiction problem.

Senator HERBERT LEHMAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: After hearing today's Town Meeting debate between Congressman BAKER and Dr. Berger on the drug-addiction problem, I am greatly moved to urge you to support the so-called clinic plan for the treatment of drug addiction.

I am convinced that the spread of addiction among our young people is largely due to the necessity of drug addicts to themselves become sellers of narcotics in order to get the money to satisfy their needs.

The clinic plan would remove the economic basis for the spread of addiction, and would substitute treatment for punitive methods. Experience has shown that neither legal nor any other kind of punishment will solve the problem.

Yours truly,

MICHAEL ALEXANDER.

My Record on Civil Rights

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. HUBERT H. HUMPHREY

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, I had intended on the evening of Friday, July 27, when I addressed the Senate on the subject of civil rights, to include in my remarks a brief review of my own record in this field during the past session. I have assembled specific items which delineate my activity in the field of civil-rights legislation in the 84th Congress. They include:

First. A summary of the civil-rights bills introduced at the beginning of the 84th Congress by myself and several cosponsors, and contained in a press release which I issued on February 1, 1955.

Second. My appeal to all of the members of the Senate Judiciary Committee for action on S. 900, S. 902, and S. 903, civil-rights bills of mine which were favorably reported from the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights. The text of letters which I sent to members of the Senate Judiciary Committee is contained in a release from my office dated April 9, 1956.

Third. When it became clear that 4 Democratic Senators on the Judiciary Committee were prepared to support the civil-rights proposals and that if they were joined by 4 Republican colleagues, a sufficient number would be present to report these bills to the Senate floor, I asked the Republican members on the committee to join in this endeavor. On April 19, 1956, I issued a press release summarizing the situation facing the Judiciary Committee in the effort to line up bipartisan support.

Fourth. On Tuesday, April 24, 1956, I testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee summarizing my own position on civil-rights legislation and urging bipartisan support in the committee.

Fifth. On May 24, 1956, I made public my response to a civil-rights questionnaire sent to me from the Pittsburgh Courier. My answers contain an up-to-date statement of my own position on each of these positions raised.

I ask unanimous consent that each of these 5 items—the 4 press releases, and testimony before the Judiciary Committee—be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the items were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATOR HUMPHREY LEADS RENEWED FIGHT FOR HUMAN RIGHTS BILLS

Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, Democrat, of Minnesota, appealed for "an end to discrimination against our Americans because of their race, religion, color or national origin" today in renewing his continuing fight for an improved legislative program on human rights.

Together with a group of his colleagues, Senator HUMPHREY introduced in the Senate a package program of 11 civil rights bills and declared enactment of any part of the package at this session would be striking a blow for freedom all over the world.

Calling attention to conflict and bitterness over civil rights legislation in the past, he said he and his colleagues were presenting the proposals again "with a prayer that the 84th Congress will crystallize and symbolize instead a feeling of good will and brotherhood and consensus in consideration of this vital legislative program."

The series of bills and cosponsors include:

1. A bill to establish equal opportunity in employment. Sponsors: Senators HUMPHREY, IVES, LEHMAN, CASE, DOUGLAS, DUFF, KENNEDY, LANGER, MAGNUSON, MARTIN, MCNAMARA, PURTELL, MORSE, SALTONSTALL, MURRAY, SMITH of New Jersey, NEELY, and NEUBERGER.

2. A bill to establish a Commission on Civil Rights in the Executive Branch of the Government. Sponsors: Senators HUMPHREY, DOUGLAS, LEHMAN, MCNAMARA, MAGNUSON, MORSE, MURRAY, NEELY, and NEUBERGER.

3. A bill to protect persons within the United States against lynching. Sponsors: Senators HUMPHREY, DOUGLAS, LEHMAN, MCNAMARA, MAGNUSON, MORSE, MURRAY, NEELY, and NEUBERGER.

4. A bill outlawing the poll tax as a condition of voting in any primary or other election for national officers. Sponsors: Senators HUMPHREY, DOUGLAS, LEHMAN, MCNAMARA, MAGNUSON, MORSE, MURRAY, NEELY, and NEUBERGER.

5. A bill to provide relief against certain forms of discrimination in interstate transportation. Sponsors: Senators MAGNUSON, HUMPHREY, JACKSON, DOUGLAS, LEHMAN, MCNAMARA, MORSE, MURRAY, NEELY, and NEUBERGER.

6. A bill to strengthen existing civil rights statutes. Sponsors: Senators HUMPHREY, DOUGLAS, LEHMAN, MCNAMARA, MAGNUSON, MORSE, MURRAY, NEELY, and NEUBERGER.

7. A bill to protect the right to political participation and make it a crime to intimidate or coerce or otherwise interfere with a right to vote. Sponsors: Senators HUMPHREY, DOUGLAS, LEHMAN, MCNAMARA, MAGNUSON, MORSE, MURRAY, NEELY, and NEUBERGER.

8. A bill to create a joint Congressional Committee on Civil Rights. Sponsors: Senators HUMPHREY, DOUGLAS, LEHMAN, MCNAMARA, MAGNUSON, MORSE, MURRAY, NEELY, and NEUBERGER.

9. A bill to reorganize in the Department of Justice by establishing a civil rights division in the Department under an Assistant Attorney General. Sponsors: Senators HUMPHREY, DOUGLAS, LEHMAN, MCNAMARA, MAGNUSON, MORSE, MURRAY, NEELY, and NEUBERGER.

10. A bill to strengthen the current laws with regard to peonage, convict labor, slavery, and involuntary servitude, Sponsors: Senators HUMPHREY, DOUGLAS, LEHMAN, MCNAMARA, MAGNUSON, MORSE, MURRAY, NEELY, and NEUBERGER.

11. The omnibus civil rights bill to strengthen existing civil rights statutes. Sponsors: Senators HUMPHREY, DOUGLAS, LEHMAN, MCNAMARA, MAGNUSON, MORSE, MURRAY, NEELY, and NEUBERGER.

SENATOR HUMPHREY OPENS NEW DRIVE FOR CIVIL RIGHTS ACTION

Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, Democrat, Minnesota, announced today new steps in his continuing fight for civil rights action by the current Congress, seeking organized support behind a determined effort to gain action on "a minimum basic package of civil-rights legislation."

Calling attention to action of the Senate's Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights on reporting three of his civil rights bills favorably to the full Senate Judiciary Committee, Senator HUMPHREY wrote all members of the Senate Judiciary Committee Friday saying, in part:

"I am confident that most Americans would agree that these three bills constitute a minimum basic package of civil-rights legislation for the current session of Congress. May I respectfully invite your early and earnest consideration of this matter?"

The three bills are:

1. S. 900, which he said "would guarantee certain basic rights to all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States, and would involve a special protection against lynching";

2. S. 902, which he said "would reorganize the Department of Justice for the protection of civil rights by providing for an additional Assistant Attorney General to be in charge of a new Civil Rights Division"; and

3. S. 903, which he said "would protect the right to political participation by all American citizens in Federal elections, would establish the right to qualify to vote and to vote, and would set criminal penalties against interference with these rights."

At the same time, Senator HUMPHREY also wrote to Senators DOUGLAS, LEHMAN, MCNAMARA, MAGNUSON, MORSE, MURRAY, NEUBERGER, LANGER, and NEELY, who cosponsored the bills with him when they were introduced along with other civil rights legislation on February 1, 1955, urging their help in gaining the earliest possible attention of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Senators LANGER and NEELY are both members of that committee.

In his letter to the cosponsors, Senator HUMPHREY commented: "I have reason to believe that a major stumbling block may be the lack of a quorum of eight at Judiciary Committee sessions. I am convinced that there are at least 4 Democrats and 4 Republican members of the Judiciary Committee who would support this legislation if present." He urged his colleague to help expedite action by the Judiciary Committee by seeking bipartisan cooperation in getting a favorable majority to attend committee sessions.

In a third and related step, Senator HUMPHREY also wrote to Senator HENNINGS, chairman of the subcommittee which had reported favorably on the three civil-rights bills, commending him for that action in the interest of democracy.

In his letter to Senator HENNINGS, Senator HUMPHREY also called attention to another of his pending measures, S. 906, calling for establishment of a Commission on Civil Rights.

"In view of administration announcements calling for such a Commission, I would like to suggest that your subcommittee may wish to give further consideration to this legislation already before you to accomplish the very purpose the President now seeks," Senator HUMPHREY wrote.

In commenting on the new drive for action, Senator HUMPHREY declared he would welcome bipartisan support.

"If the Republicans are sincere in wanting to do something about civil rights, they should now give their wholehearted support to these long-pending measures which have already been cleared to the full committee with subcommittee approval.

"There is no need to talk about proposing new legislation, when legislation to accomplish the same purposes has long been pending and has already completed important steps in the legislative process toward final enactment," Senator HUMPHREY said.

SENATOR HUMPHREY CHALLENGES REPUBLICANS TO SUPPORT CIVIL-RIGHTS ACTION

Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, Democrat, of Minnesota, today termed Attorney General Brownell's request for new civil-rights legislation "more evidence of lipservice by leap-year liberals" and challenged the administration to prove its sincerity by supporting Democratic legislation to achieve the same objectives and more already pending before the Senate.

"What is the use of making a grandstand play about proposing new legislation, when such legislation is already pending and part way through the legislative process?" Senator HUMPHREY asked.

"If Attorney General Brownell and the President are sincere about wanting civil-rights action, instead of just building a political record of lipservice, why don't they support the legislation that has been before the Senate since February of 1955?"

Senator HUMPHREY said such pending legislation could be brought before the Senate for action any time as many Republicans as Democrats will stand up and be counted in favor of action in the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Commenting further on Brownell's recommendations, Senator HUMPHREY said:

"The Republican platform calls for Federal action on antilynching, antipoll tax, and fair-employment-practices legislation. I notice a complete absence of any reference to these topics in the administration's recommendations.

"All they do propose is a bipartisan commission, a new Civil Rights Division in the Justice Department, tightening of protection against interference with the right to vote, and improving laws designed to prevent conspiracy to interfere with the right to vote.

"If they really want a commission, why have they not supported the pending bill for such a commission introduced a year ago by myself and a group of my colleagues?

"If they really want a new Civil Rights Division in the Department of Justice why don't they support the Humphrey bill for that purpose already favorably reported by the Hennings Subcommitteee on Constitutional Rights?

"If they really want to protect the right to vote, why don't they support the Humphrey bill for that purpose—a bill with more teeth, providing criminal prosecution instead of civil action for violations—already favorably reported by the Hennings Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights?

"If they want to live up to their own party's platform, why don't they also now join us in support of the Humphrey antilynching bill also reported favorably by the Hennings subcommittee?"

Senator HUMPHREY emphasized he would welcome bipartisan support for such objectives, but added that lack of support heretofore has blocked progress that could have been made earlier and indicates the new administration move may just be more gestures of leap-year liberals.

He reiterated his challenge to the administration first voiced when he launched a renewed drive for civil-rights action last weekend prior to the Brownell recommendations, saying:

"If the Republican administration will assure us matching our votes in the Judiciary Committee—if they will get us 4 votes out of the 7 members they have on that committee—we can get action, instead of talk. If they don't the responsibility for this shameful failure to act rests squarely upon the shoulders of the Republican Party and the Republican administration," Senator HUMPHREY said.

REPLIES BY SENATOR HUBERT H. HUMPHREY TO CIVIL RIGHTS QUESTIONS FROM THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

On May 3, 1956, the editor of the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Courier addressed a letter to Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, Democrat, Minnesota, excerpts of which follow:

"DEAR SENATOR HUMPHREY: Inasmuch as you are being mentioned more and more, by your many friends and supporters, as a prospective candidate for the Democratic Party nomination for the Presidency, readers of the Pittsburgh Courier, the largest nationally circulated Negro newspaper, would like to have directly from you a frank expression of your views on certain matters which are of direct interest to them as Americans. * * * Your answers will be published exactly as you send them. * * * Thank you for your time and consideration.

"Your very truly,

"P. L. PRATTIS,
"Executive Editor,
"The Pittsburgh Courier."

Senator HUMPHREY in reply answered the questions of the Courier in the order listed. The complete text of Senator HUMPHREY'S reply is as follows:

"On July 14, 1948, before the Democratic National Convention in Philadelphia, I said:

" 'There are those who say to you—we are rushing the issue of civil rights. I say we are 172 years late.

" 'There are those who say—this issue of civil rights is an infringement on States rights. The time has arrived for the Democratic Party to get out of the shadow of States rights and walk forthrightly into the bright sunshine of human rights.'

"Nothing that has happened during the ensuing 8 years has caused me to retreat or equivocate on the position I held then. Much that has happened during these 8 years renders action on civil rights inescapably urgent now. While I am not a candidate this year for any office, most emphatically including the Democratic nomination for the Presidency, I welcome this opportunity to state my views for the hundreds of thousands of persons who read the Pittsburgh Courier.

"Here are my answers to your question:

"1. Question: Do you believe that leadership in all our States should take action to comply with the Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954, on segregation, as soon as practical (taking into account local conditions), and give some affirmative indication of intention to work for compliance?

"Answer: I believe that no State or civic leader is exempt anywhere in our country from taking action in compliance with the Supreme Court's desegregation decision of May 17, 1954. Admittedly local conditions in some parts of the country will require that this compliance be more gradual than elsewhere. Nevertheless, no State, subdivision, or school district in the United States is legally absolved from its obligation under the Court decision to comply with all 'deliberate speed.'

"2. Question: If elected President, would you use the power of that great office, positively and firmly, to induce the leadership in so-called recalcitrant States to support a steady and progressive program of compliance, rather than defiance?

"Answer: The power of the Presidency should be used positively and firmly to supplant defiance with compliance throughout America. Within his constitutional limitations, the President is in a unique position to influence public behavior favorably on the issue of desegregation. I regret to say that President Eisenhower, however well-meaning, has not exhibited the kind of leadership which the situation requires.

"3. Question: Would you, if elected President, favor the creation by Congress of a permanent bipartisan, interracial Commission on Civil Rights with power to subpena witnesses and conduct necessary investigations?

"Answer: The creation by Congress of a permanent bipartisan interracial Commission on Civil Rights, equipped with the essential subpena and investigatory powers, would be an important instrument of further progress. I have continually advocated such a commission ever since 1948 when I came to the Senate. During the current session, I am the sponsor of S. 906 and S. 907, either of which bills would provide for the establishment of such a commission.

"4. Question: Would you, if elected President, be in favor of the creation of a Joint Congressional Committee on Civil Rights?

"Answer: Likewise, ever since 1948 I have sponsored legislation to create a Joint Congressional Committee on Civil Rights. In the present Congress I have sponsored Senate Concurrent Resolution 8 and S. 907, measures which would create a Joint Congressional Committee which would consist of 14 members, 7 from each House. The committee would be given broad investigatory, consultative, and advisory jurisdiction.

"5. Question: Would you, if elected President, be in favor of the creation of a Division of Civil Rights in the Department of Justice?

"Answer: The creation of a Division on Civil Rights in the Department of Justice would also, I believe, spur the executive branch of the Government to greater action in the civil-rights field. I am currently the sponsor of S. 902 and S. 907, either of which would elevate the existing civil-rights unit in the Department of Justice to the status of a division under an assistant attorney general, and would strengthen the FBI's capacity to investigate civil-rights violations.

"6. Question: Would you, if elected President, be in favor of strengthening existing civil-rights statutes to the extent that a citizen, denied a civil right (to vote, for example) might seek remedy through the Federal courts whether the offender was the State (or its representative), or a citizen, or citizens, who, by threats or intimidation, denied or abridged the right of another citizen to vote?

"Answer: It is essential that we strengthen existing civil-rights statutes. S. 905 is a bill which I have sponsored for the specific purpose of amending and supplementing existing civil-rights statutes. It was designed to carry out recommendations made by the Department of Justice as long ago as 1952. I am also the sponsor of S. 901, a bill to outlaw the poll tax as a condition of voting in any primary or other elections for national offices; of S. 903, a bill to protect the right to political participation, including the right to vote, by providing for criminal penalties against infringement of this right; and of S. 904, a bill to strengthen the laws relating to convict labor, peonage, slavery, and involuntary servitude.

"I favor legislation to allow an aggrieved citizen to seek a remedy through the Federal courts against the denial or abridgment of his right to vote from any source. I would also include specific authority for the Attorney General to seek an injunction against any person who denies or interferes with the right of another citizen to exercise his voting privileges. The right to vote must be free and unfettered. It must be zealously guarded. It is the duty of the Federal Government to safeguard it.

"7. Question: Would you, if elected President, other measures having failed, favor invoking the provisions of the second section of the 14th amendment which expressly require that the representation of a State in Congress should be cut down in proportion as the right to vote of citizens 21 years of age and over is denied or abridged?

"Answer: I have always felt that it was more consonant with our democratic processes to work for the extension of suffrage rather than the restriction of representation. Hence, I would prefer an affirmative increase in suffrage to an invocation of the neglected 2d section of the 14th amendment which would reduce a State's congressional delegation in Congress proportionate to that State's denial of the right to vote. Practical and legal difficulties would inevitably handicap the enforcement of this provision, and I would rely upon it only as a last resort.

"8. Question: Would you, if elected President, be willing to use the powers of your great office to encourage, positively and firmly, fair employment practices throughout the Nation and would you create such devices as might be necessary to help secure to every American the right to work at the calling for which he is best fitted?

"Answer: The President's discretionary powers to promote fair-employment practices should be used by him to their fullest extent. As mayor of Minneapolis I organized the Mayor's Council on Human Relations and proposed a municipal fair employment practices ordinance with powers of enforcement, a proposal which was adopted and is now a working law administered by a municipal fair employment practices commission. Following these successful achievements, I have been convinced of the importance of governmental action toward obtaining equal opportunity for employment regardless of race, color, creed, or national origin. Fair-employment practices are more important today than ever before. We need all available talents and skills if we are to maintain a dynamic economy and to meet the challange of Soviet competition in the field of scientific research, technology, and engineering. In S. 899, the Federal Equality of Opportunity in Employment Act, I have again proposed legislation to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, color, religion, national origin, or ancestry.

"9. Question: Would you, if elected President, favor Federal aid to education to all school districts which indicated, affirmatively, that they intended to work toward compliance with the Supreme Court decision on segregation? Would you favor denying Federal aid to school districts which indicated, by evasion or indirection, that they intended to defy the Supreme Court decision?

"Answer: The desperate need for new school construction, the clear guidelines which the Supreme Court has set down for judicial policing of the segregation decision, and the possibility of fruitless jurisdictional tangles if those guidelines are not maintained, have inclined me to take the following position on Federal aid to education. Funds under any Federal school construction bill should be made available to all States unless an appropriate Federal court following due process of law has found such State, school district, or political subdivision to be in contempt of the Supreme Court's decision and implementation order, or unless the State legislature or a school board has by official action refused to comply and openly defies the court order. Prior to the court ruling or official action on the part of a State legislature, school board, or State political subdivision, there would be a presumption of compliance. In other words, it is to be presumed that the States are observing the law unless there is court or legislative action that demonstrates to the contrary. Following an adverse court ruling or action of a legislature or political subdivision defying the court order, I would propose that funds otherwise allocable to the contemptuous State, school district, or political subdivision be held in escrow until such time as the State, school district, or political subdivision has purged itself of contempt.

"10. Question: Would you, if elected President, use the powers of that great office, as Commander in Chief of our Armed Forces, to see that all men and women in our armed services had the same chance to fight and work for our country in nonsegregated units and the same opportunities for advancement?

"Answer: I have long favored the complete desegregation in all units of our Armed Forces. It has been my privilege to work with the Department of Defense, in close cooperation with the former Assistant Secretary of Defense Anna Rosenberg, the Chief of Staff of the United States Army General Collins, and other military officials, during the years 1950 through 1952, to promote speedy desegregation in the the Armed Forces. I have continued to urge the President to persevere in his duty to insure equal opportunity and advancement to all of the men and women in our armed services without regard to race, color, creed, or national origin.

"Discrimination has been a lingering and stubborn infection sapping the strength of our democratic system. We convict ourselves of hypocrisy to the extent that we refuse to eradicate this infection. There is no aspect of my life as a public servant which I consider to be of greater importance than my efforts in and outside the Senate to hasten the day when discrimination is dead and democracy is fully alive."

CIVIL RIGHTS TESTIMONY BY SENATOR HUBERT H. HUMPHREY BEFORE SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE ON TUESDAY, APRIL 24, 1956

Mr. Chairman, I wish to commend you for your fairness in calling this hearing on an issue of vital concern to all America, knowing of its deep emotional impact in your own home State.

All of us in the Congress must find a reasoned balance between the interests of our own States which we are privileged to represent, and the entire United States which we represent together.

All of us in the Congress share common responsibilities that go beyond the needs, the desires, and yes, even the views of our own States.

The question of human rights is one of those common responsibilities.

It goes beyond any partisanship. It involves fundamental concepts of our democracy that must be of grave concern to all of us, Democrats and Republicans alike, whether our geographical background happens to be from the North or the South. It involves problems we must squarely face with reason rather than emotion, with a spirit of tolerance rather than a spirit of recrimination.

Perhaps this occasion can be a historical milestone, of responsible men reasoning together as Americans all, not as hostile blocs arrayed in bitterness against each other.

My views on "human rights"—and that is the term I prefer, for it is the rights of fellow human beings we are talking about when we discuss civil rights—are well-known to this committee.

They are nothing new, and they are not politically inspired.

They are the result of deeply held convictions, spiritual convictions, that it is a blemish on our democracy to permit in our midst any discrimination against fellow Americans because of their race, religion, color, or national origin.

The struggle for civil rights has been a continual one since the beginning of our Nation, paralleling our country's growth as an expanding democracy.

Our Nation stands today as the freest and most democratic power in the world.

We are justly proud of the progress that we have made as a country in expanding opportunity, security, and human welfare of our citizens.

There is no area of our life which has not developed toward greater democracy.

To be proud of our Nation and its progress, however, is not to be blind to the imperfections that still remain within our society.

The most evident of those imperfections, and the one which cries loudest for immediate remedy, is in the area of civil rights.

Discrimination based upon bias and prejudice still exists, and so long as it is alive, we must be vigilant to eliminate the cancer from our body politic.

Democracy is more than achievement, more than material progress, more than elections and government.

Democracy is essentially a faith of freedom, of equality, of human dignity and brotherhood.

This is the beacon of hope we now have to offer a troubled world. This is the lesson which we must now strive to get accepted in the world, if our Nation is to avoid war and preserve its liberty.

The struggle against the totalitarian forces of communism is not merely of a military character, as recent events have made even more clear than ever before.

It is political and ideological in nature as well.

We stand opposed to the doctrines which enslave men and reduce men to mere automatons.

We believe in the inherent dignity and worth of man; that man is an end in himself; that only in a genuinely free society can man attain his true nature.

We believe that, given equality of opportunity, each individual, irrespective of color, religion, national origin, or race, can realize his true self.

These are the great values for which we are currently engaged in the struggle against communism, values which we must preserve from within our society as well as safeguard against attack from without.

Those of us who strive for the enactment of civil-rights legislation by the Congress do so because we are convinced that the enactment of such legislation will help us as a nation in the world struggle against communism.

We do so also, however, because we must constantly strive to strengthen the spirit and fabric of democracy itself. We do so because we believe that, even if there were no Communists in the world, the discrimination which exists within our country must be eliminated if our democracy is to survive and be true to itself.

With democracy now on trial in the world, it ill behooves us to leave any chinks in our armor.

We must never forget that the image we as a nation cast abroad is mightily affected by what we do at home. One of the best criteria for predicting how a nation will behave in its international relations is its record of achievement among its own people. We judge the Soviets in this manner and part of our skepticism about their sincerity on world issues is grounded in our awareness of how brutally the Kremlin has conducted its domestic policies, how little regard it has had for human rights.

We should consider our own behavior from the same perspective.

At times we have forgotten that we shall not enhance freedom by aping the enemies of freedom.

Democratic institutions are not safeguarded by totalitarian techniques.

The central principles on which America was founded are now being considered by others in their evaluation of us.

Brotherhood and equality of opportunity have now become central aspects of America's national image as it is seen abroad. Just as Lincoln decided upon emancipation of the Negro slaves not only as an act of justice but also as a military necessity, so the achievement in America of racial equality is now urgently needed on both these grounds.

Gandhi asked of the whole Anglo-Saxon world, "What can conquer your unpardonable pride of race?"

We must answer him. We must answer him soon. We should answer him now that the true spirit of democracy is bigger than racial pride—and prove we mean it.

Our responsibilities and the requirements of our national security no longer permit us the luxury of temporizing and evasion on civil rights here in the United States.

Communist propaganda has recognized that issue clearly, and has effectively gone to work against us with it.

You can rest assured that the Kremlin will not permit even these hearings to go unnoticed, and will gleefully exploit any failure on our part to truly exemplify the democracy we preach to the rest of the world.

You can rest assured the eyes of millions of uncommitted peoples throughout the world—people who may sway the balance between a world of freedom and a world of totalitarian oppression—are upon this issue in the United States and upon what we do about it; upon what we do about it at this very hearing and in this very Congress.

Our proper response, both to the Kremlin waiting for us to falter and to the other vast areas of the world looking desperately to us as mankind's greatest beacon of hope for universal recognition of the dignity of man, is to do what we should have done anyway, to do what is right and just; to do what we eventually must do, regardless of external threats, to fulfill the vision of our Founding Fathers for creating a nation fully respecting the individual dignity of man as an inalienable, inherent right under God.

Communism and the atom have only heightened our age-old dilemma of good and evil and raised the stakes of moral choice.

Ever since I have been in the Senate, I have consistently and continually sought greater fulfillment of human rights by legislative action aimed at eliminating discrimination.

Three years ago, at the start of a new Republican administration, I again introduced a series of bills aimed at my continuing objective. At that time, in the hope of bipartisan action for a cause that should be above partisanship, I declared:

"We have just completed a national election. Both political parties came to the American people and said that they were champions of civil rights. I ask unanimous consent to have printed at the conclusions of these remarks excerpts from the platforms of both the Democratic and Republican Parties. The President-elect came to the American people and on many occasions stated his opposition to discrimination and his convictions in favor of equal opportunity. I ask unanimous consent to have printed at the end of these remarks, excerpts from some of his statements.

It remains for the Congress to act in accordance with the wishes of the vast majority of the American people.

In addition to reintroducing, for the third time, the Humphrey-Ives bill for a Fair Employment Practices Commission to guarantee equal opportunity of employment, I introduced at that time nine other measures covering legislative improvements needed for adequate civil-rights protection.

Unfortunately, despite the campaign pledges of the Republican Party, no action was taken on any of these measures by the Republican 83d Congress.

Included among my measures introduced on January 16, 1953, was a new and more moderate approach that I hoped would at least be accepted as a minimum step in the right direction.

It was a bill to create a Federal Commission on Civil Rights, providing for a commission to study continuously the problem of civil rights and discrimination and measures being taken to deal with the problem.

At that time I declared:

"I have never believed in an all-or-nothing approach to any of the major social, economic, or political problems which face our Nation.

"I, therefore, urge the Senate to find a middle approach, and take some steps to spell progress. * * * It is my belief that a Commission on Civil Rights would provide a constructive and factual approach to a problem which is torn with emotionalism. It is not a substitute for other legislative proposals, but it may in fact turn out to be a preliminary step which must be taken to bridge the gap between divergent opinions and establish a foundation for a more constructive, positive legislative program. I shall, in fact, continue to devote my efforts to the enactment of a full program which I have presented to the Senate."

That was 3 years ago, but I stand by those words today. They are even more meaningful today.

Regrettably, no attempt was made by the Republican administration and Republican Congress to act on even such a minimum approach to a crucial national problem.

When the Democrats regained control of the Congress in 1955, I again introduced a civil-rights package program of 11 basic bills, including the same commission proposal.

For a year, I am told, this committee has been awaiting administration views on such a program.

Now, at long last, the administration has recommended enactment of such a commission, along with some other minimum steps all covered in long-pending legislation.

As belated as it has been, I welcome this administration support. I hope sincerely it is offered in good faith, in sincere intent that will be backed by concerted efforts for Republicans to vote side by side with Democrats for enactment of such legislation. If they do, we can make progress of which all of us can be proud. If they do not, America's conscience will have a continued burden upon it.

When I introduced this group of legislative measures a year ago, I declared enactment of any part of them would be striking a blow for freedom all over the world.

I reiterate that statement today.

Instead of conflict and bitterness, my hope and prayer is that the 84th Congress can earn a place in history by symbolizing instead a feeling of good will and brotherhood in consideration of this vital program, with mutual respect and mutual tolerance for deeply held convictions however opposite they may be.

Already favorably reported to this committee by your Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights are measures I have sponsored with some of my colleagues to protect the right to political participation and make it a crime to intimidate or coerce or otherwise interfere with the right to vote; to create a new Civil Rights Division in the Department of Justice under an Assistant Attorney General; and to protect persons in the United States against lynching.

These, together with the proposed commission which the President has now joined in supporting after 3 years, should provide a basic minimum of positive action, going a long way toward eliminating the injustices of discrimination.

I appeal for this committee's favorable action in the name of democracy, in the name of humanity, in the name of morality.

If the Republicans will match the Democrats vote for vote on this committee, this legislation can be approved by the committee and readied for floor action.

Surely, if the administration is really behind its civil-rights program, it can muster four Republican votes favorable to such action on this committee.

In their 1952 platform, the Republicans promised that they would not "mislead, exploit, or attempt to confuse minority groups for political purposes." The Republican Party now has an opportunity to live up to that promise. The Democratic Party will welcome their support.

Together we can build a stronger America, and brighten the beacon of hope for the rest of the world.

The Panama Canal

OF

HON. WARREN G. MAGNUSON

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement by me on the bill (S. 2167), to clarify and reaffirm congressional intent in the last major revision of the Canal Zone Code of 1950.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is with a great deal of disappointment that I take note at this time of the inaction by the Senate on the legislation having to do with a number of necessary changes in the operation of the Panama Canal and Canal Zone Government.

This legislation (S. 2167) has been 3 years in the making and represents studied views of the steamship industry, and to a substantial degree of the General Accounting Office and employee groups as how best to clarify and reaffirm congressional intent expressed in the last major revision of the Canal Zone Code in 1950 (Public Law 841).

But while the proponents of this legislation have spent a long time working out a fair solution to an obvious inequity in the present management of the Canal and Zone Government, the Senate itself has only received the bill for consideration within the past 3 weeks. Unfortunately, there has not been sufficient time to properly bring the bill before the Members of the Senate in order that certain misunderstandings can be clarified concerning its purpose.

While I am disappointed at the inaction by the Senate this year, it shall not deter me in the future in pursuing this matter. My interest is, of course, primarily in seeing that all forms of transportation receive equity before the law, and S. 2167 concerns itself with accounting reforms, judicial review of tolls rates and other aspects of canal management, which bear upon the users of the canal facilities, both tolls payers and employees. At the same time, I am equally concerned with the defense considerations which are involved and there is no intent in my legislation, nor does it so provide, that the control by the Military Establishment over the canal in time of emergency is in the slightest degree changed from its present status.

S. 2167, of course, has my support and was favorably reported unanimously by my committee. This affirmation by the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the principles that I have so long urged convinces me that in the long run the full membership of this Senate will realize the logic and equity underlined in this legislation.

I include as a part of my remarks the following editorial which appeared in a recent issue of the Pacific Shipper:

"YOU CAN'T SUE THE SOVEREIGN

"A United States district court has agreed with a Justice Department attorney that the old axiom 'The King Can Do No Wrong!' still is true—at least legally.

"This oldest legal sidestep in the lawbooks was used to get the wheezing Panama Canal Company off the hook on a $38,350,000 legal suit brought against it by 37 steamship companies for alleged excess toll charges since 1951.

"Nobody has really disputed the basic truth of the steamship operators' complaints, and recent action by the powerful Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee heavily underscored their probable righteousness.

"This committee, under the chairmanship of Senator WARREN G. MAGNUSON, Democrat, of Washington, unanimously recommended that the Senate pass legislation transferring management of the Panama Canal from the Army to the Department of Commerce.

"In addition, the committee urged that the Government agencies in the Canal Zone reimburse the zone government for providing certain functions such as immigration, customs, prisons, etc., and that the canal income be arranged so that steamship lines do not subsidize, through the tolls they pay, many of the activities attendant upon maintenance of the Canal Zone, Panama Canal Company, and the Army in that area, but having nothing whatever to do with the actual operation of the canal.

"The Magnuson committee also asked that procedure be established for toll hearings to be held so that users' complaints might be heard, and also that allowances be made for court review of the tolls when the occasion required.

"Senator MAGNUSON commented that it seemed the Canal Company was a commercial enterprise which ought to be run as such, and not as a military operation. In this opinion he followed the lead of the General Accounting Office which came to the same conclusion some time ago.

"So it looks very much as though the days of the Colonel Blimps are nearing an end so far as the Panama Canal Company is concerned. Doubtless the $38,350,000 suit of the 37 steamship companies, while it may have been technically lost, like the Battle of Bunker Hill, will prove to have been a factor of some weight in getting the Army out of the canal business (if one may count such chickens before they are hatched).

"The defeat of the steamship companies reminds us very much of a French monarch of dubious distinction who said, 'L'etat, c'est moi!' That was the gentleman whose royal neck shortly thereafter was given to the mercies of Madame Guillotine.

"Apparently, something of this nature is now in the works in Washington for the brass-bound leaders of the Panama Canal Company, and when they go, as some day they must, we can only hope that the Department of Commerce will not be infected with the same germs of kingly pretensions but will strive to remember that the Panama Canal was dug to link the east and west coasts of the United States and aid commercial shipping—not to increase the empires of bureaucrats, be they military or civilian."

Taft-Hartley Law Amended by Administrative Decision

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. TORBERT H. MACDONALD

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of the Members of Congress the following address which I recently delivered before the New England Convention of the Carpenters Brotherhood Union on the occasion of their 75th anniversary:

It is a pleasure for me to meet with the New England representatives of the carpenters union. We have a double reason for celebration today. This is your first regional meeting as part of the united AFL–CIO, and it is also the 75th anniversary of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners. Few organizations that are now active in the Nation can point to as rich a tradition and as dynamic a program for the future as does your brotherhood.

It was your first president, Peter J. McGuire, who gave us Labor Day which has become virtually a national holiday.

The direct accomplishments of your union are a matter of record. A union carpenter earns today in 1 hour as much as Pete McGuire earned in a whole day, and McGuire had to work 12 hours or more to get his day's pay. Your union was in the vanguard to make the 8-hour day a reality.

Membership in the carpenters union as in all other unions has paid off. This is true not only in terms of the human dignity and security that the union provides, but in terms of day-to-day experience here in Boston and all over the United States. I was very much interested to read in last month's issue of your publication, the Carpenter, that official Government statistics support the fact that union dues pay off. The Bureau of Labor Statistics data prove that the average hourly union-wage rate is from 10 to 20 cents higher than the pay received by nonunion members.

But a union program is not purely a selfish one. Your organization could not have flourished over three-quarters of a century, if its program were not identified with the common good. The fact clearly is: What is good for America is good for the carpenters.

You favor an expanded housing program. This might appear to be a selfish interest, since you are in the business of building, but again your interests coincide with the needs of the country. Despite the great prosperity and the rising standard of living over the past few decades, millions in our Nation are still ill housed; and many hundreds of thousands of children are living in dilapidated dwellings which should be torn down or which require major overhaul to make them fit places in which Americans may live.

I believe that the Government has a very real role to play in this area, and I wholeheartedly support the bill recently introduced in the Congress which offers a realistic housing program for our Federal Government.

In brief, this program provides for:

First. The building of 200,000 public-housing units for low-income families. This program is to last for 3 years, during which 600,000 units would be built.

Second. The setting aside of 10 percent of these housing units for elderly persons.

Third. The establishment of a national mortgage corporation with lending authority of $1 billion to stimulate the construction of housing for the middle-income man, the forgotten man of this era, in my opinion.

I believe that the provision to help finance housing for middle-income groups is just as important as the construction of public-housing units. There is no present effective Federal program for the building of middle-income housing, for which there is a crying need, and I am fully confident that the Federal sponsorship of middle-income housing is not going to be any burden to the taxpayer. Given conditions of prosperity and high wages, there will be sufficient potential customers to take advantage of the federally sponsored program, and these customers will have the ability to repay the loans on their houses.

It is important, however, that the federally sponsored construction program should be based on a fair wage system. The extension of coverage of the Davis-Bacon Act to include all construction programs which are sponsored with Federal funds is clearly necessary. As you know, the Davis-Bacon Act has helped construction workers by assuring that the prevailing rates which they have been receiving in their communities would be paid on jobs to which the Federal Government is a party. I believe that these provisions should be extended to all programs which are sponsored by the Federal Government. It would be a mistake, however, to believe that these provisions help only workers in the building trades. They also help the contractors by providing a means by which they can ascertain the approximate labor costs on Government contracts prior to submission of their bids. This helps in the stabilization of the construction industry and the achieving of better labor-management relations in the construction industry.

The application of Davis-Bacon provisions has helped all segments of the community. Unscrupulous contractors who bring in low-cost labor where higher wage rates prevail tend to deteriorate the wage standards in the community. Furthermore, workers who are imported to new areas by these contractors frequently become drags on the community when the temporary construction jobs are completed.

The Federal Government must not become a party to undermining wage standards.

The Government also, in my opinion, has a duty not to be a party to creating strife and undermining labor-management relations. Along this line, as a former member of the NLRB, I find the application of the act to the construction industry particularly unrealistic in many instances. The construction industry has its own special problems and a tradition of good labor-management relations. Many practices listed in the Taft-Hartley Act as unfair are not easily applied to the building industry.

In this field I draw particular attention to the secondary boycott section of the act. Provision should be made to permit an employer to sign a union agreement on a construction job without going through the present cumbersome obstacles which, in many cases, result in the construction job being finished before an agreement can be signed.

Further, the section of the Taft-Hartley Act which places restrictive State law above Federal law in the miscalled right-to-work laws should be removed.

For that matter, I feel that due to the unique nature of your industry it would not be at all unusual if an exception were made of the industry as a whole—as was done when our Federal Government recognized your unique problems in the days of wage controls and a separate construction industry board was set up to deal with your problems.

While on the subject of the Taft-Hartley Act, I have heard many people say that the act should be repealed or changed. Well, I have news for these people, the act has been so changed that you might say it has been repealed—

By whom, you ask? Well, not by the Members of Congress.

The Taft-Hartley Act has been changed, and changed drastically. It has been changed by the recent appointees to the National Labor Relations Board. Even though sworn to uphold the law which Congress enacted, it would seem that these members have searched it from stem to stern with the purpose of making it a more antilabor statute, and of reversing wherever possible each rule of interpretation and application established in the administration of the act from 1947 through 1952.

Those who voted for the Taft-Hartley Act said that it was two-sided legislation, that it equalized the rights of management and labor, without submerging the rights of either side. Whatever the merits of that position—I think that there can be little doubt that the changes in the administration of the act since 1953 have been almost exclusively against labor.

First, it is clear that almost all of the innumerable changes in doctrine and interpretation have been changes which reduced the protections of labor. With respect to each charge it could perhaps be argued that the old Board was wrong and the new Board is right. But when all of these changes are looked at together it is discovered that the total result is injury to labor.

Those who would justify their decisions say that the Board is fair and has moved in an antilabor direction only because the earlier Board was excessively prolabor, and that the present Board is simply correcting the prolabor mistakes of the Truman board.

Fortunately, we have a yardstick against which to measure these arguments.

When the Taft-Hartley Act was passed in 1947, its sponsors were afraid that it would not be fairly administered. The statute was complex and many of its provisions were so unclear that maladministration could easily defeat the intent of Congress. To guard against such maladministration, Congress provided, in title 5 of the act, the creation of a joint committee of both Houses to conduct an investigation in the 2d session of the 80th Congress, of the Board's administration of the act. That committee, under the chairmanship of Senator Ball, concluded in its report that the act was being administered in accordance with its terms and with the intention of the Congress as revealed by the legislative history of the provisions.

So we start with the established premise that the Taft-Hartley Act was, on the whole, fairly administered in its early years with neither a prolabor nor a promanagement bias in the Labor Board's decision.

But the past 2 years have seen a rising chorus of protest, objection, and complaint, that the National Labor Relations Board is biased and prejudiced against labor organizations, that it is utilizing its powers to thwart self-organization among employees. It is thwarting unionization both by withholding the act's remedies against violations by employers and by distorting the terms of the act so as to exclude illegal conduct by employers from the prohibitions of the act. At the same time, it is charged, the Board is narrowing the area of lawful protection which Congress extended to employee activity in the field of self-organization and that it is imposing upon the right to strike, restrictions which Congress rejected under our present system of collective bargaining.

We all know how important it is, in a field as delicate as labor-management relations, where the very lives and livelihood of many citizens are at stake, that the agency which we Members of the Congress have entrusted with the duty of administering the law of the land, should be unbiased and unprejudiced.

Surely, it is clearly important to the Board, that it should avoid the appearance of any unfairness in any individual case, and it is of much greater importance to the Congress and the Nation that this agency not act in a fashion which might produce a deep-seated feeling, that by deliberate design it is unfair to an entire class of litigants.

These charges of bias, prejudice, maladministration, and distortion of the statute does not come from defeated litigants alone. These charges have been confirmed by informed students and competent lawyers who specialize in this field of labor-management relations. Prof. Willard Wirtz, of Northwestern University, in a carefully documented study of the new Board's free-speech decisions, concluded that the Board has recently emasculated the protection which Congress guaranteed to employees against employer coercion in the exercise of rights to form and join labor organizations by placing upon section 8 (c), the free-speech provision of the amended act, a construction far broader than Congress intended. How does the Board operate to change the law? Well, we all know of the appointments to the Board itself of Beeson, the labor management consultant, etc., who have made it apparent that they are using the powers of their office to substitute for the labor relations policy which Congress enacted in 1947 a policy of their own. The sweeping character of the policy changes which the Board has made during the past year, taken together, amount, in my opinion, to amendment of the statute in a manner far more drastic than anything this administration has proposed to Congress. The antilabor amendments which the new Board has accomplished by interpretation exceed, in some respects, even the antilabor proposals of the Hartley wing of the Republican Party, which were rejected by the Congress in 1947.

Equally as important, however, in my opinion, but not as noticeable to the public or perhaps even to labor officials, is the Office of General Counsel, which is charged with the duty of determining whether a complaint of unfair labor practices shall issue on all charges filed with the agency. This office was recently filled with a lawyer whose private practice background was exclusively as a representative of employers in the labor-management relation field. Soon after taking office this General Counsel removed his Associate General Counsel in charge of field operations. In his place was appointed a young man who first came to the Board in 1954, a man who had less than 4 months' experience with the Board's field operations and whose only experience in the labor-relations field prior to 1954 was in the capacity of attorney for a division of the United States Steel Co. in San Francisco. The field operations boss is the man who determines, more than any other, the impact of the Board's policies on actual labor relations day to day. In this office lodges power and responsibility for the supervision of the operation of all of the Board's field offices with their many regional directors, dozens of field examiners, and attorneys who, in their dealings with both labor and management, are to all intents and purposes the Board itself.

Under the Office of Associate General Counsel in charge of field operations are several Assistant General Counsels whose responsibility it is to directly supervise the operations of the National Labor Relations Board regional offices. The General Counsel, as you know, has the power to decide which cases shall and which shall not reach the Board for decision. He determines whether the evidence presented in support of a charge is adequate to warrant prosecution.

By fragmenting the evidence instead of viewing it as a whole, the clearest case of unfair labor practice can sometimes be reduced to a series of meaningless and trivial incidents. Of course, no fair or rational administration of the act can result. In one case which illustrates the whole picture, which is identified by the present General Counsel as case No. K–42, he refused to issue a complaint on charges alleging that the company violated section 8 (a) (1), (3), and (5) of the act, although five employees who had gone on strike testified, independently of each other, that the company had offered each of them benefits to abandon the strike and return to work, on the ground that there was no corroboration of their testimony.

How could there be corroboration of separate conversations at which only two parties—the employer and the employee—were present? It is not the business of the general counsel, but of the trial examiner and the Board, to weigh the evidence and decide whether, if the employer denies making the statements attributed to him, he or the employees are telling the truth. But there is something even more shocking in this case.

The employer did not deny making the statements to the employees. Their testimony stood uncontradicted by any witness to the conversation. On what basis then did the General Counsel act? He accepted an affidavit of the employer's attorney, who, although not present, denied that the statements were made, as proof that the employer had not actually made them. Even if the burden of proof in these unfair labor practice cases was as heavy as in a criminal case, which certainly is not, I have no hesitancy in saying, that in my time at the NLRB the General Counsel would have proceeded in this case forthwith and that statement includes the action of the General Counsel who hired me, who was a strong Robert A. Taft Republican and who, before his death, practiced labor law on management's side, the late Mr. Robert Denham.

Maybe these gentlemen who form the hard core of the NLRB are neutral but, from where I sit—and from the decisions I read, they appear to me to be about as neutral as a loyal and enthusiastic Yale man refereeing a Harvard-Yale football game.

In closing, may I say that few organizations can claim the vigor and dynamic program that you are displaying on your diamond jubilee. May your next 75 years be as helpful to the American carpenters, as well as to the community at large, as your program has been during the previous three-quarters of a century.

Montana-Canadian Relations

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
HON. MIKE MANSFIELD
OF MONTANA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement prepared by me on Montana-Canadian relations.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MONTANA-CANADIAN RELATIONS

Mr. President, in this world of cold wars, border patrols, uprisings, and international tensions, there is one place where peace is real and lasting. That is the border between the United States and Canada.

The frontier stretches from Puget Sound along the 49th parallel, the Great Lakes, and Maine—without a soldier, warship, or fence to be found. People visit back and forth like neighbors. In brief, it is one of the few places in the world where disarmament between two countries has actually worked.

The State of Montana is an important part of this 4,000-mile frontier, and, following true to form, people and goods from Montana and the neighboring Provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, and Saskatchewan are flowing back and forth across the boundary in ever-increasing numbers. In fact, Canada is proving to be one of Montana's best customers.

Canadians spent an estimated $16 million in Montana during 1955. They are expected to spend even more this year, according to Department of Commerce figures. The Departmental studies show that more than 23 million Canadians visited the United States in 1954.

About 14 million came by automobile alone. While the stay was short for many, 3 million Canadians stayed for 3 days or longer. The traffic to and from Canada is beginning to have more and more significance.

Vast distances, poor roads, forests and mountain ranges all tend to isolate Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta from the more populated and industrialized areas on the eastern and western coasts of Canada.

People in the Prairie Provinces, as a result, find themselves drawn more and more toward north central United States. This friendly relationship is a two-way street and Montanans are becoming concerned that they are not living up to their part.

With this view in mind the Montana Chamber of Commerce has planned an all-Montana-Canadian relations tour for a week during August. All major communities in Montana are participating in the large caravan of Montana cars which will tour Alberta and Saskatchewan.

A. W. Johnson, president of the Montana Chamber of Commerce, estimates that the tour will be the biggest mass good will Canadian visit any State has attempted.

Montana Day events are being planned in every city along the tour route. The meeting of Montanans and Canadians will be strictly informal. The purpose of the tour is multipurpose, but generally designed to show our Canadian neighbors an expression of our good will and desire to further cement the growing Montana-Canadian relations.

The need for greater Montana-Canadian relations has expanded in recent years. And it is the feeling of Montanans that they should be organized in an all-out effort to thank our Canadian neighbors for the trade they have given in the past and to open the door even further for the future.

The small Montana towns along the boundary are fine examples of how two nations and two peoples have learned to live together in peace. There is completely free interchange and cooperation in civic matters extending from emergencies to civic entertainment. In some instances farmers till land on both sides of the border.

Though the 4,000-mile frontier stands as a monument to peace, there are still occasional differences of opinion and even sharp disputes, over investment, tariffs, international water rights, and the fact that the Canadians at times feel they are being taken too much for granted.

However, whatever the dispute, people on both sides of the border are assured that it will be settled at the conference table and not on the battlefield.

Montana has a great deal at stake in its relations with its neighboring Canadian Provinces—as much, if not more than any State along the frontier. It is quite important that the current relationship be preserved and improved upon in the future.

The strengthening of this two-way street between Canada and Montana can be exemplified by increased trade, expanded north-south transportation with new highways and airlines, agricultural and livestock cooperation, and expanded tourist travel.

Will Strict Laws Solve the Narcotic Problem?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EMANUEL CELLER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I insert herewith a letter I sent to Mr. Jess Stearn of the New York Daily News, and the text of an article he wrote called "Addict's Story: You Can Always Find a Pusher." This subject is of particular interest in view of the recent passage of the Narcotics Control Act of 1956.

The letter and article follow:

Mr. JESS STEARN,
New York Daily News, New York, N. Y.

DEAR MR. STEARN: I read your article in today's issue of the Daily News, Addict's Story: You Can Always Find a Pusher, and am much impressed with your series on the general subject, Will Tough Laws Curb Dope?

In view of your concern for this distressing problem I thought you might be interested in my views on one facet of the problem.

The Narcotics Control Act of 1956 has just become law. It makes the death penalty applicable to persons convicted of selling heroin to minors and increases jail sentences to a maximum of 40 years in other cases.

Admittedly, the sale and use of narcotics leading to addiction is a tragedy of horrible proportion, resulting in irreparable damage to the individual and to society. We cannot look upon the corruption of minors to drug addiction without horror. I maintain that it is our responsibility to summon all our forces to understand the cause and to effect the cure of the narcotic habit. It is a problem that, to date, has baffled us, and we are frightened. In the panic we have seized upon the death penalty as an answer to this problem.

The imposition of a death penalty brings us no closer to a solution. This is not a problem for the penologists; it is a problem for the medical men, for the psychiatrists, and for the social workers.

Advocates of the extreme penalty seem to believe that the cure of the narcotics scourge rose in proportion to the severity of punishment. This is nonsense. Incarceration is no cure, much less life imprisonment and the death penalty.

Dr. Herbert Berger, chairman of the committee on alcoholism and narcotics of the New York State Medical Society and president of the New York City Medical Society, has this to say on drug addiction:

"For more than 40 years our lawmakers and administrators have been trying to cure an illness by treating it as a crime. That illness—steadily on the increase in this country—is addiction to narcotic drugs.

"Our legalistic approach * * * has wrought its own reward. We have created a new criminal class. We have a flourishing narcotics racket. We have ever more drug addicts. Yet, in spite of the peculiar lack of success that the punitive principle has had in the narcotics field during four decades, Congress is now seeking to extend this principle. * * *"

The drug addict is mentally and emotionally ill. He requires medical attention and rehabilitation more than penal punishment. What we need desperately is to find a way to remove profit from the drug traffic. This is the heart of the matter.

I turn again to a statement by Dr. Berger:

"Since society shuns and abhors him (the drug addict), he must turn to the underworld to satisfy his demands. Its members are more than happy to comply. The profits are fabulous. Five dollars in Red China purchases an ounce of heroin. It has been sold for as much as $8,000 in New York City. Small wonder that punitive legislation has failed to remove the importer. We have created a criminal market that is both lucrative and safe. When, occasionally, one of these purveyors is caught there are always others willing to step into his place."

The seller or pusher is generally an addict himself. He sells to get money for the drug he must have. He sells to anyone, including the minor, so that he can insure himself a steady flow of customers. The death penalty will not deter him. Medical men will tell you that the compulsion of the addict is so strong that nothing deters, since the misery of doing without the drug is so intense that any risk, even death, is preferable.

It is prevention that we want, not vengeance. It is reduction of crime we seek, not retribution.

Moreover, criminologists admit that the death penalty does not reduce crime. Juries are less willing to convict and judges loathe to sentence when the possible penalty is death. The commission of first-degree murders in States barring capital punishment is no greater than in States imposing the death penalty.

Gov. Walter J. Kohler, of Wisconsin, has written:

"I have never favored capital punishment and 6 years as Governor of a State which does not impose the death penalty has merely served to reinforce that conviction. I have yet to see any evidence which indicates that the death penalty is effective as a deterrent to major crimes. * * * Here in Wisconsin all murderers who are sentenced to life terms are eventually paroled, and experience has shown that they generally establish outstanding records while on parole, ultimately are pardoned and continue to live as useful and productive citizens."

Attorney General Edmund G. Brown, of California, has stated:

"I have now been in law enforcement for some 12 years. I have grave doubts as to the efficacy of capital punishment. As a matter of fact, I think that it could well promote violence rather than deter it."

Attorney General Don Eastvold, of Washington, says:

"Those who advocate the imposition of the supreme penalty insist that it is justified as a deterrent to similar crimes. The evidence available to support this view is not convincing."

The attorney general of Utah, E. R. Callister, states:

"My opposition to capital punishment is based on the fact that this type of punishment is not fulfilling its purpose. In other words, it does not seem to be a deterrent to crimes of violence, and in many instances relegates the convicted murderer to the position of a martyr."

The evidence mounts. The death penalty solves nothing.

In the United Kingdom the criminal addict is not recognized. Addicts are treated by physicians and given prescriptions by reputable pharmacists. As a result there are only 279 known addicts and probably very few unknown. The problem has thus been effectively removed from the realm of the underworld.

I repeat, prevention and rehabilitation are the only practical approaches. Rehabilitate the addict without drugs if you can, or with them if you must. Kill one and a dozen others spring up to take his place.

We may be gripped by the horror of the whole subject, but we must not lose sight in our outrage of what procedures would be most effective and realistic. It is too easy to sink into the clouds of emotion.

Sincerely yours,

EMANUEL CELLER.

ADDICT'S STORY: YOU CAN ALWAYS FIND A PUSHER

(By Jess Stearn)

Living in the suburbs was a great inconvenience for Frankie, since he had to journey into New York every day for his shot of heroin.

"It got so that I finally had to get myself a commutation ticket," said the 23-year-old addict. "I needed every dollar I could for the drugs."

Frankie, who comes of good old-line stock, frequently varied his itinerary. Sometimes he stalked Eighth Avenue, from 14th to 59th, sometimes Broadway, and sometimes Harlem, Spanish Harlem and the old Harlem.

"It was expensive traveling," said Frankie, "but I had no choice—the stuff you got in my town was cut so much that it didn't give me a boost anymore."

Frankie never returned home without his fix. "If you look hard enough you can always find a pusher," he said. "I don't know how they do it, but they always seem able to spot me.

"The other night I thought I'd try Broadway. I was standing outside this place, minding my business, when a guy walks up to me and says:

" 'What's happening?' "

Frankie gave him a searching look.

"Nothing's shaking," he replied.

The guy was satisfied.

COMPLETES SALE IN OLD ASHCAN

"He told me to meet him in a hall around the corner, asked me for $15, and then told me I'd find what I was looking for up forward in an old ashcan."

The word dope, or heroin, was not once mentioned.

Frankie has already been in jail twice for addiction, and is not keen on taking risks, particularly since the recent congressional and State stiffening of penalties for pushers and addicts alike.

"I'd rather get all I needed every week," he said, "but I have no place to bring it but home, and my mother is always turning the house upside down looking for needles, syringes, and the stuff itself—she doesn't trust me when I say I'm off.

"I'd rather live in New York, so I wouldn't have to make that trip every day, but living home I don't pay room and board and that money goes for the stuff. As it is, my job doesn't carry it all. I make $90 a week as an electrician's helper and I need another $25 or so to buy what I need."

DAD'S ALWAYS GOOD FOR EXTRA DOUGH

"My father," he said, "is the only one in the family who has not given up on me. I can nearly always go to him and get an extra $10 or $20, saying I need it for a date.

"I don't think he believes me, but he's afraid that if he doesn't give it to me, I'll go out and get it some other way. He just says to me, 'Frankie, I hope you're telling me the truth.'

"Sometimes I feel ashamed to think I'm deceiving the only person who has any faith in me, but I've never felt so much shame that I haven't felt the need for the stuff more.

"The rest of my family are fed up with me and I don't blame them. I'm the only one that ever got into trouble or went to jail, and sometimes I wonder if I really belong in the family, since my brothers and sisters are all respectable and doing well.

"Nobody could be more patient with me than my father. If he ever gives up on me, I don't know what I'll do. Maybe it's because he was an alcoholic once, and knows what I'm going through. My mother is pleasant, but she doesn't seem much interested. I guess having a husband an alcoholic for years, and then a son an addict, sort of tires a person out after a while.

"Once I thought about trying to get into that New York hospital (Riverside) for teenage addicts, but it didn't seem to help any of my buddies in New York. They were always swimming the river to get away from there or else shooting themselves up again. It was all right for rest, good food, and girls, I heard, but, hell, I could get all that at home."

SOMETIMES SORRY, TRIES TO QUIT IT

At regular intervals, since becoming an addict 8 years ago, Frankie is overcome by remorse and tries to quit.

"I had gone to this place because they cut the stuff right in front of you and you know you're not getting cheated. And that night I felt the need of a real stiff shot."

He grimaced as his mind went back to that night. "You never saw anything like that room before. The pusher who was an addict, had passed out and was lying on the bed. He had thrown up and he was lying in his own vomit. The stench was terrible.

"There were 3 or 4 little kids, crawling and toddling around the room, dirty and without any clothes on. You could have scraped the filth off them with a knife, and they obviously weren't housebroken.

"The mother—I guess she was the mother—was busy mixing the stuff. She had a mask over her face, so none of it would get in her nose and throat. That struck me kind of funny, a surgical mask with all that filth.

AFTER YOU GET FIX YOU JUST DON'T CARE

"I kept asking myself, as I sat there, what had ever happened to me. I came from a clean home, with clean parents, and here I was sitting in a place where things were crawling out of the walls, waiting for a fix.

"I almost got up and ran out, but all the time I was thinking of it I knew I wouldn't. As the woman was diluting the stuff, I could almost taste it. And once I got the fix, I knew I wouldn't care where I was."

Frankie shows few outward signs of addiction as yet. Except for the needle marks on his arms and his shifty eyes, I saw nothing unusual. He found it impossible to look me in the eye as he talked and he prefaced each remark with an apologetic, "I suppose you'll think I'm feeling sorry for myself, but——."

Although tall and muscular, in striking contrast to the usual frail type, he was beginning to find it increasingly difficult to handle his job.

"If I lose the job," he said, "I'm sunk, because I just have to have that money every week."

He dates occasionally, but isn't interested in women. Blushing, he acknowledged that he had never done more than casually neck with a girl, but hastened to add:

"Not that I'm funny or anything like that. But whenever I'm with girls I'm thinking of my next fix."

He has no marriage plans.

"No," he said, "I haven't thought about it in terms of making some woman unhappy. It would make me unhappy, though. I just don't see how I can support a wife—and the habit—at the same time."

And like so many of the new and growing crop of addicts he was barely in his teens when he started—just past 14.

HE'S HOOKED AND BECOMES A CROOK

He has searched for an answer himself, but hasn't found it. "It wasn't anything in my home, or like that," he said. "My mother and dad were both good to me and I had nearly anything I wanted.

"Maybe it was bad company, but they were just kids like myself. There were about a dozen guys in our crowd and we used to see each other around every night.

"When I took my first shot I didn't think I'd get hooked. Hell, I didn't see how anything like that could hook me. I got it from one of the kids in the crowd. He asked me if I wanted a thrill and I said yes. It cost me $3 for that first shot.

"I've heard a lot of stuff about pushers giving the kids the dope at first to get them hooked and then making them pay for it through the nose. But I haven't seen it work that way myself.

"I think the smart pushers don't try giving it to the kids now; most kids today would get suspicious of something they got for nothing, and pushers know that kids that get hooked will hook other kids. It makes their work easy for them."

Three months after that introductory offering, Frankie was thoroughly hooked. He had dropped out of school unknown to his parents and was engaged in a 2-man crime wave with another teen-age addict.

IN SEPARATE CELLS AND NO EXERCISE

"We did pretty good for a while," he said, "but one day without realizing it we took some stuff out of the police chief's house and there was hell to pay. They really went after us. You would have thought it was the biggest crime that ever happened. About every cop in town was on the case.

"They finally caught up to us through the pawnbroker we had peddled the stuff off to. And then they gave us a going-over until we admitted taking the stuff. By that time I would have admitted anything."

Frankie was 16 when he went to jail for the first time, charged, among other things, with addiction.

"Hell," he said, "you would have thought we were the most dangerous criminals in captivity. There were 2 or 3 of us and they put us in separate cells by ourselves and wouldn't let us out. The other prisoners exercised every day, but not us."

DO ANYTHING TO GET OFF, HE SAYS

"About every 2 or 3 weeks, they'd break down and take us out for air, and you should have seen how they guarded us. Guards stood by with sawed-off shotguns, and they had machineguns up on the walls in case we got violent.

"If it hadn't been so ridiculous it would have been comical. It shows how much they know about addicts. I've known lots of addicts and I've never known one that did anything violent—unless, of course, he was interrupted while he was stealing, or something like that.

"It's funny how they can deal with addicts all the time and know so little about them. Maybe they don't want to know. The last time I was arrested, I'd just been picked up on suspicion. I told the judge I had been off drugs for a while, but he said he'd take the narcotics agents' word for it.

" 'They're the best judge,' he said, 'of whether an addict's on drugs or not.'

"What a joke that was. They don't know any more about it than you or I do. Nobody knows anything about it. But I got sent away again, anyway. I suppose that made up for the times that nobody caught me. You get to be philosophical after a while."

Frankie suddenly paused and looked up, directing his gaze to the level of my shoulder. "Do you think," he asked, "a psychiatrist could help me?" He grimaced, "But I don't have the money."

"I don't know," I told him, "but I know a few who work with addicts and I could ask them."

I suggested he call the following afternoon.

That was 2 weeks ago and I haven't heard from Frankie. "It's lots easier," the psychiatrist said, "to talk about kicking drugs than do anything about it."

Private Enterprise Can Provide Best Form of Aid for Underdeveloped Countries

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE H. BENDER
OF OHIO
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BENDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the statement by me in aiding underdeveloped areas.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Perhaps the strongest single current running throughout the world today is the deeply rooted desire of hundreds of millions of people in undeveloped countries for improved standards of living. It underlies the revolutionary tides which have swept over large parts of the globe, and it poses a major problem for the so-called have nations with respect to their relations with the have-nots. Every consideration of our western tradition based upon the brotherhood of man urges us to lend our assistance to the efforts of those less fortunate than ourselves to improve their lot.

Mr. Harvey S. Firestone recently proposed in Hamburg, Germany, a constructive and relatively little used approach to the solution of this problem. His attitude is in direct keeping with the basic American view that private capital should be encouraged to initiate and to develop enterprises designed to lift the economic, social, and cultural life of underdeveloped nations. I am inserting into the RECORD this report of his talk as printed in the Journal of Commerce of June 18, 1956:

"BUSINESS URGED TO TAKE LEAD IN AIDING UNDEVELOPED AREAS

"HAMBURG.—'Private business and private capital should shoulder the task of providing financial and technical aid for development projects—especially in the less developed areas of the world.'

"This clarion call for the free enterprise system on the international plane was sounded here recently by 2 top businessmen, 1 American and 1 German. Before an impressive gathering of the German business community, come together in honor of the 100th anniversary of the Phoenix Gummiwerke AG of Hamburg-Harburg, Harvey S. Firestone, Jr., chairman of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. of Akron, Ohio, and Herman J. Abs, chief executive of the Sueddeutsche Bank of Frankfurt, warned against entrusting governments and government agencies with development plans.

"Eschew special privilege

"Both speakers agreed that private capital is willing, as it has been in the past, to assume the risks inherent in such projects, provided adequate guaranties exist for its protection in foreign countries, and it is not discriminated against. Stating that private capital does not seek special privilege, Mr. Firestone said that it will not go where it is uncertain of fair and friendly treatment.

"He urged that the treatymaking power of individual nations be used to create a climate beneficial to foreign investments, but that such treaties should be limited to establishing protection for foreign investments and should not interfere with foreign investments themselves.

"Mr. Abs, who recently became the first president of the newly formed Society To Promote the Protection of Foreign Investments, noted that German business must henceforth take a more active part in developing foreign national economies, particularly overseas, even though available funds are much smaller than those of the United States and the United Kingdom. So far German firms have rather hesitated to undertake such risks, mindful of considerable losses suffered in the past by confiscation and expropriation.

"As Mr. Firestone pointed out, there are strong incentives for both West German and American business to invest money in other nations, as both countries must rely on imports of countless vital raw materials, and many of these necessities come from the same nations now anxious to obtain aid.

The Firestone Corp. itself showed its willingness to assume risks when 6 years ago it concluded a comprehensive agreement with the Phoenix Co. of Hamburg, the first American tire company to do so. The Hamburg firm was headed then as it still is, by Otto A. Friedrich, one of West Germany's outstanding businessmen and a frequent adviser of his government in raw material and related matters.

"Urged magna carta

"Mr. Abs proposed that the Western nations conclude a multilateral treaty under which the signatory nations would provide equal treatment and protection to foreign investors. Such a magna carta of foreign investments would help stop the trend toward government planning and pave the way for economic development by private capital.

"Praising American economic aid and German-American economic cooperation he expressed particular satisfaction over a recent amendment to the Mutual Security Act of 1954, introduced by Congressman THOMAS J. DODD, Democrat, of Connecticut, and passed unanimously by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs which stresses the need for 'equitable treatment and protection of private investments of nations participating in the program under this act.' "

Increase of Price Supports on Farm Products

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM S. HILL
OF COLORADO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert a table on the increase of price supports on farm products as a result of the President's determination to give the farmer a break. Farm prices have reacted to this program and are increasing steadily, which will result in a much larger income for the farmer for 1956 over 1955.

The table follows:

Increase in price-support rate

Commodity	Previous announced program		Present program		Increase
	Support rate	Percent parity	Support rate	Percent parity	Support rate	Percent parity
Corn, bushel	$1.40	81	$1.50	86.2	$0.10	5.2
Wheat, do	1.81	76	2.00	83.7	.19	7.7
Grain sorghum, hundredweight	1.80	70	1.97	76.0	.17	6.0
Oats, bushel	.59	70	.65	76.0	.06	6.0
Barley, do	.93	70	1.02	76.0	.09	6.0
Rye, do	1.16	70	1.27	76.0	.11	6.0

Beef Broth on the Rocks

OF
HON. HARLAN HAGEN
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HAGEN. Mr. Speaker, beef broth on the rocks seemed to be a popular drink around the Capitol during the adjournment days of this 84th Congress.

The House of Representatives restaurant served the drink, courtesy of Representative OLIN TEAGUE, of Texas; and Representative JAMES M. QUIGLEY had a beef-broth fountain in his office, which was enjoyed by many of my thirsty colleagues, including myself and Mrs. Hagen.

This is illustrative of still another way the great American cattle industry can serve the Nation.

I can truthfully say that both my wife and I attest to the fact that iced beef broth is a gourmet's delight and should receive wide public acceptance.

The Republican Party on Its Record Is the Economy Party

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RALPH W. GWINN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. GWINN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I take this time to point out that Government reports covering appropriations for the past 12 fiscal years establish beyond question that the Republican Party by its record is entitled to be known as the economy party. I make this statement because of the records established by the Republican-controlled 80th and 83d Congresses.

According to Senate Document No. 158 of the 83d Congress, 2d session, the 80th Congress reduced the appropriations for fiscal 1948 and 1949 approximately $28 billion below the appropriations by the 79th Congress.

The 83d Congress reduced the appropriations more than $63 billion below the totals appropriated by the 82d Congress.

In the past 25 fiscal years our Federal budget has been balanced but three times, twice during the 80th Congress and again this year under the administration of President Eisenhower.

The table which follows show the amounts appropriated in each of the past 12 fiscal years, and was compiled by Mr. Paul O. Peters, of my office staff:

Appropriations, excluding payments from trust funds

DEMOCRATIC CONGRESS
79th Cong.:
1st sess., fiscal 1946	$69,780,137,109
2d sess., fiscal 1947	35,734,209,165
Total	105,514,346,275
REPUBLICAN CONGRESS
80th Cong.:
1st sess., fiscal 1948	35,982,837,708
2d sess., fiscal 1949	41,675,480,957
Total	77,658,368,665
DEMOCRATIC CONGRESS
81st Cong.:
1st sess., fiscal 1950	46,497,456,897
2d sess., fiscal 1951	81,045,040,411
Total	127,542,497,308
DEMOCRATIC CONGRESS
82d Cong.:
1st sess., fiscal 1952	101,117,768,897
2d sess., fiscal 1953	85,999,646,411
Total	187,117,415,308
REPUBLICAN CONGRESS
83d Cong.:
1st sess., fiscal 1954	65,156,254,797
2d sess., fiscal 1955	58,160,445,563
Total	123,316,700,360
DEMOCRATIC CONGRESS
84th Cong.:
1st sess., fiscal 1956	60,428,197,491
2d sess., fiscal 1957	68,138,077,423
Total	128,566,274,914
Grand total of appropriations	749,715,602,829

The appropriations during the 12 years exclude approximately $83,325,000,000 payable from trust fund receipts.

Appropriations by the 82d Congress were the greatest in history except for the $204,863,924,329 appropriated by the wartime 77th Congress.

PAUL O. PETERS.

Changes in the Immigration and Nationality Act, Which I Shall Reintroduce in the 85th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FRANCIS E. WALTER
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, during the 2d session of the 84th Congress, I worked out a legislative measure designed to take care of certain emergent situations which had arisen in the field of immigration and nationality under both the Immigration and Nationality Act and the Refugee Relief Act of 1953. My proposals constituted a comprehensive immigration bill, the effect of which, if enacted into law, would be to alleviate certain hardships affecting immigrants and citizens of this country without destroying the basis of our immigration laws.

Briefly, my proposals would—

First. Liberalize the restrictions applicable to immigrants who have committed petty offenses, although such offenses could be classified as felonies under foreign law;

Second. Wipe out the "mortgages" imposed on certain small immigration quotas by the Displaced Persons Acts of 1948 and of 1950, under which this country has admitted over 400,000 immigrants;

Third. Forgive the refugees the misrepresentations made while applying for immigration visas if such misrepresentations were prompted by their fear to be forcibly repatriated to countries under Communist domination;

Fourth. Permit the Secretary of State and the Attorney General to waive in their discretion and on a basis of reciprocity the fingerprinting requirements of our immigration laws in the interest of facilitating foreign travel and exchange of visitors, students, artists, and so forth;

Fifth. Admit under proper safeguards up to 1,200 immigrants afflicted with tuberculosis in order to prevent separation of families;

Sixth. Permit expeditious naturalization of alien children adopted by citizens of the United States who are stationed abroad either in the service or in the employment of the Government of the United States or an American institution, firm, corporation, religious organization, and so forth;

Seventh. Permit the entry of an additional 5,000 war orphans adopted by citizens of this country, and to raise the maximum age of those orphans from 10 years to 14 years;

Eighth. Give the illegitimate child the same status under immigration laws—relating to the mother of such child—as the legitimate child has under existing law;

Ninth. Enable the immigrant's family to come to the United States in the same preferential status regardless of whether the family is accompanying the breadwinner or following to join him at some later time;

Tenth. Permit the issuance of around 40,000 nonquota visas to refugees and escapees from behind the Iron Curtain without additional restrictions provided in the 1953 law and without "cutting off" the visas at any particular time, thus opening the doors to the United States to those refugees who might even in the future dare their Communist oppressors and cross the Iron Curtain; and Eleventh. Help the American wool growing industry by admitting an additional 350 skilled sheepherders from Spain.

To this carefully worked out program, the Senate added a provision which, in permitting the redistribution of immigration quotas, represents a most drastic departure from the principles of our immigration laws. The House of Representatives was faced with this wholly unexpected basic change of the foundation upon which our immigration policy has stood for over 30 years just 5 hours before the adjournment of the 84th Congress. No hearings were held on this provision. The House was totally unprepared to vote for it in the last minute rush, the Committee on the Judiciary never had this proposal before them, and the hard-working 5-member subcommittee in charge of legislation affecting immigration and nationality had similarly no opportunity to even read the Senate amendment available to the membership of the House in but 1 mimeographed copy.

This hastily conceived Senate amendment was attached to my 11-point immigration and refugee relief program, thus dooming this urgently needed and carefully worked out—with the full participation of the leadership of both parties—proposal.

Under the circumstances, it is my intention to reintroduce in the 85th Congress, on the day it convenes, my emergency proposal and shortly after the Committee on the Judiciary is organized to commence hearings at which every interested party will have an opportunity to bring before us the accusations, the grievances, the alleged inequities, and the proposed amendments to the Immigration and Nationality Act.

In my opinion, that law has worked very well and to the benefit of the United States in the 4 years that passed since it was placed on our statute books. I am familiar with the need of certain technical changes but before I submit my own proposals, I want the Congress and the public opinion at large to be given an opportunity to acquaint themselves fully with the problem and to ascertain how much of the propaganda leveled against the Immigration and Nationality Act is prompted by purely political consideration, how much of it stems from those who would sacrifice the security, the welfare, and the economy of this country on the altar of foreign interests, and how much of it is based on humanitarian and justifiable legal grounds.

I believe that extensive public hearings will permit us to write a set of amendments to the Immigration and Nationality Act if the case for such amendments is made.

Benefits for Alaska

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. E. L. BARTLETT
DELEGATE FROM ALASKA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, much constructive action was taken by the 84th Congress in behalf of Alaska. Some of the legislation passed and signed into law certainly ranks as equal in importance to any adopted since the Organic Act of 1912.

Of course, the order of importance is a matter of subjective judgment. To the man seeking a homestead title which he could obtain only by action of Congress, certainly the legislation of most particular consequence would be the bill concerning him personally. However, in the broader field affecting the general public interest, there were four legislative gains long needed by the Territory, the effects of which will be beneficial and lasting.

Without attempting to assign any order of priority in respect to these four, I immediately think of the Alaska Mental Health Act. That law, long sought and achieved after almost incredible difficulty, places legislative responsibility for the care of Alaska's mentally ill where it properly should be—with the Territorial government. It provides that the ultimate taking over by the Territory of the financial costs with temporary grants-in-aid and help in building institutions coming from the Federal Government. It also permits commitment procedures to be established by the Territory.

Then, of course, Alaska's inclusion in the Federal-Aid Highway System through adoption of an amendment to the National Highway Act of 1956 is really monumental. Before this time Alaska only among the States, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico was denied the benefits of the national law. Now we can go forward and build the roads which are so necessary to the opening up for settlement of that vast country.

Next, the 84th Congress gave the Territorial government authority for the first time to issue bonds for needed public improvements. The people of Alaska in a referendum vote previously taken had sought the right to issue bonds for school buildings. The law was enlarged in scope to include other public improvements and will, I am confident, serve a most useful purpose.

In the 1st session of the 84th Congress a bill was enacted into law abolishing the 80-rod shore-space reservation. This had been a barrier to settlement and its repeal had long been sought. The old law provided that homesteads, for example, on shore space of whatever kind it might have been, must be separated by at least a quarter of a mile. It is not necessary to point out how crippling this was in a country with such vast expanses of shorelands. True enough, the old law provided that the Secretary of the Interior had the right to waive the requirement, but Alaskans are mindful that for a long period no such waiver was granted and that circumstance might rise again, so the law repealing the 80-rod provision was a desired and a welcome one.

In the 2 sessions of the last Congress appropriations amounting to $304,025,774 were made for operations of the Federal Government in Alaska.

Of especial significance was the fact that a breakthrough came in respect to appropriations for desperately needed river and harbor projects in Alaska. In the first session, the President's budget message had asked for funds for the Seward Harbor of Refuge and for planning flood-control work on Gold Creek, in Juneau. But the Congress made additional appropriations and as a consequence small boat harbors are being built in Petersburg, Metlakatla, and Wrangell. This year the President's budget message asked for money for the Bar Point river and harbor project at Ketchikan, for the Gold Creek flood-control work and the Valdez breakwaters. Again Congress, on its own motion, made additional projects possible. This means that the small-boat basin and breakwater at Pelican will be constructed soon; that Craig will have a mooring basin; that the Elfin Cove channel will be deepened; that the Kodiak small-boat basin will be started with an initial appropriation of $500,000; and that further planning will be done with respect to the needed small-boat basin at Sitka. I am also delighted to report that the House Public Works Committee approved my resolution to make possible a flood survey of the Matanuska River. Also, and in this same field, the omnibus navigation and flood-control legislation of the 84th Congress authorized navigation and flood-control projects for Juneau, Douglas, Naknek River, Dillingham, and the Chena River.

A new Alaska native health service 50-bed hospital at Kotzebue will be constructed, thanks to appropriations made by the 84th Congress.

The Housing Act of 1956 will be of real benefit to Alaska because it lifts the ceiling of $15,000 on Federal National Mortgage Association mortgages for Alaska and extends to the Territory loans under the public facilities program.

These are only a few of the legislative aids given to Alaska by this Congress.

I am proud to say that there were enacted in the 84th Congress 26 public laws which either bore my name or were introduced in the Senate at my request. The same two sessions witnessed the enactment of 19 private bills introduced by me. Especially heart-warming so far as I was personally concerned was the legislation which permitted a young Filipino resident of Ketchikan to become a citizen of the United States and another private bill which will make it possible for Miss Sue Kennedy of Juneau to bring two Greek children she has adopted to Alaska. These do not fall, naturally enough, in the list of accomplishments affecting broad groups of people, but I assure you that they bring a glow to one such as myself who is able to make a contribution in bringing happiness to individual human beings.

Mr. Speaker, I have spoken about how many bills I sponsored in the 84th Congress which have become law. It might be of interest to record that since I came here in the 79th Congress and including the 84th, 109 bills of mine or their companions in the Senate have become public laws and 55 private bills introduced by me were enacted, making a grand total of 164.

Mr. Speaker, I am sensible of the fact that all these bills for Alaska were translated from mere words into the law books of the United States through splendid cooperation which has been given me. I appreciate it very deeply. This cooperation has come from both sides of the political aisle. For my own personal part during the almost 12 years I have been in Washington seeking to serve the people of Alaska I have come to hold in ever-increasing respect and affection those Members, both Democratic and Republican, who have given so freely of their time and assistance in bringing about legislative gains for a Territory and people so distant from so many of them. Their friendship has been not only a continuous pleasure to me but has been vitally important to the welfare of the Territory of Alaska.

Record of the 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MELVIN PRICE
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, the 84th Congress has completed its 2d session and, unless it should unexpectedly be called back for a special session, has completed its record for the period since its election in November 1954. The record is one of substantial achievement, I think.

The great highway construction program has been correctly called the largest public works project of all recorded history. We made major improvements in the social-security system despite the intense opposition of the Eisenhower administration. We raised the minimum wage for workers engaged in production for interstate commerce from 75 cents to $1 an hour—again, against the administration's opposition.

There were things we did not do. We failed to pass a desperately needed school-aid bill, and it was a serious failure. The House passed but the Senate failed to pass a minimum civil-rights bill. These are subjects that must be urgently considered by the 85th Congress meeting next January.

We are going into a new presidential and congressional campaign, and the nominating conventions will meet shortly in Chicago and San Francisco.

It is appropriate to emphasize again, as I did last year, how wrong President Eisenhower was in 1954 in predicting a political cold war unless the people followed his desires and elected a Republican-controlled Congress.

The people elected a Democratic Congress instead—and there has been no political cold war.

On foreign policy, Democrats in Congress this year as last gave the President essential support at critical moments when he could not depend upon his own Republicans. Bipartisanship in foreign policy—initiated as a modern approach under President Roosevelt and successfully maintained under President Truman's leadership—has remained the keynote of our Democratic program.

When leading Republican Congressmen were trying to force the President into rash actions in Indochina, along the China coast and in other areas, we Democrats filed no ugly charges of "appeasement" when he refused. We gave him the essential legislative backing he needed. It was a Democrat, the retiring veteran Senator WALTER F. GEORGE, of Georgia, who took the lead in building a climate of opinion that made it possible for the President to meet the Russians in Geneva.

The GOP campaign orators will talk a lot in the next 3 months about "peace" as their party's issue. But without Senator GEORGE and the remainder of congressional Democrats, General Eisenhower would never have dared go to Geneva. The attitude of many Republicans toward their own President is indicated by a Senate vote almost on the eve of adjournment. Mr. Eisenhower nominated Paul G. Hoffman as a delegate to the United Nations General Assembly, and his own Republicans violently attacked him. Senate Democrats voted 39 to 6 to express their confidence in the President's judgment and confirm the nomination. But the minority Republicans, with their bitter-end massive right-wing, threw 16 votes against Hoffman.

It was the right-wing Republicans, all through the sessions, who waged "political cold war" on the President. On foreign policy, when we Democrats believed on principle that he was right, we upheld and sustained him without a thought of partisanship.

We believe that American foreign policy has been bungled and mangled by the almost incredible contradictions on "neutralism" and "neutrals," for example, by the President, Vice President NIXON, and Secretary of State John Foster Dulles. These contradictions and this bungling will be part of the forthcoming political campaign. But not a single responsible Democratic leader has waged "political cold war."

In the field of domestic policy, Democrats changed, corrected, revised, and sometimes defeated Eisenhower proposals—and for that we have no apologies.

We heard a lot, from time to time, about how the President wanted to be "conservative in economic affairs, liberal toward people." Let us see how this slogan has been dishonored in practice, and how Democrats have had to force through "liberalism toward people" against administrative opposition. There are notable examples.

When legislation to increase the minimum wage was pending in 1955, the administration fought to hold the higher rate to 90 cents an hour. Labor Secretary James P. Mitchell testified formally that an increase to $1 an hour would throw industry into bankruptcy, create unemployment, and do more harm than good.

We Democrats refused to accept this advice, because the facts based on the Government's own statistical data did not support it. We insisted that a minimum of $1 an hour was equitable and we did not believe it would cause bankruptcies and joblessness. Well, a few months after the $1 minimum became effective last March 1, Mitchell acknowledged that business had absorbed it, that it had not caused bankruptcy, that it had not thrown people out of jobs.

Who was liberal toward people and sensible in the economic field—the Eisenhower administration or the Democrats?

Look at social security. The House passed a bill in 1955 to provide disability benefits for the totally and permanently disabled at age 50, to lower the pension-eligibility age of women, to grant assistance for disabled children beyond the age of 18. The Senate this year revised the program somewhat and added higher Federal grants to the States for old-age assistance. The bill on this compromise basis was accepted by both Houses and sent to the White House.

This was liberalism toward people in a practical sense. Disability insurance has long been needed; higher old-age grants have been needed; a lower retirement age for women is justified on the basis of the age differential between most husbands and wives.

Yet the administration fought these proposals. It was understandable that the departed Secretary Oveta Culp Hobby—the Cabinet member who bungled the Salk polio vaccine program—should have opposed them. But so did her successor this year, Secretary Marion B. Folsom. He actually opposed programs as an Eisenhower official that he had advocated, years earlier, as a private citizen and member of the chamber of commerce. We Democrats had to pass the social security bill in the teeth of administration hostility and in the face of the President's power to veto.

Liberalism toward people? How about the tax bill? Democrats in the House last year passed a bill, against Republican opposition, to raise exemptions for Federal income-tax purposes from $600 to $700 per person. The effect would have been to reduce the income-tax bill of the average family of 5 by $100. But the administration fought it, and even a modified bill was beaten in the Senate. The administration gave corporations and wealthy taxpayers a $7 billion tax cut in the Republican 83d Congress when the Government had a deficit. It opposed tax relief for low-income and middle-income families in the 84th Congress even though our budget surplus was nearly $2 billion in the last fiscal year.

Democratic pressure in the 84th Congress sometimes produced impressive results, even though the administration did not truly feel liberal toward people.

The President vetoed our first bill to restore the income of farmers. But his Secretary of Agriculture, Ezra Taft Benson, was compelled to raise support prices for this year far above what he desired. He was compelled to adopt the soil-bank plan that we Democrats pushed through even though as late as September of last year the Agriculture Department attacked it as worthless. The second farm bill, though it falls short, is vastly superior to the Benson plan to drive marginal farm families off their land.

The story of pay raises for Federal employees is instructive. Federal Government salaries had slipped badly in relation to those of other workers and because of inflation. The President vetoed a bill to raise salaries by an average of 3.5 percent. Yet the 84th Congress, under Democrats, was able to apply enough pressure to force him progressively to announce willingness to accept ever larger percentages—and finally to sign a bill for 7.1 percent.

The exceedingly narrow majorities by which Democrats controlled Congress sometimes made it impossible for us to achieve desirable things.

The Hells Canyon bill fell through, and because of this failure other great and important Federal projects to make full use of our water resources and develop river valleys were beaten.

On the other hand, we were able to check the intense efforts of the administration to destroy our 50-year-old Federal power policies which aid reclamation and give preference in Federal power to rural co-ops and publicly owned electric-distributing systems. A large group of Georgia co-ops, for example, finally got their rights to power from the Clark Hill Dam after resisting for 3 years Interior Department attempts to compel them to surrender their rights.

On the Dixon-Yates issue, I am especially pleased at the later trend of events. Representative CHET HOLIFIELD, of California, and I raised the first warning flags, in 1954, that the administration was attempting to cripple the TVA by having the Atomic Energy Commission sign a contract with the Dixon-Yates combine to furnish power to the city of Memphis, a TVA community.

President Eisenhower finally canceled the contract, after investigations showed that his subordinates had falsified records and otherwise been guilty of inconsistencies, improprieties, and lack of candor. But it took him nearly a year to cancel, and the record shows that if the President had listened to Democrats he would have got out of the "mess" more quickly.

Now the Dixon-Yates combine is suing the Government for damages of $3.5 million, and Mr. Eisenhower's own Justice Department in fighting the claim has made damaging admissions. The Department has told a Federal court that the whole contract was illegal to begin with—and this contradicts an official opinion by Attorney General Brownell in 1954.

The Department has told the court that in 1954, when the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy approved a waiver of the right of Congress to study the contract, the Republican majority of that year had acted illegally. It has admitted, in effect, that when we Democrats regained control of the committee in 1955 and repudiated the waiver we acted correctly and legally.

The Justice Department has adopted all our arguments about the conflict-of-interest activities of the investment banker brought into the Government as an adviser to cook up the scheme to destroy the TVA. The activities of this banker alone, now says the Department, were enough to void the purported contract.

It is a sad episode. I am, however, a member of the joint congressional committee, and the episode at least gave me a clear firsthand look at the domination of the Eisenhower administration by a single economic group—the big-business men and big-business bankers and lawyers—who try to work their desires behind the protective shield offered them by the President's reputation.

Where we failed in this Congress, it was because Democratic majorities were not big enough and because the Republicans, while paying lip service to their President, support him really only when he does what they please.

The collapse of the school-aid bill is a key example. Mr. Eisenhower, after 3 bewildering years of delay, finally recommended an almost adequate program. Our own program was better—the bill sponsored by Representative KELLEY of Pennsylvania proposed more money more quickly.

Almost any bill would have been better than none. But Republican Members of the House ignored the President's request for action. They voted against the bill on final passage.

The great majority of Democrats voted for passage of the bill. But the President had no observable influence on members of his own party.

In housing, the usual pattern was observable. The President asked an inadequate program; the Senate voted a much bigger program—and then Republicans on the House Rules Committee bottled up the bill until the closing days of the session. Democrats voted 4 to 2 to report out a better bill than the President's, although one less liberal than the Senate's. All four Republicans voted against reporting it, and the logjam could not be broken until Democrats agreed to compromise for the sake of getting something.

On the highway bill, however, we were able to salvage a great deal. The Democratic majority flatly turned down the President's proposal to finance new roads by long-term bonds offering $11.5 billion in interest charges to bankers. We insisted on financing roads on a pay-as-we-go system, and we will get the roads without unnecessary payments in interest from the people's taxes.

It has been instructive to us to see where the administration stands and fights and where it merely pays lip service to programs.

It did not stand and fight on the school-aid bill. GOP Floor Leader MARTIN of Massachusetts could not possibly have led his drive to defeat it, had the full power of the White House been used with him.

But the Republican White House used all its power to kill tax relief, to kill the big Federal Hells Canyon Dam and to try to kill the social-security bill. Telephone calls went from the White House to important Members, the President's emissaries were on Capitol Hill working hard against the bills. Within an hour or two of the key Senate vote on disability insurance, four Republican Senators who had previously promised to vote for the measure felt compelled to change their minds, and the proposal barely passed. A comparable amount of pressure was applied to beating 90 percent farm-price supports.

Mr. Eisenhower was a part-time President long before his two illnesses. But the White House staff is always present—and the things the staff demands and opposes, and how it makes its desires known, how hard it fights, are the key to this administration.

Under the excellent Democratic leadership of House Speaker SAM RAYBURN and Floor Leader JOHN W. MCCORMACK, with Senator LYNDON JOHNSON in the Senate, the ordinary business of Government has been handled skillfully and speedily. The necessary appropriations bills went through this year earlier than in any year in recent history. The congressional machinery was kept in excellent condition.

My own special legislative interests have been in relation to my work as a member of the Armed Services Committee and the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Research and Development, I arranged for an authoritative House document warning that the Soviet Union is gaining a tremendous jump in the training of engineers, scientists, and technicians.

The United States cannot afford to let the Soviets train twice as many engineers and scientists as we do—but that is what we are seeing happen.

We must have a great breakthrough in our concepts: we must spend Government money, if necessary, to encourage bright young students and to expand the scientific and engineering schools of our universities. This is a field in which budget-balancing concepts cannot be allowed to dominate.

As chairman of a subcommittee of the Armed Services Committee, I traveled to Okinawa to study the problems involved in the desire of our military forces there for more land and the need of the Okinawan people to grow crops for food. It is my hope that our report laid the basis for compromises that will let the people of the trusted island use their arable land for food without limiting our forces to the point of weakness.

I traveled to Geneva, also, for the first United Nations conference on the peaceful uses of atomic energy. We learned there much to disturb us about Russian success in developing nuclear power reactors larger than any we yet have in this country.

I was deeply disappointed, therefore, that the Gore-Holifield bill to direct our AEC to build nuclear power reactors was beaten by the combined opposition of President Eisenhower, his Republicans in Congress, and his AEC Chairman, Admiral Lewis Strauss.

Our private utilities are not yet ready to underwrite the expense and risks involved in experimental power reactors, and the Government therefore should do the job. Eisenhower-Strauss opposition to AEC-built reactors seems grossly shortsighted in relation to Soviet advances in the nuclear power field.

Also, from the Armed Services Committee, I played some part in persuading the administration—once again—to stop cutting airpower dangerously in order to balance the budget. The administration itself asked for $1 billion more than it originally proposed this year for the services, and in Congress we added $900 million more.

The country is rich and we can afford what we must spend for defense. President Eisenhower is a military man, but when he lets budget-minded businessmen control his decisions on defense he is not acting properly in exercising the functions in the civilian high command.

We in the Congress, in any case, have our own responsibility to provide for the common defense. We cannot abdicate this responsibility—and we have not done so—to anyone else.

Senate Leadership

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. MIKE MANSFIELD

OF MONTANA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement by me on the Senate leadership.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MANSFIELD

During the last hours of the 2d session of the 84th Congress I had hoped to be able to take the floor for a few minutes to express my high regard and great respect for the legislative leaders of our two great political parties. The press of adjournment, however, made this impossible.

The majority leader, Senator LYNDON JOHNSON, has once again demonstrated his great and all-embracing grasp in matters affecting legislative procedure. He has been uniformly considerate and courteous to all members in his own party and I am certain to the membership of the Republican Party as well. His magnetism, his skill, his understanding have been in large part responsible for the responsible attitude that the Democratic Party has taken during the 83d and the 84th Congresses. He has tried to understand our individual problems and he has cooperated to the fullest extent possible in seeing to it that every Member was given every possible consideration. He has proved to the country that, despite his severe heart attack of over a year ago, he is once again his old self and that he is able to carry on his duties as effectively and expeditiously as before. We are thankful for his complete recovery and we look forward to serving with him and under him when the 85th Congress convenes.

The minority leader, Senator WILLIAM KNOWLAND, has, as always, displayed his outstanding integrity, honesty, and consideration of his fellow Members. He, too, has been uniformly courteous and has worked hand in hand with Senator JOHNSON in carrying through the legislation which has been before the Senate and he, along with the majority leader, has kept alive the traditions of decency, fair play, and honest debate throughout the two Congresses. The patience of the majority and minority leaders has been tried at times, I know, but they have always been able to overcome difficulties, to explain to the membership what the situation was, and to emerge with greater stature than before.

As we look back on the 84th Congress, we realize more than ever the greatness of the leadership of these two men and we are thankful to them that in time of crisis the Nation is blessed with a partnership of this kind which has maintained congressional integrity and kept the standards of the Senate at a high level.

To LYNDON JOHNSON and BILL KNOWLAND I want to express my thanks for their fine leadership and friendship, their courtesy and consideration. They are real assets and a great credit to our country, their respective parties, and to the Senate of the United States.

Swiss Independence Day

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EMANUEL CELLER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, Swiss Independence Day will be celebrated on August 1, and I would like to take this opportunity to extend my greetings to the Swiss Republic. This anniversary will represent the 665th of the founding of the modern Swiss Republic. More than 6½ centuries ago, the Swiss people struck off the shackles of despotism and tyranny and began the long ascent toward governments in which the rule of people is supreme. The Swiss philosophy of democracy fired the revolutions against despotism in France, Italy, and elsewhere. It set the framework for constitutional democracy in the United States.

Today, Switzerland's people, of German, French, and Italian ancestry, live, work, and prosper together, solving their problems in the open, democratic tradition.

Many of the world's modern humanitarian projects—such as the Red Cross and the World Health Organization—have originated and make their home in that country. Similarly, other agencies in the service of mankind have located there. For example, the League of Nations, the first world peace organization founded on the plans and ideals of Woodrow Wilson, made its headquarters in Switzerland.

Throughout America today we find the descendants of the hardy Swiss immigrants. One of their sons was Albert Gallatin, who served as Secretary of the Treasury and represented the United States abroad on many diplomatic missions. He was an early and vigorous proponent of increased foreign trade for the United States.

Modern-day Switzerland is one of the most constructive forces in the promotion of world trade. Because she is poor in land resources, ores, metals, and other raw materials, Switzerland has concentrated on science, skill, and industry upon which to found one of the most vigorous trade economies in the world today. In this manner, Switzerland has become the world-acclaimed source for the highest quality watches, textiles, precision instruments, and other commodities. Relying totally on free competition in a free market, they have won an excellent market in the United States for their products. By so doing they have also enriched American export economy because the Swiss have invariably permitted the United States to acquire a surplus in our trade with that country. Today, after 20 years of Swiss-American reciprocal trade, a concept fathered by Cordell Hull, the United States has accumulated a trade profit in the form of a surplus of more than one-half billion dollars.

Americans of Swiss descent greatly resent the Republican administration's series of decisions which harass Swiss-American trade by increasing tariff on Swiss products, including their watches, which constitute the lifeblood of Switzerland. And they are happy that the recent report of the Joint Economic Committee of the Democratic Congress stated that these Republican trade restrictions represent an undue burden on consumers, on other industries, and on the trade of the free world.

Tolerance in Public Life Exemplified in Ireland

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY
OF WYOMING
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a recent event in one of our sister democracies, a land with which I claim some ties of descent, is, I believe, worthy of note here in the Congress of the United States. I refer to the election of the Honorable Robert Briscoe as lord mayor of Dublin.

Mr. Briscoe is one of the outstanding Irish patriots of today; he is also an orthodox Jew. At a time when countless persons throughout the world are being persecuted for their beliefs—religious, racial, and political—the election of Mr. Briscoe as lord mayor of the Irish capital is a refreshing and encouraging example of true democracy. If one were to label the Irish according to their religious faiths—which is not the Irish way, nor the American way—the Jewish group would surely be designated a "minority," since it is unofficially reported that only one-half of 1 percent of the population of Ireland is of the Jewish faith.

HIS ELECTION "MAGNIFICENT GESTURE" OF TOLERANCE, SAYS NEW LORD MAYOR

When he was invested with the great chain of office in the city hall the new lord mayor said:

It is a magnificent gesture that in Catholic Ireland it is possible to elect to this important office a man of a different faith, particularly my own, which proves that in this Catholic Ireland tolerance exists. I hope it will go forth from this chamber to the world that in a free Catholic Ireland there would be no intolerance. * * *

My participation as a soldier in the Republican army during the fight for freedom of Ireland from British control has justified the views I always held that the Irish people could be an example to the world in the spiritual sphere of life.

HE HAS LONG RECORD OF PATRIOTIC SERVICE

Mr. Briscoe, who is said to speak fluently and often on the subject of bringing about the union of the six northern counties of Ireland, has served with distinction in the Irish Parliament, the Dail Eireann, for 31 years, and as a member of the Dublin City Council during the same period. A long-time friend of that great Irish patriot, Eamon de Valera, Robert Briscoe, after the split in 1921, alined himself with that section of the Irish Republican Army which refused to accept the treaty. He later became a member of the Fianna Fail Party of which Mr. de Valera is the leader, and is now a member of the opposition headed by the former Prime Minister.

Active politically in Irish Government affairs, Mr. Briscoe is also active as an exponent of the Zionist movement. He is a friend of Chief Rabbi Herzog, of Jerusalem, who was formerly chief rabbi in Dublin, and has raised funds not only in Ireland but in other countries to further the cause of Zionism.

I am interested in Israel and pleased it is there—

He said recently:

I hope that in a time not too far distant, amicable relations will be resumed between old friends, the Jews and the Arabs.

The new lord mayor was born in Dublin 61 years ago. He started work as an electrical engineer and in later years has been instrumental in bringing capital into Ireland and in helping establish industry in the country. He has been associated, as director, with a number of the younger Irish industries, including the pharmaceutical industry. For many years chairman of the city corporation finance committee, in this capacity he worked hard to rid Dublin of its worst slums and to provide homes for the laboring people.

Mr. Briscoe married early in life Lillian Isaacs, also of a Dublin Jewish family, whom he had known from childhood. They have 7 children, 4 boys and 3 girls.

The lord mayor is known as a family man. He loves reading and good music and is a collector of pictures, particularly of still life and early Italians. For recreation he likes to go to Graystones on the east coast and go out in a boat sea fishing.

INVITATIONS TO VISIT UNITED STATES POUR IN TO LORD MAYOR

As soon as Mr. Briscoe's election as lord mayor of Dublin was announced, various groups of Irish-Americans in the United States began urging him to visit this country. John J. Sheehan, chairman of the St. Patrick's Day parade in New York, cabled him an invitation to review the 1957 parade, and many other invitations have poured from this country across the sea to the popular Irishman, who has many friends on this side of the Atlantic. One New Yorker is reported to have remarked that if Mr. Briscoe accepted all the invitations to speak here, he could embark on a lecture tour that would keep him out of Dublin for the rest of his term.

His Honor lived in the United States for a time when he was a young man and has been a visitor to the United States on various occasions, beginning in the early days of his country's struggle for independence, when he made several secret missions to this country to raise funds and arms for the rebels. He has also visited here in the interests of the Zionist cause.

I add my voice to the many that are extending invitations to Mayor Briscoe to come to these shores. I hope that the Capital City of the United States may soon welcome for a visit the lord mayor of the capital of Ireland.

I ask unanimous consent that an editorial published in the Leader, of Dublin, Ireland, dated July 7, 1956, may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TOLERANCE IN PUBLIC LIFE

The election of Alderman Robert Briscoe, T. D., to the lord mayoralty of Dublin, has evoked far more interest overseas than it has in the new chief citizen's own native city and country. This is a healthy symptom.

We take it for granted that the Fianna Fail nominee should have as good a chance as the votes give him to be elected to his present high office. Outside the country the whole interest is in the fact of Catholic Dublin having a Jewish lord mayor. It can fairly be said that Alderman Briscoe's religion was at no stage a factor in the contest. He was opposed and supported by men of varying faiths. The very fact the election was so conducted is proof that our Constitution is not a bouquet of pious hopes but a series of practical directives for the rational conduct of the Nation's affairs. Robert Briscoe's tenure of office in the Mansion House is and will be a standing challenge to those who, in their ignorance and prejudice, accuse us here in free Ireland of running a clerical-fascist state. It will be more. It will be a standing reproach to those in the north-east corner of Ireland who have so rigged the machinery of government that it is not alone impossible for a member of the large Catholic majority of the city of Belfast to attain to the mayoralty but even for representatives of the overwhelming Catholic majority of the city of Derry or of the substantial Catholic majorities of Armagh and other centers in the six counties to attain to the highest civic office. This point was well and forcefully brought out by Mr. Hugh McAteer, Member of Parliament for Derry City, in a telegram of congratulation to Alderman Briscoe—and one quoted by the lord mayor in an interview with a representative of a great American newspaper.

Alderman Briscoe took the same opportunity of reminding people at home and abroad that Irish Catholics have had an unblemished record for their treatment of religious minorities. Incidents such as that recently quoted where agents of the sect known as Jehovah's Witnesses were forcibly expelled from the village of Clonlara near Killaloe do not materially affect his thesis. Such people are not content to make their doctrines known in a normal way. They have been in trouble in their country of origin, the United States, for their grossly insulting criticisms not alone of the Catholic religion but of the faith and practice of Protestants of many different shades of belief and for the methods—amounting to invasion of the fortress of the home—which they employ to put their "message" over. If their organization has at the same time been declared illegal in Canada and in countries beyond the Iron Curtain that is no proof that Canada is Communist or intolerant.

It is important for us in Ireland to guard against any and every tendency—even when the situation calls as it were for measures of self-defense—to use our numerical power as Catholics or Protestants to the detriment of minority groups. It is apparent, for instance, that inside the Protestant body generally in the six counties a split is developing mainly on the schools question and the appointment of teachers to the so-called transferred schools. Church of Ireland spokesmen are citing cases where the Presbyterians are squeezing out church members from posts even where parents and children in the area are in the large part of non-Presbyterian affiliation. That sort of thing is destructive of that internal peace in the community which should be a prime mark of Christian life. It can give no pleasure to the Catholics of the north, already suffering under other forms of discrimination or to those in the south whose memories of near-persecution, economic and political, are all too fresh.

Ireland, north and south, is in a position to be an example to the world. With a population overwhelmingly composed of practicing Christians, with constitutional guaranties, even in the north, of fair play for all men of whatever creed, our people should consciously set out to create a tenor of life in which religious discrimination would be so little known as to be hardly worth mentioning in any discussion of our affairs, when the election of a Catholic lord mayor of Belfast would be of as little internal interest as the election of a Jewish or Protestant lord mayor of Dublin.

Work of the Agriculture Committee

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HARLAN HAGEN
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HAGEN. Mr. Speaker, finally I make brief comment on the work of the Agriculture Committee of which I am the only California member. We enacted these laws of particular interest to California: Put a floor under 1957 and 1958 national cotton acreages with the result of about 33,000 additional cotton acres in California in 1957 alone; extended the Sugar Act with a formula expanding domestic quotas including an estimated added 25,000 of beet acres in 1957; streamlined the PCA lending program; liberalized Farmers' Home Administration lending programs for the benefit of small farms; and expanded the school milk program.

S. 4046, Amending Certain Provisions of the Trading With the Enemy Act

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS C. HENNINGS, JR.
OF MISSOURI
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a brief statement concerning S. 4046.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR HENNINGS

On June 13 the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] introduced S. 4046. That bill proposes an amendment to the provisions of the Trading With the Enemy Act and is designed to eliminate certain difficulties which have arisen in the administration of Public Law 626, 83d Congress, 2d session. Public Law 626 arose out of a bill which I introduced in the Senate on my own behalf, and on behalf of Senators DIRKSEN and LANGER. I am therefore greatly interested in S. 4046, which would assist materially in carrying out the purposes of existing legislation. Senator LANGER has authorized me to state that he joins in these remarks.

Public Law 626 was addressed to the problem of so-called heirless property in the United States. It established a procedure under which the President of the United States could designate a successor organization which could lay claim to this property. The property in question was that which had been vested by the custodial authorities of the United States, but which, in fact, belonged not to enemies of the United States but to persons who had been persecuted by the Nazis for political, racial, or religious reasons. Such persons, if alive, would have been eligible, under long-standing provisions of the Trading With the Enemy Act, to claim and obtain the return of their property; and this right was transferable to legal successors in interest. In many situations, however, the extermination policies of the Nazis were such that there were no survivors, and a substantial amount of unclaimed or heirless property remained.

Public Law 626 thus permitted the return of such property to a successor organization which could obtain return only upon certifying to the proper authorities that the property would be used for the relief of needy surviving persecutees. In addition, the successor organization was required to certify other conditions prohibiting the payment of any part of these funds for legal fees, requiring regular accounting, and so forth. The Jewish Restitution Successor Organization was duly authorized and designated by President Eisenhower as the successor organization under this legislation in January of 1955.

The administrative task involved in the filing of claims by the successor organization was an enormous one, particularly in view of the wholesale destruction of records and of the complexity inherent in the heirless property situation. Nevertheless, the Jewish Restitution Successor Organization did file numerous claims. These have been examined and discussed with the Office of Alien Property, and have now been boiled down to a relatively small number of claims. With respect to these claims which remain, however, the problems of proof—of finding documents which have been destroyed or which are located beyond the reach of the United States authorities, etc.—are almost insuperable.

The purpose of the proposed legislation is, therefore, to provide a method of expediting consideration and disposition of these meritorious claims. I am informed that, although Public Law 626 provided a ceiling amount of $3 million, the amount which would be involved under the proposed legislation would not be in excess of $865,000. The proposed bill would authorize and direct the proper executive agencies to settle by payment to the Jewish Restitution Successor Organization claims in cases in which the claim had been properly and timely filed, had been examined by the custodian, and information adverse to the claim had not been produced. Proper custodial charges would, of course, be levied against this property, as against other property which is returned by the custodian.

The proposed legislation will eliminate an administrative burden which will be costly both to the private charitable organizations concerned and to the Government of the United States. It is, I believe, essential if the intent of the Congress as already expressed in law is to be carried out. The legislation in question is necessary if the humanitarian purposes of Public Law 626 are to be accomplished; and it is hoped that this meritorious legislation can receive prompt and favorable consideration.

Congressman Wolverton's Policy in Representing Constituents

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, as we come to the close of this session of Congress it seems to me appropriate that I express to my constituents in the First Congressional District the privilege, as well as the pleasure, it has been to have had the opportunity of serving them in the Congress of the United States.

There has been no period in the history of the United States that has presented more difficult and fundamental questions to solve, other than at the foundation of our Government and later in its maintenance. Commencing with the depression with its numerous and varied problems, the recovery period, World War II, and the Korean conflict, it seems that the questions have not only been unique but extremely vital to the welfare of our Nation and its people.

The solution of these problems at times has required the adoption of new and untried policies. Because of this fact, serious divisions between political parties and within each of the political parties have been created. In all such instances it has been my policy to make my decisions and give support to proposed legislation on the basis of what seemed best for our people. Thus, I have never permitted mere partisan reasons to control my thought and action. The fundamental factor has been, as it should be, what is best for the people.

In the fulfillment of the same policy, I have always assumed and maintained, after the election was over and I had been elected, that thereby I was the representative of all the people in the First Congressional District, regardless of political affiliation, Democrat or Republican. By reason of the fact that there could be only one Representative for the district, I felt that it was incumbent upon me to represent all within the district to the best of my ability. This has been, and will continue to be my policy as long as I have the privilege and honor to represent the First Congressional District.

I have been encouraged in the fulfillment of this policy, during my entire service in Congress, by having been elected each time I have been a candidate by majorities that left no doubt that my attitude in this respect had the approval of the voters, regardless of party. I have been deeply appreciative of this manifest approval, and I have continually endeavored to merit the confidence that has been shown, and give assurance that it will be my constant endeavor to merit such confidence in the future as in the past.

It has been highly gratifying to me to realize that in so many instances it has been my privilege to advocate and support legislation, the subject of which has proved so helpful in promoting the welfare of our people.

As a people, we have much to be thankful for. Peace. Our boys are no longer dying on Korean battlefields, nor anywhere else in the world. We are enjoying the highest peak of employment with the highest average rate of wages at any time in the history of our country, and surpassing in production of goods for our people that of any other nation in the world. Less days of cessation of work than ever before in our history. There have been tax reductions, and more are planned as a result of a balanced budget that has been brought about by reducing expenditures of Government and the high degree of employment that exists. Additional health facilities have been provided, including construction of hospitals, nursing homes, and rehabilitation centers, and numerous and varied research programs, all of which have proved highly beneficial to our people. Increased benefits and extended coverage under social security with reduction of the eligibility age for women from 65 to 62 years of age, and reduction of eligibility age for all who are totally disabled from 65 to 50 years of age. Increased benefits under Railroad Retirement Act, including widows and survivors of railroad workers. Increased benefits for veterans, their widows, survivors, and dependents. Improved facilities for medical care for veterans. Improved housing for low-income groups, easier financing for all, and slum clearance. Legislation helpful to farmers and small-business men.

It has been particularly pleasing to have had a part in bringing a substantial program of work to the New York Shipbuilding Co., Camden, N. J. I know what it means to the families of the workers. I confess that there is nothing more pleasing to me than when I can be helpful to the people I represent.

What I have already mentioned does not begin to cover all the numerous and varied ways in which the welfare of our people have been promoted. It would be impossible to enumerate them all without extending these remarks unduly. Suffice it to say that in all the matters I have enumerated, and many more, including the help I have had the privilege to give to thousands of individuals in solving their problems and answering their inquiries, has given me a pleasure beyond words to express, and I assure my constituency of a continuing desire to be helpful at all times to the fullest extent of my opportunity and ability.

Surplus Property for Education and Health

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN W. McCORMACK
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I bring to the attention of the Members of this body and to the public a report of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare which shows that educational and health institutions were allocated personal property at cost value of $49,990,174 during the months of April, May, and June 1956. Real property in value of $5,314,668 was also allocated for these meritorious purposes, making a total of $55,304,842 in allocations for both personal and real property.

A summary for the entire fiscal year 1956 shows total allocations of $218,872,568 with personal property accounting for $204,497,417 and real property $14,375,151.

The summary follows:

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE,
July 27, 1956.

Mr. RALPH R. ROBERTS,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. ROBERTS: In accordance with section 5, Public Law 61, 84th Congress, enclosed is a report covering personal property made available for distribution to educational and public health institutions under section 203 (j) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949; and all real property disposed of to such institutions under section 203 (k) of that act.

This report covers the calendar quarter, April 1 through June 30, 1956.

Sincerely yours,

M. B. FOLSOM,
Secretary.

REPORT OF THE UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE

Surplus property for which the Federal Government has paid $55,304,842 was made available to the States for educational and public health purposes during April, May, and June by the United States Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. Real property accounted for $5,314,668 and personal property $49,990,174.

Secretary Marion B. Folsom announced the totals in making his quarterly report to Congress on the Department's surplus property program.

Property no longer needed by the Federal Government is distributed, under the provisions of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, to educational and public health agencies of State and local governments, and to eligible nonprofit health and educational institutions exempt from Federal taxes. Regional offices of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and various State agencies channel the surplus property to the institutions.

Property transferred to the States includes such items as school and hospital building sites; buildings suitable for college dormitory or faculty housing; motor vehicles; hospital, school, and office furniture; hand and machine tools; motion-picture projectors; laboratory equipment; and school and office supplies.

Personal property made available for distribution to and real property disposed of to educational and public health institutions, Apr. 1 through June 30, 1956 (acquisition cost) (In accordance with sec. 5, Public Law 61, 84th Cong.)

Saudi Arabia Celebrates King Saud's Anniversary of Accession to the Throne, November 12, 1956

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ADAM C. POWELL, JR.
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, when I came back from the Bandung Conference I announced that I would address the United States Congress each time there was an anniversary of 1 of the 29 participating nations in the Asian-African Conference on friendly relations with the United States.

Inasmuch as the Congress will not be in session at the time of the event, I wish to take this opportunity to extend felicitations to the people of Saudi Arabia, His Majesty Saud Ibn Abdul Aziz al Saud and His Excellency Sheikh Abdullah Al-Khayyal, Ambassador of Saudi Arabia, upon the occasion of the celebration of the third anniversary of His Majesty King Saud's accession to the throne of Saudi Arabia, November 12, 1956.

The herculean efforts of the late King Abdul Aziz Ibn Abdur Rahman al Faisal al Saud to weld his country into an independent entity and break the bonds of the post-World War I mandate system are too well known to warrant detailed recounting here. Perhaps nowhere else in the annals of modern history could be found a state which owed more of its existence to the efforts of a single man. It suffices to say that King Saud's valiant struggles to regain for his family its lost authority and past glory began many years before he acceded to the throne of his country. Despite numerous obstacles created by man and nature which confronted him, nullifying his initial successes, King Saud forged ahead, achieving remarkable victories over the enemies of his people. Personal courage, faith, and determination undergirded him for his tasks.

With the advent of the First World War, King Saud's plans for independence of his country suffered a setback. Upon the termination of the war, the Arab countries which revolted against colonialism, and which were promised their independence by the Allies, were placed instead under the mandate system of the League of Nations.

In 1924 the forces of King Ibn Saud captured Taif and Mecca followed the next year by similar victories over Medina and Jedda. In January 1926, King Saud was proclaimed King of the Hejaz. When Nejd was proclaimed a kingdom in 1927, His Majesty's title became king of the Hejaz and of Nejd and its Dependencies. In September 1932, King Ibn Saud proclaimed the union of the Hejaz and Nejd into the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia with himself as monarch.

During the early years of World War II Saudi Arabia remained neutral. Its contribution to the war effort is described in the citation of the Legion of Merit, Degree of Chief Commander, presented in 1947 to the late King Ibn Saud by President Truman. The citation reads in part:

His Majesty Abdul Aziz Ibn Abdur Rahman Al Faisal Al Saud, King of Saudi Arabia, rendered exceptionally meritorious service to the war effort of the United Nations. He led his country in an unwavering course of support and encouragement to the cause of the Allies. * * * As commander in chief of Saudi Arabia he kept the land, sea, and air routes under his control open for use, and by his attitude of wholehearted cooperation, he enabled American forces to accomplish a program of construction and resource development in the country that derived benefits of major proportions for the prosecution of the war. Through his unswerving loyalty, and his dynamic leadership at the head of his nation in the support of the cause, King Abdul Aziz Ibn Saud made a notable contribution to the successful war effort of the United Nations.

The success which the late King Ibn Saud achieved through his efforts and with the minimum of external support gained for him universal esteem and affection. No more outstanding figure has appeared in the Arab world for many years.

Upon the demise of his illustrious father, His Majesty Saud Ibn Abdul Aziz al Saud ascended the throne of Saudi Arabia on November 12, 1953. King Saud had had years of training in practical administration of his country as prince, under the guidance of his father. During his brief years as chief of state King Saud has vigorously interested himself in maintaining the unity of his country and in the continued progress and development of Saudi Arabia.

We trust that his bigness in his country will be expanded; that his conscience and regard for the prestige of Saudi Arabia in the free world will lead to an expression of that same greatness in all relations with all people; that nothing will be permitted to cast a shadow over an otherwise shiny career.

Dangerous Pitfalls in Price Support Limitation Proposals

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FRANK E. SMITH
OF MISSISSIPPI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. SMITH of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, during this session of the Congress considerable publicity was given to various proposals which would provide some type of limitation, usually in terms of dollars, on the participation of individual farm operators in the farm price support program.

Limitations were first suggested in the so-called Brannon plan, but they were later withdrawn from that proposal when the inequity and unworkability of the idea became clear. The idea was reviewed again in President Eisenhower's message to the Congress on the farm problem, which was submitted earlier this year.

With this impetus, a price support limitation was adopted in the form of an amendment to H. R. 12 when that bill was being considered on the Senate floor. The conferees on the bill, the most experienced and knowledgeable men in the Congress on agricultural problems, deleted the provision by unanimous vote. Senator ELLENDER, in reporting on the conference, said:

> These provisions did not seem to be effective * * * or to the extent effective (would be) destructive of the purpose.

The idea of limiting price supports has its greatest appeal to those who think of our entire price support program as nothing more than a dole or handout. Naturally, if the farm program is to be nothing more than that, we should limit individual participation as much as possible.

The purpose of the price support program, whether it be flexible, rigid, or otherwise, is not to provide a dole or handout. It is designed first of all to provide a system of orderly marketing of farm commodities. Before price supports were offered, the average farmer had to market his crop as soon as it was harvested, thereby leaving himself at the mercy of the buyer in a buyer's market. The price support system makes it possible for the farmer to place all, or a portion, of his crop in the Commodity Credit Corporation loan if the price offered at harvesttime is not acceptable. The placing of portions of the crop in the loan prevents the flooding of the market and preserves a stabilized price in a free market. If and when the market rises, the farmer can pay back his loan plus interest and carrying charges, redeem his crop and sell it on the higher market.

The use of the loan is a tool in the hands of every farmer, large or small, that brings benefits to all agriculture. Naturally, the greatest benefits come to the small farmer, for he has no other means of waiting out the market or withholding his crop for more favorable prices.

The operation of the loan program usually means that commodity markets are influenced primarily by the loan level. There is almost always a free market price approximating that of the loan because no commodities on the market are barred from participation. Small farmers desiring immediate cash returns, with a minimum of redtape involved in loan operations, quite often sell their crops as soon as harvested. They do not actually participate in the loan program, but they secure all the benefits of the free market price sustained by the loan level.

Suppose, through a limitation on participation in the price supports, the large producers were denied the use of the loan for their commodities. The loss to the big farmer would be nothing by comparison with the hardship brought upon the small or family-size farmer. He would be faced with the choice of placing his crop in the loan or selling immediately in competition with the unsupported crops of the big producers in the open market. Naturally the large quantities of unsupported crops from big producers would keep the free market well below the loan level.

It is obvious that a limitation on support would tend to draw the entire crops of small producers into Government stocks, leaving the market to the large producers that would be barred from participation in the program. This would result in the free market never rising above the price-support level. The end result would be the destruction of every type of price-support program. Large operators would, of course, suffer hardships as a result of this, but by far the greatest losers would be the small farmers.

The contribution of the family-size farm to our great American economy and culture has always been recognized, and no one belittles it today. Those who propose price-support limitations like to call themselves defenders of the family farm. I hope that the true friends of family-farm operators will see the danger to the entire commodity-loan program which would develop from these limitation proposals.

The limitation plan would also deny the benefits of the loan program to a large group of farmers who are entitled to just as much consideration as any others—the tenants and day laborers who secure their income as a part of the operation of these large producers who would be barred from participation in the loan. Tenants on cotton farms, for instance, work under a contract which provides that they shall have a certain share of the proceeds from each bale of cotton which they produce. There is no way in which that bale can be divided to be placed in the loan. Price-support limitations would effectively bar tenants from obtaining any benefits from the basic Government farm program.

The same result would apply to farm laborers who work for wages. As is true with any business enterprise, the wage scale is to an important degree related to the income of the operation. Denial of the loan program to the employers of these laborers would be denying them an opportunity to earn the highest possible wages. Rank discrimination would be involved, of which we can find no parallel in industry.

One of the prize exhibits which supporters of loan limitations have presented is a list of large farming operations over the country with a tabulation of the commodities which these farmers placed in the Commodity Credit Corporation loan during a certain period. The inference has been made that these farmers received a handout amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars in individual cases. Actually there were no handouts in any case, and the figures shown merely represented the value of crops placed in the loan.

Two of the farms listed were in my own district, and I have taken the trouble to secure a detailed report of the loan operation involved. In one case the interest amounted to a profit of $4,828.67 for the Government. In another case the vast majority of the cotton placed in the loan was withdrawn and sold. The interest paid the Government exceeded the value of the cotton left in the loan, and, in addition, the Government now has full title to this cotton. In both cases the Government actually made a profit on the operation.

I hope that the entire country, and the Congress and our agricultural leadership in particular, will study this issue carefully in the coming months. I am confident that any impartial analysis will result in the entire idea of limitation being rejected by those who want to see a sound price-support program retained to benefit not only our farmers but our entire economy.

The Current Plight of Small Business

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. HARRISON A. WILLIAMS, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, of the estimated 4,225,000 businesses in the United States on June 30, 1955, 4 million, or 95 percent, were classified as small business by the Small Business Administration. These small businesses account for somewhere between one-third and one-half of the total nonagricultural business done in the United States

Thus we see that small business contributes a significant share of our national product in addition to providing the broad competitive base which we look to as the economic bulwark of our American system of free enterprise. Such an important segment of our economy should quite naturally warrant the continued concern of both the executive and legislative branches of our Government.

THE PRESENT STATE OF SMALL BUSINESS

One cannot avoid considerable alarm, therefore, upon learning that the net profits after taxes of manufacturing firms with assets under $250,000 have fallen more than 50 percent since the present administration took office, from $308 million in 1952 to $149 million in 1955. Such a significant decline in the fortunes of small business becomes even more noteworthy when contrasted with the earnings of manufacturing corporations having assets in excess of $100 million. Net profits after taxes of these corporations rose from just over $6 billion in 1952 to nearly $10 billion in 1955, an increase of 61 percent.

Business failures are especially indicative of the welfare of small business since over 90 percent of all business failures occur in firms having total liabilities of less than $100,000. The average number of business failures under the present administration from 1953 through 1955 was up 25 percent over the average number under the previous administration from 1949 through 1952. Business failures during 1956, which totaled 7,879 on August 2, are continuing at an even faster pace. If they proceed at their present rate, business failures in 1956 will be 55 percent more than the average number of failures for the years 1949 through 1952.

The failure of small business, starting in 1953, to share in the general prosperity of our economy behooves a careful examination of governmental policies which affect small business. Consequently, I would like to review the activities of this administration and of the 83d and 84th Congresses in the fields of antitrust policy, taxation, monetary policy, and small-business assistance.

THE ANTITRUST LAWS AND MERGERS

Primary responsibility for the administration of our antitrust laws rests with the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice and with the Federal Trade Commission. The basic intent of the antitrust laws is to prevent the growth of monopolies and economic concentration which substantially lessen competition.

While not all mergers lessen competition, that is frequently the intent or result of a merger. A loophole in the antimerger section of the Clayton Act prevented the Government from taking any action against mergers consummated through the acquisition of assets, in contrast to mergers effected through stock acquisition, until the Celler-Kefauver amendment was passed in 1950. The hope that this amendment would provide a future safeguard against large-scale merger movements such as the one which occurred in the late 1920's appears thus far to have been a false hope. The year 1955, in which the Federal Trade Commission reported 846 corporate mergers, was estimated by Commission economists to have been the greatest year for corporate mergers since 1930. Moreover, the Trade Commission reports that mergers are taking place at an even faster rate this year. The total number for 1956 is likely to exceed 1,000.

Not only are mergers now taking place at a rate equaled only during the boom-and-bust years of 1928–32, but, as the following table indicates, the incidence of these mergers among the larger firms is becoming greater and greater:

Relative distribution of manufacturing and mining concerns acquired by size of acquiring concern, 1940–47, 1948–54, 1955

	1940–47	1948–54	1955
$50,000,000 and over	29.3	29.4	33.2
$10,000,000 to $49,999,999	28.6	36.1	36.8
$5,000,000 to $9,999,999	12.8	13.9	9.8

Paralleling the continued increase in mergers has been the growing number of complaints received by the Antitrust Division of the Justice Department. The great majority of these complaints are from small-business men protesting against the allegedly unfair-trade practices of their larger competitors. In 1952 the Antitrust Division received 692 complaints; in 1955, 1,261.

Is it merely a coincidence that in the first 3 years of this administration small-business profits have been cut in half, small-business failures have gone up 25 percent, mergers have reached their highest peak since 1930, and complaints of antitrust law violations have nearly doubled? A clue to the answer lies in a review of administrative efforts prior to, and in view of, these developments.

FTC AND ANTITRUST DIVISION APPROPRIATIONS

In its drive to economize, the administration trimmed the already meager budget of the Justice Department's Antitrust Division by $400,000, or more than 11 percent, in fiscal 1955 and left the appropriation at the same level for fiscal 1956. Meanwhile, the budget appropriations for the antimonopoly work of the Federal Trade Commission were nearly 10 percent lower in fiscal 1954 and 1955 than they had been during the last fiscal year of the previous administration, 1953.

The alarming increase in the number of mergers which followed these budgetary cuts was brought to light by the House Antitrust Subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary in its interim report on corporate and bank mergers published in late 1955. The studies and investigations conducted by the subcommittee were undoubtedly influential in restoring the 1957 fiscal budget of the Antitrust Division to its 1953–54 level, and in obtaining an increase over the previous year of $1,001,500 in the appropriations of the Federal Trade Commission. Furthermore, the increased funds of the Commission were specifically "requested for an expanded enforcement program of the Antimerger Act"—the budget for fiscal year 1957, page 139.

ANTIMERGER ACT

The administration is just beginning to exhibit concern over the merger problem in this election year. During its first 2 years in office, on the other hand, the administration showed no apparent concern over the fact that the Justice Department had not issued a single complaint under the new Antimerger Act.

As of July 1956, the Federal Trade Commission had issued 10 complaints under the Antimerger Act, one of which had been settled by a consent decree, and one of which was pending before the Commission. The other eight cases had not yet reached an initial decision. Also, as of July 1956 the Department of Justice had issued 6 complaints under the Antimerger Act, 3 of which had been settled by consent decree and 3 of which were still pending.

Since the adoption of the antimerger amendment, not a single cease and desist order has been issued in a contested case by either the Commission or the Justice Department. The combined total of 4 consent decrees thus far entered by both agencies under the Antimerger Act covers less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the more than 4,000 mergers which have taken place since the beginning of 1951 in the mining, manufacturing, and trade industries.

THE CONSENT DECREE

As it has done in so many other areas, and particularly in the field of defense, the administration has sought to convey the impression that it is producing more results for less money in the conduct of its antitrust program. One aspect of this policy has been an increasing reliance upon consent decrees and other voluntary agreements with businesses accused of violating the antitrust laws. The contention has been that such agreements accomplish the intended purposes of our antitrust laws while avoiding the expense and delay of formal proceedings.

The consent decree has for many years been a necessary and important instrument of antitrust law enforcement. Its expanded use should not lessen the Government's responsibility, however, in prosecuting violations of antitrust laws where no satisfactory agreement can be reached voluntarily.

The effectiveness of a consent decree in discouraging future violations of the antitrust laws is limited. The corporation against whom proceedings are brought is not even referred to as a defendant but is merely a respondent. In agreeing to a consent decree the respondent neither admits nor denies the allegations made. Subsequent violation of a consent decree by the respondent cannot successfully be prosecuted unless the courts rule that the alleged violations spelled out in the consent decree were in violation of the antitrust laws. In such a case it can well be argued that more positive action should have been taken against the respondent at the time the consent decree was issued.

The proceedings leading up to a consent decree are at present completely unpublicized. This makes it difficult for people outside the administration to know how effectively the antitrust laws are being administered.

In view of the present emphasis on the consent decree and the corresponding rise in mergers and antitrust law complaints, I feel that the Congress should give careful consideration to proposals for greater safeguards on the present consent decree procedure. One proposal which merits particular attention would require the Antitrust Division and the Federal Trade Commission to publish an opinion accompanying each consent decree stating the Government's case, the respondent's proposition, and the reason for the Government's acceptance of the particular compromise.

BANK MERGERS

When the Antimerger Act was passed, it provided a special exemption for bank mergers. Yet the problem of mergers in the banking industry is at least as serious as it is in other fields. During the 4 years of the previous administration the average yearly number of bank mergers and acquisitions was 88. In 1953 this figure rose to 116; in 1954 it soared to 207; and in 1955 it reached an estimated 250. During the first 6 months of 1956 bank mergers continued at an estimated yearly rate of over 200.

The rate of bank mergers from 1954 to the present has been far greater than at any time since 1934 when the effects of the depression were still forcing banks to merge as a matter of survival. The present trend of bank mergers is all too reminiscent of the earlier period when bank mergers rose steadily, from 363 in 1925 to 798 in 1931.

As they eliminate more and more small businesses from the banking field, these bank mergers dry up a primary source of capital for small business in all other fields. The small banker has most often been willing to grant financial assistance to the small-business man, but the larger banks seldom find that such small loans are worth their while.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION RELATING TO MERGERS

Growing protests over the increasing number of mergers in the fields of banking, mining, manufacturing, and trade led the President this year to recommend four revisions in antitrust legislation relating to mergers. None of his recommendations had strong party support, however, and none managed to pass both Houses of Congress.

Probably the most important bill relating to mergers, H. R. 9424, was introduced by Mr. CELLER, Democrat, of New York, of this year. Among other things, it would have required companies planning to merge to notify the Attorney General 90 days prior to any merger in which the combined capital, surplus, and undivided profits of the merged companies would be in excess of $10 million. The bill passed the House in April, but was not considered by the Senate. H. R. 9424 was effectively killed when Senator DIRKSEN, Republican, of Illinois, of the Senate Antitrust Subcommittee, insisted upon an amendment giving companies which might be subject to antitrust suits the right to go to court as plaintiffs and seek a declaratory judgment against Government action.

A bill to bring bank mergers under the provisions of section 7 of the Clayton Act, H. R. 5918, was introduced by Mr. CELLER and passed the House in February 1956. No action was taken on this bill by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Another bill relating to bank mergers was introduced by Senator FULBRIGHT, Democrat, of Arkansas, and Senator CAPEHART, Republican, of Indiana, on May 23, 1956. It passed the Senate on July 25, 1956, but has not yet been considered by the House.

Legislative action to stem the growing wave of mergers should certainly be given careful consideration during the next session of Congress. Some measure to provide for Federal control of bank mergers should merit particular attention.

But we cannot attain an effective antitrust program merely by passing further laws. A 1956 House of Representatives document entitled "Antitrust Laws With Amendments" contains 107 pages of antitrust laws. The Sherman Act of 1890 covers the first 1½ pages of this document. A strong argument can be made that our antitrust policy would be more successful if we devoted all our antitrust efforts toward a rigorous enforcement of this basic law. The important point is that effective antitrust policy depends primarily upon its administration.

FTC AS AN INDEPENDENT AGENCY

Realizing the need for a consistent policy and impartial attitude in the enforcement of the antitrust laws, Congress established the Federal Trade Commission as an independent agency in 1914. The reorganization plan of the Hoover Commission adopted in 1950 has tended to place the Commission more and more under administrative control. Since 1950 the Chairman of the Commission has been a political appointee of the President, responsible to him and serving at his pleasure. The Chairman had previously been elected once each year by a vote of the 5 Commissioners. The reorganization plan has also given the Chairman considerably more control over personnel administration.

Since 1952 the policies of the Federal Trade Commission have changed considerably, apparently to coincide to a high degree with the "philosophy" of the administration. Moreover, Commission reports have recently tended to build up the accomplishments of our present antitrust program in a manner which indicates a certain lack of impartiality and objectivity.

As Mr. PATMAN, Democrat, of Texas, pointed out in January, recent Commission reports have placed a good deal of emphasis upon the number of complaints which were issued under the chairmanship of Mr. Howrey. The reports failed to mention, though, that these complaints were being directed more and more toward the small rather than the large business enterprise. Under the chairmanship of President Eisenhower's appointee, Mr. Howrey, from April 1, 1953, through December 31, 1955, average assets of the 60 companies charged with antitrust law violations were $32,500,000. Under the chairmanship of James Mead, formerly Democratic Senator from New York, during the 33-month period immediately preceding April 1, 1953, the average assets of the 66 companies charged with antitrust-law violations were $256,200,000, or nearly eight times as great.

Last year the House Small Business Committee announced its intention to look into the frequently made allegation that the Federal Trade Commission and other independent regulatory agencies have lost their independence through reorganization and have in practical effect become a part of the executive branch of the Government. Hearings on this subject were held in July 1955 and are to be published in the near future. They should shed considerable light upon the extent to which the Commission has come under the domination of the present administration.

FINES UNDER THE SHERMAN ACT

One antitrust law of interest to small business was the result of a bill introduced by Mr. CELLER, of the House Judiciary Committee, on February 7, 1955, and signed by the President on July 7, 1955. The law increased from $5,000 to $50,000 the maximum penalty which could be imposed by the courts in cases of violation of the Sherman Act. It remains to be seen to what extent the courts will take advantage of this law to impose stiffer penalties upon antitrust law violators. During fiscal 1956 the total amount of fines imposed in antitrust cases was $460,800 as compared with $260,580 in 1955. Although the amount of fines imposed in 1956 was the highest total since 1951, it was still less than half the total amount of fines imposed in 1948.

PRICE DISCRIMINATION

Price discrimination is another aspect of antitrust law which is of particular interest to small business. The original law banning discriminatory pricing was contained in section 2 of the Clayton Act enacted in 1914. Certain weaknesses in this section prevented it from stemming a widespread growth of harmful discriminatory practices by large distributors, notably chainstores. These practices were often intended to and frequently did result in the elimination of small businesses which could not command price discounts similar to those of their larger competitors.

Congressional investigations of discriminatory pricing practices in the early thirties led to the Robinson-Patman amendment to section 2 of the Clayton Act in 1936. According to the Senate Judiciary Committee report on the amendment, a principal weakness of the original section 2 lay in the fact that "it permits discriminations to meet competition, and thus tends to substitute the remedies of retaliation for those of law, with destructive consequences to the central object of the bill"—Senate Report No. 1502, 74th Congress, 2d session, 1936, page 4.

Until 1951 it was generally thought that the Robinson-Patman Act had remedied the weakness cited in the Senate report. In that year, however, the 5 to 3 Supreme Court decision in the Standard Oil of Indiana case interpreted the "good faith" provision of the act in a manner which indicated that the old weakness in the price-discrimination law was still present. The "good faith" defense of a price cutter was a complete defense according to the Court even though the price cuts were not cost-justified and regardless of their competitive effect.

Legislative proposals to clarify the "good faith" clause of the Robinson-Patman Act have been forthcoming ever since 1951, but none has yet passed both Houses of Congress. Certain of these proposals have sought to write the Supreme Court decision into law. Others, such as H. R. 1840 directly paralleled by my bill, H. R. 2690, which passed the House during this session of Congress, have sought to clarify the original intent of the act by making it plain that section 2 (b) should not be a defense where the effect of the discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

Unfortunately, administration policy as expressed by the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission was for some time opposed to H. R. 1840 and other similar bills introduced in this Congress. The majority of the Commission reversed itself to favor passage of H. R. 1840 after a decision handed down by the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals in May of this year. This was in the same Standard Oil case which the Supreme Court had remanded to the Commission in 1951 for reconsideration of the "good faith" clause. The Commission found that Standard Oil had not shown good faith and in its brief before the circuit court stated that any other finding would make the Robinson-Patman Act meaningless. Nevertheless, the court overruled the Commission by finding good faith on the part of Standard Oil.

If, as the Commission has said, the Robinson-Patman Act has now been made meaningless as a result of judicial interpretation, the next Congress should give early consideration to further legislation to protect small business from unfair price discriminations.

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S COMMITTEE

The most significant step taken in the antitrust field by the present administration was probably the Attorney General's creation of a National Committee To Study the Antitrust Laws. On March 31, 1955, the Committee issued a lengthy report which included 85 recommendations.

The need for such a comprehensive study of our complex antitrust system has seldom if ever been questioned. The membership of the Committee and the tenor of its recommendations have, nevertheless, come in for sharp criticism. The Committee was made up almost exclusively of lawyers specializing in defending business clients in antitrust suits. Approximately half the lawyers on the Committee were representing defendants in antitrust suits while at the same time serving on the Committee. Without questioning the motives or qualifications of any of these practicing antitrust lawyers, it might have been expected that the Committee's report would reflect their interests in simplifying the antitrust laws so as to benefit their clients.

The sixth annual report of the Senate Select Committee on Small Business contained the following comments on the National Committee's report on the antitrust laws—pages 78, 79:

The scant attention which was paid to legislative history by the National Committee becomes the more disturbing when it is noted that the group made a total of 85 recommendations respecting the antitrust laws. Instead of concentrating upon discovery of what was the intent and purpose of Congress in enacting the antitrust statutes, the National Committee's majority appears to have been more concerned with how the laws could be modified to conform to their personal preferences. * * *

In the National Committee's report, not a single formal recommendation is to be found which can be construed as being favorable or even sympathetic to the victims of antitrust law violations. Your committee's interest in this point was prompted by the personal knowledge that antitrust victims are generally the small-business men of our Nation. On the other hand, the report is replete with recommendations reflecting concern for violators. * * *

Here it seems that the National Committee digressed from the issue of soft versus hard competition to tackle the question of soft versus hard antitrust enforcement, and the National Committee resolved the issue squarely in favor of the soft or lenient variety.

CORPORATE INCOME TAX

Another area of major concern to the small business man is our Federal revenue structure. In answer to a questionnaire circulated last year by the National Association of Manufacturers, a revision of the tax laws was considered the most important step which the Government could take to help small business.

The present corporate-tax structure fails to give proper consideration to the relatively greater need of small business to finance its corporate growth through retained earnings. Financing through the issuance of stocks and bonds is often impractical for the small firm and is in any case considerably more expensive than it would be for the larger firm. Bank loans also tend to be much more expensive when made to the small firm. At the same time the small business is much more likely than the large firm to find it economically desirable to undertake a rapid expansion of its existing facilities.

The need for a more moderate corporate tax on small business was recognized to some degree in the Internal Revenue Act of 1938 when the $25,000 exemption from the surtax was enacted. The rapid devaluation of the dollar since 1938 has, however, made this exemption wholly inadequate today. If the exemption were raised to $50,000, as some have proposed, we would be doing no more than adjusting the 1938 law in accordance with the changing value of the dollar.

In addition to proposals to increase the present surtax exemption to somewhere between $50,000 and $100,000, there have been suggestions for replacing the present corporate income tax with a graduated corporate tax. Companion bills were introduced in the House and Senate during this session of Congress which would have adopted a new corporation tax graduated from 5 percent on the first $5,000 of taxable income to 55 percent on all taxable income over $100,000. No action was taken on either of these bills.

In view of the difficulties which small business is now encountering in its search for necessary capital, some revision in the present corporate income tax law would be a vital step in reversing the downward trend of small business during the last 3½ years.

TAXES AS AN INFLUENCE ON MERGERS

The next Congress should also consider the extent to which our tax laws have stimulated the current merger movement. The ability of large firms to carry forward past losses against current and future profits so as to reduce their corporate tax liability has encouraged them to seek firms with a history of losses. Under present conditions, firms with losses are generally the small firms and it is exceedingly difficult for a firm in such condition to resist the temptation to merge.

Other tax incentives which have encouraged small firms to merge have been, first, lessening the impact of the estate tax; and, second, in the case of a successful closely held business, the ability to take profits out of the firm by the capital-gains route as an alternative to having the profits distributed as dividends subject to high individual income-tax rates or left in the company to have the retained earnings taxed under section 102 of the Internal Revenue Code.

THE SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

On July 30, 1953, the Small Business Administration—SBA—was established as the first peacetime agency charged solely with the responsibility for fostering the welfare of small business. The SBA took over many of the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Small Defense Plants Administration which had provided valuable assistance to small business in preceding years.

The Small Business Act of 1955 extended the life of the SBA for another 2 years, raised the maximum amount permitted on any individual loan from $150,000 to $250,000, and required the Secretary of Defense to submit monthly reports to the President and the Congress on the amount of military expenditures going to small business.

Early this year Congress increased the disaster loan fund of the SBA from $25 million to $125 million. This action resulted largely from the floods which swept the New England States in the fall of 1955.

The programs of the SBA—to provide sound loans to small business where other sources of credit are not available, to assist small business in obtaining Government contracts, and to provide production and management assistance to small business men—are all highly commendable. They should continue to receive the full support of Congress and the administration.

INCREASED LOANS OF THE SBA AND THE TIGHTENING OF CREDIT

The $126 million in loans approved by the SBA in fiscal 1956 was double the amount approved in fiscal 1955 and was considerably more than the total amount of loans approved in the 22 months from September 1953 to July 1955. It is encouraging to note that substantial funds from this much needed source of credit are finally being made available to small business.

The principal reason for this sudden increase in loan approvals, nevertheless, appeared to be a severe tightening of the availability of private credit to small concerns over the past several months. A survey by Standard Factors Corp. showed that between March 1955 and March 1956 firms enjoying lines of bank credit declined from 53 to 18 percent among companies having a net worth of $5,000 to $25,000, and from 82 to 44 percent among companies having a net worth of $25,000 to $100,000. There was almost no change in the percent of large firms maintaining credit lines.

As credit has become more difficult to obtain it has also become more expensive, particularly for small businesses. Interest rates on short-term loans are now 4 percent, the highest they have been since 1929. In the past 18 months interest rates have risen from 3.3 to more than 4 percent on new issues of medium-grade corporate bonds; from 1.3 to 3.38 percent on prime commercial paper, 4 to 6 months; from 1.1 to 2.55 percent on 91-day Treasury bills; and from 2 to 2.91 percent on 3- to 5-year Government securities.

Although commendable as far as it went, the increased amount of loans approved by the SBA in fiscal 1956 met only a small fraction of the credit needs of small business. Of much greater benefit to small business would be some relaxation in the tight money policy being followed by this administration.

CABINET-LEVEL COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS

On June 1, 1956, President Eisenhower established a 7-man committee including 3 Cabinet Secretaries to deal with the problems of small business. The President called for a review of existing programs to aid small business and assigned the committee the continuing task of "making specific recommendations to me for administrative actions, and when necessary for additional legislation to strengthen the economic position of small businesses."

For 3½ years the present administration has followed policies which have brought about a swift and steady deterioration in the welfare of small business and in its future prospects. Now the President establishes a committee to look into the problem and make recommendations. Senator O'MAHONEY, Democrat of Wyoming, issued a significant warning when he said that this Cabinet-level committee "may be taking the approach of giving Government aid to small business" through loans and contract awards "instead of helping to make it free to stand on its own feet."

WHAT SHOULD BE DONE FOR SMALL BUSINESS

No matter how benevolent the Government may wish to be, it cannot personally assist every one of the 4 million small businesses in the country. What the Government can and should do, however, is to seek to preserve equality of opportunity for all business enterprises, whether large or small.

If small business is to remain a significant and dynamic force in our economy, it must be given greater opportunity to come into existence, to grow, to survive, and to compete on an equal basis with larger and better established firms in its field. These goals can best be achieved by a more vigorous enforcement of our antitrust laws which will reverse the rising trend of corporate mergers and which will prevent large buyers from obtaining unfair price discriminations. There is also a great need to adjust our tax laws and particularly the corporate income tax so that small business will be able to grow and will not be tempted to sell out in order to realize tax savings. Finally, there should be some relaxation of our present tight money policy so that small business will again be able to find credit sources which will enable it to finance future growth.

Although there are a great many other areas in which the Government could take more positive action to assist small business, it is particularly in these areas of antitrust enforcement, taxation, and monetary policy that the current administration has been neglectful of the needs of small business over the past 3½ years.

Reorganization of the Passport Office

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HUBERT H. HUMPHREY
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement by me on the reorganization of the Passport Office.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

During the recess following the 1st session of the 84th Congress, the staff of the Committee on Government Operations was directed, at my suggestion, to initiate a survey of the operations of the Passport Office of the Department of State with a view toward reorganizing and modernizing the Office to meet the increasing demands for passport service.

As a result of this directive, and at the request of the committee, a survey team, composed of representatives of the General Services Administration, the General Accounting Office and the Civil Service Commission, was assigned to assist Miss Frances Knight, Director of the Passport Office, to determine what action was necessary to increase the efficiency of the Office, to prevent the recurrence of backlogs and delays, and to meet current demands for passport services.

A detailed report was submitted to the Senate following this reorganization survey. The committee approved the staff report (S. Rept. No. 1604, 84th Cong.) and initiated legislative action designed to correct reported deficiencies and to modernize the operations of the Passport Office (S. 3340). Officials of the Department of State requested an opportunity to appear before the committee in order to present their views relative to certain provisions of the proposed legislation to which they were opposed, and the bill was thereupon recommitted to the Committee on Government Operations. I have since been informed by the staff of the committee that, although there have been marked improvements in the operations of the Office following the reorganization, there are a number of tasks which still remain to be undertaken before the Office will be prepared to serve the public in its fullest potential, such as the providing of adequate telephone facilities and increased personnel during peak periods, the training of personnel to conform to the new mechanization program installed at the direction of the reorganization survey team, the initiation of a program for advance planning to handle the continuing increase in the workload of the Office and the determination of the need for decentralization.

Accordingly, with the approval of the chairman of the Committee on Government Operations, I have requested the staff of the committee to continue these studies and to prepare a further report for committee consideration before the convening of the 85th Congress.

I include at this point in my remarks copies of correspondence directed by me to the chief clerk of the Committee on Government Operations and to the Director of the Passport Office, in which I have set forth suggestions relative to the specific data which should be compiled by the staff of the committee in cooperation with the Passport Office and the reorganization survey team, to insure that all aspects of the operation may be given further study and appropriate action initiated to correct any continuing deficiencies, as well as replies from the chief clerk of the committee and the Director of the Passport Office setting forth the present status and the projected study program.

JULY 18, 1956.

Mr. WALTER L. REYNOLDS,
Chief Clerk, Committee on Government Operations, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR WALTER: Enclosed is a copy of a letter I have just written to Miss Frances Knight, Director of the Passport Office, in which I have requested certain information relative to the operations of the Passport Office.

My thinking is that our committee ought to keep abreast of developments in light of the hearings that were held on the proposed legislation earlier in the year. I would appreciate you and the staff following up with the State Department in line with these suggestions:

That the Passport Office be assigned a liaison office on Capitol Hill;

That the Passport Office provide the requisite agents and clerks;

That the Passport Office keep alert to the needs of the traveling public and be encouraged to render whatever services are necessary in this respect; and

That the Passport Office continue to supply Members of Congress with passport statistics on a quarterly basis.

Perhaps, upon receipt of replies from the State Department and from Miss Knight a staff report could be issued.

Sincerely,

HUBERT H. HUMPHREY.

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS,
July 20, 1956.

Hon. HUBERT M. HUMPHREY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HUMPHREY: This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 18, 1956, with reference to certain additional information you desire in connection with the operation of the Passport Office.

As I informed you personally, I have already been in contact with Miss Frances Knight and have further conferences tentatively scheduled for a full discussion of the various problems encountered by the Passport Office, including the points you raise in your communication to Miss Knight.

Following the development of the essential facts through consultation with officials of the Passport Office, the GSA, and the GAO, I shall have a further conference with officials of the Department of State with a view to initiating appropriate action necessary to correct any deficiencies in the organization of the office that still may exist and will, as you suggest, prepare an additional progress report as soon as all of the facts are available.

With kind regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

WALTER L. REYNOLDS,
Chief Clerk.

JULY 18, 1956.

Miss FRANCES G. KNIGHT,
Director, Passport Office, Department of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MISS KNIGHT: I have seen your report of July 13 giving a breakdown on the number of applications for the issuance or renewal of passports during the first 6 months of 1956. As you know, I am extremely interested in the operations of the Passport Office. In light of the hearings earlier this year before the Senate Committee on Government Operations, I feel our committee members would desire additional and more specific data on the operations and plans of the Passport Office along the following lines:

1. We have been informed that a Passport Agency has been proposed for location in Los Angeles. What progress is being made toward the opening of this office? What will this provide in terms of lightening the workload of the Washington office and furnishing speedier service for west coast travelers?

2. What are the plans for providing more adequate telephone service to the public and to Members of Congress? You will recall my recent letter to you on this aspect of the passport office functions.

3. What is the present status of the mechanization program, and what consideration is being given to additional machinery and automation?

4. During the hearings it was recommended that the Passport Office be provided with more flexibile budgetary authority to meet changing personnel and supply requirements. Has such budgetary flexibility been provided, and what changes in budget handling have been effected in this regard?

5. Are plans for more adequate staff and facilities being activated now in preparation for the 1957 travel season?

6. In addition to the information contained in the July 13 report of statistics on issuance of passports, I feel our committee would be greatly interested in statistics showing the number of telephone calls, incoming and outgoing, including congressional inquiries, relating to the status of passport applications and their issuance. Other data representing the workload, such as employee overtime, for the past 6 months will be also of interest.

I know that during the peak travel period Members of Congress are called upon by their constituents for assistance in expediting action on their passport applications and that a goodsized portion of the workload is concerned with providing this service. It has occurred to me that there may be a way to facilitate this service through the establishment of a passport liaison office on Capitol Hill, in the Capitol itself or in the Senate or House Office Buildings, from January to, perhaps, September 1. This would be for the purpose of servicing emergency calls and requirements concerning passports which arise in congressional offices. One or more agents and clerks could be provided by the Passport Office for this liaison office during these peak months.

Your comments and reaction to the above suggestion, and your furnishing me with the information requested in the foregoing at your earliest convenience will indeed be appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

HUBERT H. HUMPHREY.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, D. C., July 27, 1956.

The Honorable HUBERT H. HUMPHREY,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR HUMPHREY: Thank you for your letter of July 18, 1956, inquiring into the operations of the Passport Office. I want you to know that we greatly appreciate your personal interest in our welfare and your help and suggestions in solving some of our problems.

I will answer your specific questions in the order you asked them:

1. Question: "We have been informed that a Passport Agency has been proposed for location in Los Angeles. What progress is being made toward the opening of this office? What will this provide in terms of lightening the workload of the Washington office and furnishing speedier service for west coast travelers?"

Answer: We are planning to establish a Passport Agency in Los Angeles to be open for business October 1, 1956. The Department was advised this week that the General Services Administration received three bids which could be considered as meeting our requirements for office space. A decision was made this week to locate the Passport Agency in the Architect's Building at Fifth and Figueroa Streets. This is the downtown area, located near transportation companies and travel agents.

The space measures approximately 4,500 square feet and is located on street level. I am planning to fly out to Los Angeles on Sunday to see it and arrange with GSA for renovations, modernization, and to select and purchase the necessary furnishings and equipment. In accordance with my request, the Department's representative on office space will be with me.

Our recent statistics indicate that in the first 6 months of 1956, we received 44,575 applications for passports from California. A substantial proportion of this number originated in the Los Angeles area. I believe 20,000 is a conservative estimate of the number of passports which may be issued annually by the Los Angeles agency. This, of course, would relieve the Washington office of that many issuances and, at the same time, would provide faster service to citizens on the west coast.

I am presently working out the staffing pattern of the Los Angeles agency and hope to have it at least 75 percent staffed by the proposed opening date of October 1, 1956.

2. Question: "What are your plans for providing more adequate telephone service to the public and Members of Congress? You will recall my recent letter to you on this aspect of the Passport Office functions."

Answer: The telephone service which we should but have not been able to provide remains one of our major problems. We have had experts from GSA, the telephone company, as well as the Department study our system, and presently the only answer appears to be additional equipment and more operators.

It is generally agreed that the additional lines assigned to the Passport Office last April, while helpful, did not meet the need. Lines were added, but we still had insufficient instruments with which to answer incoming calls, or to make outgoing calls. We should have at least four lines and phones, as well as four additional operators. This additional equipment and staff has been recommended and is under consideration by the Department. As soon as the pressure lessens to the point where we can devote adequate time to a training program for new operators, we will do so.

The idea of a switchboard has been discouraged because of the expense of initial installation, which would hardly be justified if the Passport Office is to move into the proposed new building for the Department of State within the next 2 years.

The Department has looked into the possibility of securing two off-premise lines from the Capitol direct to the Passport Office. I have been informed that contact was made with Mr. Ralph R. Roberts, the Clerk of the House, and that he reported the present inadequacy of the Capitol switchboard. He also reported that due to this congestion Members of Congress have been requested, whenever possible, to place their long-distance calls through commercial facilities.

I know for a fact that my staff and I personally have had long waits to reach the Capitol switchboard through the code number of 190 and through outside lines. As of the present time, the request for two direct lines from the Capitol board to the Passport Office has been denied. If this arrangement could be reconsidered, I believe it would do much to relieve congressional offices of their problems in reaching the Passport Office. With such a system, the Capitol operator could connect a congressional call directly to the Passport Office, and, if the lines are busy, she could watch them and plug in the call as soon as they are free.

3. Question: "What is the present status of the mechanization program, and what consideration is being given to additional machinery and automation?

Answer: We have fulfilled our requirements insofar as electric typewriters are concerned. The specially built pin-feed machines on which we type the control card, the file record, and the address insert are installed and operating satisfactorily.

We have just ordered a new combination seal-and-legend machine which will emboss the seal of the Department of State on the passport picture and the red wafer, and at the same time punch in the legend reading "photograph attached Department of State Washington."

Delivery on this combination machine will be made on or about December 1, 1956.

We are presently looking into a new process for applying the photograph onto the passport. This is going to take some time to develop, but we are making some progress.

4. Question: "During the hearings it was recommended that the Passport Office be provided with more flexible budgetary authority to meet changing personnel and supply requirements. Has such budgetary flexibility been provided, and what changes in budget handling have been effected in this regard?"

Answer: There has been no change in budgetary control which would give the Passport Office flexibility in the sense the committee had in mind. However, Mr. I. W. Carpenter, Jr., Assistant Secretary-Controller, has held two meetings since your hearings, at which the affairs of the Passport Office were discussed. At these meetings I was permitted to present my requirements, and I pointed out that reappraisals and adjustments of the Passport Office budget were in order, due to the increased workload from applications received as well as unforeseen additional services required of the Passport Office. Mr. Carpenter's deputies in charge of budget, personnel, and operations, who also attend these meetings, are making sincere efforts to be of assistance to the Passport Office. They have been briefed on our workload and requirements. A revised Passport Office financial plan for 1957 which would permit us to staff adequately for the next travel season, has been submitted, and I hope to receive favorable and expeditious action.

5. Question: "Are plans for more adequate staff and facilities being activated now in preparation for the 1957 travel season?"

Answer: In connection with the revised financial plan for 1957 mentioned in the preceding paragraph, I have requested additional staff and funds for the immediate future in order to permit the training and staffing of the Washington headquarters as well as the field agencies. I stress the need for prompt action, because what is not completed in the way of organization and planning during the months of September, October, and November becomes delayed or sidetracked when our travel season begins.

6. Question: "In addition to the information contained in the July 13 report of statistics on issuance of passports, I feel our committee would be greatly interested in statistics showing the number of telephone calls, incoming and outgoing, including congressional inquiries, relating to the status of passport applications and their issuance. Other data representing the workload, such as employee overtime, for the past 6 months will also be of interest."

Answer: The following statistics give a partial picture of workload we have carried in the past 6 months:

Applications for passports received by the Passport Office indicate the following increases in 1956 over 1955:

	Percent Increase
January 1956 over January 1955	19.5
February 1956 over February 1955	22.9
March 1956 over March 1955	3.5
April 1956 over April 1955	9.5
May 1956 over May 1955	8.0

Applications for passports received by the Passport Office field agencies indicate the following increases over a 10-month period:

	Percent Increase
New York	9.7
San Francisco	10.5
Chicago	15.0
Boston	11.2
New Orleans	10.0
Washington, D. C	15.8

Analysis of incoming telephone calls to Passport Office inquiry section, January 2 through January 6, 1956, 1,022 calls.

Analysis of incoming telephone calls to Passport Office inquiry section, June 1 through June 7, 1956, 4,592 calls.

Increase of 100 percent.

Analysis of incoming congressional telephone calls to the Passport Office inquiry section February 3 through February 9, 1956, 394 calls.

Analysis of incoming congressional telephone calls to the Passport Office inquiry section June 1 through June 7, 1956, 1,266 calls.

Increase of 237 percent.

Between January 1 and June 30, 1956, the Passport Office was called upon to render "special service" on 31 percent of the applications received. This special handling involving 115,000 applications includes expediting individual cases involving matters of life and death, sickness and other emergencies. Included also are special searches and stop orders due to last-minute changes in departure dates, changes in mailing address, and amendments to passports due to changed travel plans. The Passport Office has absorbed this additional and greatly increased workload through considerable overtime on the part of its employees.

In the first 6 months of calendar year 1956, the Passport Office worked a total of 16,235 hours of recorded overtime. Supervisory personnel do not record their overtime since it is voluntary. However, it is conservative to state that there are at least several thousand hours of voluntary overtime unrecorded. I, personally, put in 620 hours overtime from January 1 through June 30, when I gave up keeping even a fragmentary record of the nights, weekends, and holidays spent at the office.

With reference to your suggestion that a Passport Liaison Office be established on Capitol Hill during the peak travel season, for the purpose of serving the Members of Congress—I think it is an excellent idea. I know that space is very tight in both the Senate and House Office Buildings, and as far as I can determine, it is equally tight in the Capitol. I have been informed that various departments have been asked to remove their liaison officers from the Capitol because of the size of their contingents and large amount of space and facilities they absorbed. The Passport Office service would not present this problem since one of our agents could operate from any corner that would be made available to us. Furthermore, we would not have to tax the Capitol's switchboard facilities because I find we could install a teletype between the Hill and the Passport Office which would provide us with a two-way recorded communication system. In any event, if the space could be provided, we would be very glad to cooperate and provide such a service.

In the final analysis, the answer to our major problems of delays and overwork, is a realistic view of our personnel requirements, both in Washington and in the field agencies. I believe we are making progress in that respect, and I do hope we will have a much more effective office in operation by the time Congress convenes in January 1957.

Thank you again for your continuing interest in our welfare. With best wishes,

Sincerely,

FRANCES G. KNIGHT,
Director, Passport Office.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS.
HON. HUBERT H. HUMPHREY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HUMPHREY: Pursuant to your letter of July 18, 1956, I have consulted briefly with Miss Frances Knight, Director of the Passport Office, and with representatives of the General Services Administration and the General Accounting Office who originally served as members of the survey team appointed at the request of the committee in 1955 to effect necessary reorganization in that Office, with the objective of carrying out your suggestions for further improvements in its operations.

In a preliminary review of the present operations of the Office, it has been developed that there are several areas which will require further studies and administrative action in order to permit the Passport Office to render adequate service to passport applicants in accordance with the reorganization program. These surveys and studies are presently under way.

It develops that, although the new mechanized program initiated early this year has been effective in many respects, there are still certain problems that have to be resolved before the Office will be able to keep abreast of the increased demands for passport services. As you have indicated, there appears to be a need for closer liaison with the Congress, improved telephone facilities, increased seasonal personnel to meet the demands for passports during peak travel periods or to handle emergencies, and more flexibility in budgetary authority in order that changing personnel and supply requirements may be met promptly. The staff will direct its efforts, through the cooperation of the Director, the members of the original survey team, and officials of the Department of State, to effect appropriate administrative action to accomplish these objectives.

I have been in contact with officials of the Bureau of Security and Consular Affairs, who have indicated a desire to cooperate with the staff in working out solutions to these problems, after full information has been developed through conferences with the Director of the Passport Office and the other Government officials.

Contact has also been made with officials of the International Travel Division, Department of Commerce, and the staff will give consideration to information and recommendations submitted to that Agency by the Travel Advisory Committee relative to further reorganizations of the Passport Office, the developments of the statistical information service by the Office and effecting appropriate adjustments in passport fees.

As previously indicated, a report will be prepared for submission to you and other members of the committee as soon as all the facts have been developed, with recommendations for further committee action.

With kinds regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

WALTER L. REYNOLDS,
Staff Director.

A New Horizon for Farmers

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RALPH HARVEY
OF INDIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HARVEY. Mr. Speaker, many of us concerned with the future of American agriculture are giving increasing attention to a proposal that a part of the press has dubbed the Indiana plan. This is the proposal that would seek to open up a new horizon for our farmers by marshaling the scientific resources of the country to concentrate on the development of new industrial uses for farm products through research.

Last week, Mr. Speaker, the House Subcommittee on Research and Extension, with Chairman THOMAS G. ABERNATHY presiding, took testimony on H. R. 10125. This is my bill, serving as the House counterpart to an identical measure introduced on the other side of the Hill by Senator HOMER E. CAPEHART and 33 cosponsors. While action on the measure is hardly expected so late in the waning hours of the 84th Congress, I wish to assure all those interested, in and out of Washington, that the legislation will be reintroduced in the next Congress. It is my confident hope that in the foreseeable future the essence of this proposal will become basic law in the long-range program for a sound and expanding national farm economy.

For the record, Mr. Speaker, I should like to reproduce here the statement I was privileged to place before members of the subcommittee:

Mr. Chairman, on behalf of myself and many others, I wish to thank you for your courtesy and thoughtfulness in scheduling this hearing.

While it appears certain this session of Congress is about to conclude, surely the subject matter of the proposal before us deserves attention and consideration.

Although H. R. 10125 bears my name as author, its sponsorship can be widely credited. In its present form, it was first introduced as S. 3503, with 33 Senators joining the Honorable HOMER E. CAPEHART in its sponsorship. On this side of Capitol Hill, numerous House colleagues have advised me of their approval of the bill's aim, and four of them—Representatives ADAIR, BEAMER, BRAY, and HARDEN—have offered duplicate proposals.

The subject of H. R. 10125 is that of research, research of a type that will broaden the industrial and commercial uses of farm production, particularly farm commodities in surplus.

On this occasion, Mr. Chairman, I believe we sense the irony of the American farm problem. Mankind, since the dawn of recorded history, has known no greater problem than that of sustaining life by protecting food from the ravages of flood and famine. But today our farms and farmers are most seriously challenged by the constant production of more food and fiber than can be consumed. The problem is more incredible with the realization that millions throughout the world are in dire want of food and clothing.

It should be noted, I think, that the Congress has acted to ease the situation. Public Law 480, for example, is operating with more and more success to help distribute our agricultural largess among needy and friendly people of the world. Only last week the President reported that United States commodities valued at more than $1 billion had been disposed of by means of this legislative act.

But the surplus-disposal law, like earlier enactments limiting crop production and the more recent one creating a soil bank, must be recognized for what they are—temporary devices that promise no permanent solution of the basic problem. I am one of those, Mr. Chairman, who feel sure our farmers are no different than other productive Americans—deservedly most happy and prosperous when they are producing to the maximum of their ability, with due regard for enlightened practices of conservation in order to preserve the fertility of the soil for future generations.

The employment of scientific research as an aid to agriculture is not new in our history. Legislation creating our land-grant agricultural colleges was enacted 94 years ago. And through nearly a century of research activities under Government direction, we have witnessed amazing advancement in the productivity of our farms. This progress has released millions of people from the cultivating of food and fiber to work in the factories and mills of industry, and thus accounts for today's high standard of living.

But is it not apparent, Mr. Chairman, that the time has come to shift the emphasis of agricultural research? In the face of mountainous surpluses, we are spending this year about eight times as much money for still greater production than we are to find new and extended uses for the crops we have. H. R. 10125 is urged as a practical and realistic expression of faith in our ability to find new and enriching industrial uses for the output of modern-day farming. Surely in terms of our national well-being, we need not to produce more, but to realize more from all we produce.

At present we have four regional laboratories, each devoting limited funds and modest manpower to scientific research. Their work, much of it impressive, is divided between the search for better production and new utilization of existing production. I certainly am not complaining about the work that has been done. It is conceded that a great deal of good has accrued from both types of research, nor would I wish us to abandon research in methods to increase the productivity of our farms. What I am saying is that we need now to concentrate more of our resources upon research for new and broader utilization of farm production.

Research for use, some will say, is going on daily, thanks to the laboratories of private industry. But is this enough? I would not want to be in the position of saying that such research is not good, because I think it is. What I am saying is that this type of research is not dedicated to a solution of the overall problem, which is the lack of industrial use of the surplus products we have.

Perhaps I can illustrate my point by citing the several great industrial concerns who are currently seeking to devise substitutes for cotton. Now cotton is one of our surplus problems, and the economic welfare of millions of people is dependent on cotton. Surely research is a matter of future concern to them, because cottongrowers themselves cannot conduct a research program. We should at least try to help them hold their own in a fiercely competitive race by seeking new and better uses for cotton.

We have seen tremendous progress come about in the utilization of soybeans which is a newcomer in terms of the long-range agriculture picture. Our Midwest regional laboratory, located in Illinois, has made some very worthwhile contributions with regard to better uses for soybean byproducts, and this has meant millions of dollars to the agriculture of the Nation. I cite this as a good example of the potential of utilization research, but the program of research in my opinion has to have much more emphasis and much more money for its use.

I know that the Department of Agriculture has historically supervised all agricultural research even into commercial utilization and I believe they have given to this activity the very best support. My bill, however, provides that there shall be set up a separate administration for industrial-agricultural research and it is given certain powers, duties, and responsibilities. The members of this agency shall be subject to appointment by the President and the members shall serve at his pleasure. The administration which my bill would create is to conduct scientific research, maintain and expand pilot plants wherever necessary, operate manufacturing facilities to prove the commercial feasibility of volume production, and in every way promote the finding and development of commercial uses of agricultural products.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that such an agency for budgetary reasons alone can proceed more expeditiously if operated independently of the Department of Agriculture. But whether the Congress in its wisdom finally concludes to approve the provisions of my bill or amend it to make it a continuing but considerably expanded segment of the Department, the main thing I want to stress here today is the urgency for action.

Accomplishments of the 2d Session, 84th Congress, Directly Concerning Montana

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
HON. MIKE MANSFIELD
OF MONTANA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a résumé of the accomplishments of the 2d session, 84th Congress, which directly concern the State of Montana as prepared by Senator JAMES E. MURRAY, Representative LEE METCALF, and myself, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE 2D SESSION, 84TH CONGRESS, DIRECTLY CONCERNING MONTANA

(By Senator JAMES E. MURRAY, Senator MIKE MANSFIELD, and Representative LEE METCALF)

The 2d session of the 84th Congress approved a number of laws and appropriations beneficial to Montana. They include the following:

1. A $500,000 appropriation provides for construction, by the Army engineers, of the badly needed second powerplant at Fort Peck Dam. This plant, when completed, will add 80,000 kilowatts to the existing 85,000-kilowatt plant now in operation.

2. Construction of a new fish hatchery at Miles City was authorized and $359,000 appropriated for construction. This hatchery will produce approximately 10 million bass, blue gill, pike, and catfish annually.

3. The Helena Valley unit received an additional $1,750,000 appropriation for a total of $4 million. Construction of the dam and reservoir should begin shortly after an additional contract is signed with supplemental water users of the city of Helena.

4. An appropriation of $225,000 for the Bitterroot Irrigation District in western Montana will permit rehabilitation and repair work and thus reduce farmers' maintenance costs and assure them a reasonable uninterrupted delivery of irrigation water.

5. The Corps of Army Engineers received $200,000 with which to begin construction of the flood-control project at Billings.

6. An appropriation of $115,000 for the lower Marias unit will permit cleanup work on Tiber Dam and Reservoir, a Bureau of Reclamation project; Tiber Dam will be operated for the first full year in fiscal 1957.

7. Congress authorized $1,236,000 in additional funds for construction and operation of training facilities, maintenance, housing, and community facilities at Malmstrom Air Base, Great Falls. A total of $706,000 was appropriated for this installation.

8. The Glasgow Air Base, now under construction, received an additional authorization of $2,470,000 for operational training, maintenance, utility, and family-housing facilities and for ground improvements and land acquisition. A total of $3,677,000 was appropriated for this project, a portion of this amount having been authorized previously.

9. Congress authorized and appropriated $21 million to implement a strategic minerals-purchase program which will permit some 250 persons to stay on the payroll of fluorspar companies at Hamilton and Darby and the tungsten operation at Dillon.

10. Congress authorized the letting of contracts with water users organizations for drainage works and other completion items on small irrigation projects. This new law is particularly helpful to the Buffalo Rapids irrigation project near Terry and the Greenfields Irrigation District near Fairfield.

11. The Milk River mosquito-control program was bolstered by increased allocations by the Department of Agriculture and the Public Health Service.

12. Congress approved appropriations to initiate a long-range program for the improvement of Glacier and Yellowstone National Parks. Funds were increased for the all-important State and private forestry-cooperative programs of the National Forest Service.

13. Montana libraries in communities with less than 10,000 population will share a grant of $40,000 to Montana for improvement of rural-library service. This appropriation followed passage of the Library Services Act this session.

14. Congress appropriated $50,000 for barley research this year and of that amount $11,600 will go to Montana, for research on two-row barley at Montana State College.

15. Montana was allocated $138,671 in Federal funds for airport development during fiscal 1957. These funds were divided as follows: Billings, $17,167; Great Falls, $29,854; Missoula, $25,000; Plentywood, $66,650.

Public Law 685 of the 84th Congress has amended the small projects authority of the 1950 Flood Control Act, by raising the limitation on Federal expenditure for small flood-control projects from $150,000 to $400,000. This new law will allow the Army engineers to proceed with the construction of the West Glendive flood-control project, waiving the requirement for local contribution of all construction costs over and above the former Federal cost limitation of $150,000. This will save local interests approximately $15,000 to $20,000.

This summary does not include passage of general legislation like the highway bill, which will mean hundreds of millions of dollars to Montana during the next 13 years. But one such major bill deserves mention here because of the part ordinary Montana citizens had in it.

A provision written into the military construction authorization assures telephone and electric cooperatives the right to serve SAGE air defense installations in their area. Previously some cooperatives were being bypassed even though they could do the job more cheaply than private utilities could. The construction of duplicating lines will be forbidden by this amendment. It has been estimated that this and other provisions of the new military construction law will result in savings to the taxpayers of $830 million. We are pleased to add that this economizing legislation was initiated by representatives of two Montana cooperatives, the Mid-Rivers Telephone Cooperative with headquarters at Circle, and the Sheridan County Electric Cooperative with headquarters at Medicine Lake.

One executive decision strongly urged by ourselves and some other Members of Congress from Western States is particularly helpful to Montana. We refer to the Secretary of the Army's decision to maintain the 96th Infantry Reserve Division in its present operating status instead of reducing it to a maneuver area command as once programed. An unfavorable decision would have doomed the reserve armory construction and entire Army Reserve setup in Montana. Army has approved Army Reserve training center sites at Billings, Bozeman, Butte, Glasgow, Great Falls, Havre, Livingston, and Polson. We would emphasize that these designations are for planning purposes only and that final departmental approval of the projects and requests for construction funds for the necessary 100-man and 200-man armories cannot be initiated until the minimum strength of troop program units meets the departmental requirements.

Eastern Montana has been plagued by serious drought conditions this year and we have repeatedly appealed to the Secretary of Agriculture for assistance for these counties. We were disappointed and disturbed when the Secretary did not declare all 17 counties in eastern Montana as disaster areas as requested by the Governor of Montana. However, we were able to obtain an allowance for some of these counties to continue grazing on soil-bank acreage during the summer months.

During the past year considerable progress was made locally and nationally in bringing attention to the deplorable conditions which exist among some of the Indian reservations and settlements in the State such as Hill 57 in Great Falls. It was unfortunate that legislation providing for relief of depressed areas, including Indian tribes, did not pass before adjournment of Congress. However, Congress did enact legislation, Public Law 959, providing for a vocational training program for Indians between the ages of 18 and 35 to help them obtain employment. The Bureau of Indian Affairs has been persistent in its denial of additional aid to the destitute Indians in Montana, but we shall continue our efforts in behalf of "America's first citizens," the Indians.

The most grievous defeat for the people of Montana during this session was the Presidential veto of the resolution which would have authorized payment of $5 million to the Crow Indians for Yellowtail Dam land and right-of-way, and thus cleared away the last obstacle to construction of this multipurpose project which will mean so much to the industry and growth of our State. We believe the record of the 84th Congress, as it affects Montana, is good. We plan to make the record of the 85th Congress even better by providing, at the earliest opportunity, for a $5 million settlement for the Crow Indians. We are hopeful that the President, whomever he may be, and his advisers will agree that this figure is just and reasonable, and approve the proposal so we can get on with the job of building Yellowtail Dam and thus a better life for Montanans.

Report to First Congressional District of New Jersey

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, as I again make my report to the First Congressional District, it is with a feeling of utmost appreciation for the opportunity that has been given to me to serve this fine congressional district in the House of Representatives. I trust that my service has been satisfactory. I have tried to the best of my ability to be zealous in doing what I have considered best, not only for the people I have the honor to represent, but, also to promote the welfare of all our people and make America strong and secure.

PEACE

It is particularly pleasing to realize that our Nation is at peace. Four years ago, when General Eisenhower was a candidate for President, he pledged, if elected, he would make a personal visit to the battlefields of Korea, and would endeavor, to the best of his ability, to bring the war to an end. We are all grateful that this has been accomplished and as a consequence our boys are no longer being killed or maimed on Korean battlefields.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Everyone is conscious of the fact that since World War II we have been living in a world of uncertainty. It has seemed that each day presented some new problem that required solution. It is also generally recognized that Russia in most instances, either working alone or through its satellite nations, has been the cause of this uncertainty. This at times has created situations of a most critical character. A single unwise act or word upon our part might or could have precipitated war. We should be thankful to Almighty God for guiding our course as a nation in such a manner that peace prevails among the nations of the world. There can be no doubt that this Nation, as it has assumed the moral leadership of the world, has been an instrument in God's hands in promoting a greater sense of understanding and good will among the nations of the world. Although at times it may have been but a flickering light, yet it has been sufficient at all times to light the way to a better and more peaceful world. It should be our fervent prayer that the light of morality among nations will continue to grow stronger that peace and good will may be established and made enduring.

GENEVA CONFERENCE

In considering what seems to be a new force working for a more peaceful existence in the world, we should not overlook the tremendous good that was created by the Conference at Geneva, nor the great influence of President Eisenhower in directing the course of the Conference and thereby creating a more friendly attitude among the great nations of the world and thus promoting the cause of peace and good will.

It has been acknowledged throughout the world, if we can judge by the favorable comments of the foreign press, as well as our own columnists and editors, that President Eisenhower by his magnetic personality, his words of wisdom, his evident sincerity, and his high and unselfish ideals, raised the Conference to the highest level of any meeting of world diplomats that has ever been held. Even Russia since the Conference has announced new policies that have astonished the world as a new approach to a more peaceful existence. It will be our hope that fulfillment of these policies by Russia will be as genuine as the words that were used in expressing them.

FOREIGN AID

Since World War II we have given many billions of dollars for foreign aid. This was necessary because of the impoverished condition of our allies. Their need was so great that if we had refused the aid so sorely needed they could have been taken over by communism very easily. However, the economic and military financial aid we extended have enabled them to retain their independence from Russian domination, and, in addition, we have built up an organization of military strength in each of these nations, the existence of which can be of real assistance to us in time of any emergency and a strong deterrent against war at this or any other time. Thus, while our expenditures for foreign aid have been great, yet, equally great have been the beneficial results attained by us. And, with lessening of world tensions we can look forward to a substantial curtailment in such expenditures in the near future.

FISCAL POLICIES

At the present time the high degree of prosperity that exists throughout the Nation is exceedingly gratifying. With 66½ million of our people gainfully employed, at the highest average rate of wages ever paid in the entire history of our Nation, and, with production at the highest peak of all time, we have reason to be truly thankful. In addition to all of this, we have a fiscal policy that has not only balanced our budget, as promised by President Eisenhower during his campaign for the Presidency, but, has provided a surplus of receipts over expenditures that has enabled us to utilize such surplus in reduction of the national debt and thereby cut down the tremendous interest charges incurred by previous administrations because of their failure to live within our means. These satisfactory results arising from a sound fiscal policy make for a strong Nation. Financial stability is of prime importance in maintaining our security in the present and in the future. A continuance of such is most necessary.

TAX REDUCTION

The tax reductions effected by the Republican Congress in the 83d Congress under the Eisenhower administration totaled $7,400,000,000. This reduction was made possible by the greatest economy drive in the history of our country. Through the elimination of wasteful duplication, and often ridiculous spending policies set up and carried on by the previous administrations, it has been possible for the present Eisenhower administration to cut the expenditures of Government and, in consequence thereof, cut taxes by $7,400,000,000. This spectacular Republican effort produced the largest tax reduction in the history of the world and ended the "tax and spend" policy of the previous administrations to the great relief of financially burdened taxpayers in every walk of life. And these reductions represented the first big step in a long-range program to rewrite our tax laws in the interest of fairness to all the taxpayers, and thereby permit them to retain as much of their hard-earned money as possible. President Eisenhower with a Republican Congress can continue to give this kind of tax relief if elected.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Notwithstanding the strong desire for peace in our Nation, yet, as long as the world continues in an uncertain state with some nations less peaceably inclined than our own, it is necessary for our own security to maintain a strong national defense. The amount to be spent is necessarily large. However, under the wise and informed leadership of President Eisenhower, the greatest military man of our time, and Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson, who is undoubtedly the greatest production engineer of our time, we can rest assured that whatever may be the program decided upon by these two men, it will be the best that wisdom and experience can devise. There will be neither waste nor anything beyond what necessity would demand.

Already under this administration there has been a considerable reduction in the cost of our national defense. The two outstanding men at the head of our defense, President Eisenhower and Secretary Wilson, know better than anyone else what we need and how to get an adequate defense at the least possible cost. Their performance in the past is a guaranty of what we can expect from their continuance in office. A Congress that is in accord with them, and, willing to make effective the program they decide upon, can be most helpful in providing a strong and adequate defense at reasonable cost.

LABOR

There are more of our people at work, earning more, building more, saving more, and buying more than at any other time in our history as a nation. We are enjoying the highest standard of living ever enjoyed by any nation in history. An increasing population, businessmen actively engaged in starting new enterprises and expanding old ones, and the discoveries of science and technology opening up new opportunities, give promise of providing even greater employment and an even higher standard of living.

President Eisenhower's administration, with the Honorable James P. Mitchell, as Secretary of Labor, presented to Congress a slate of labor legislative proposals which included more major items, benefiting more wage earners, than has been included in any labor legislative program in many years. Some of its more important recommendations were: First, amendment of the Taft-Hartley law; second, amendment of the Fair Labor Standards Act to increase the minimum wage and to bring additional workers within its coverage; third, to revise and improve the 8-hour laws relating to work on Federal contracts; fourth, to provide financial aid to the States for improving industrial safety; fifth, to increase benefits payable under workmen's compensation under the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Act; sixth, to further improve the District of Columbia Unemployment Insurance Act in line with other recommendations by President Eisenhower for improvement of the Federal-State unemployment compensation system; and seventh, a bill to require equal pay for women to eliminate discriminatory wage practices based on sex.

Some of the above, in part or in whole, have been adopted. Others, and in addition to the above, await action by Congress. Among the many things that were done to promote the welfare of the workers was the adoption of a $1 per hour minimum wage law, with an expanded coverage thereunder; increased pay for postal workers and other Federal employees, together with improved retirement benefits and civil-service provisions; retention of Walsh-Bacon Act for the benefit of workers on Government projects. There was other legislation that will be helpful to workers. This includes legislation increasing benefits for rail workers, their widows, and dependents. In this connection, I am pleased to include in my remarks a letter received by me from G. E. Leighty, chairman, Railway Labor Executives Association. He wrote:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: On behalf of all organized railroad employees both retired and active, I want to thank you for your help in obtaining relief for our retired people.

Your career has been marked with many manifestations of your concern for the welfare of our people. For this we are, as ever, grateful.

Sincerely,

G. E. LEIGHTY,
Chairman.

AGRICULTURE

Real prosperity in our Nation demands prosperity in each segment of our economy. There can be no real prosperity if it pertains only to labor, nor, equally true, if there is only agricultural prosperity but none for labor. There must be prosperity for both and every other activity within the Nation if there is to be full national prosperity. We all go up together, or, we all go down together. This describes the situation both fully and accurately.

In speaking of prosperity in agriculture, I am well aware that recently in some sections of the country it has not been as great as some might desire. But, when there is a tendency to criticize, it might be well to remember that when the Republicans took office in January 1953, farm prices had been declining for 2 years. Prices received by farmers had dropped 15 percent between February 1951 and January 1953. This sharp rate of decline has been in great measure stopped and prices have leveled off and show more stability.

The President, since assuming office, has endeavored to have policies adopted that would be helpful in halting any further dropping of prices, and, that would give real price protection to farmers. To accomplish this, he has sought to rebuild export markets, sale of agricultural surpluses, authorization to set aside surplus commodities to be used in constructive ways, such as in school-lunch programs, disaster relief, aid to stricken people in other countries, and stockpiled for use in a national emergency, drought programs, water conservation, tax credits for conservation, new laws improving and expanding farm credit, farm-housing program, expanded Federal crop insurance, more effective agricultural extension service, increased appropriations for Department of Agriculture, agricultural research programs and State experiment stations, agriculture extension service and agricultural conservation programs.

In addition and in order to keep politics from interfering with the administration of farm programs, as has occurred heretofore, he created by Executive order a bipartisan Agricultural Commission to review the policies and administration of farm programs. This new 18-member Commission is made up of 9 Republicans and 9 Democrats. A minimum of 12 members must be farmers.

All of this indicates that President Eisenhower is aware of the needs of the farmer. As time progresses it is becoming more and more evident that the policies inaugurated by the administration, together with the improved general economic condition of the country at large, is working toward a better economic condition for the farmer.

The Department of Agriculture has reported farm prices are on the upturn. While the increase is not yet as high as we want, nor expect it to be, yet, it is most gratifying to realize that the 5-year downturn that commenced under the previous administration has been arrested and farm income is now headed upward. It is clear we have passed the bottom and are definitely on the road to recovery with better prices.

VETERANS

The Republican attitude toward veterans was expressed by President Eisenhower in his first state of the Union message, immediately after he assumed the office of President. He said:

Proper care of our uniformed citizens, and appreciation of the past service of our veterans, are part of our accepted governmental responsibility.

Following this declaration of responsibility toward our ex-servicemen, the Republican Party has shown a desire and intention of fulfilling such obligation. And, such has always been the policy of the Republican Party from the time of the Civil War until the present.

Since the advent of the Eisenhower administration there have been many and varied improvements made in laws beneficial to veterans, their widows, survivors, and dependents. All of these have received increased benefits to which they are justly entitled, in addition to which provision has been made for greatly increased hospital facilities. In the 83d Congress, the first under President Eisenhower, the Republican veterans' program provided more hospital beds and medical care for a greater number of veterans than in any other year. This Republican Congress appropriated $33,032,875 more than the preceding administration and $55 million more than the year preceding that.

In addition to providing increased benefits and increased hospital beds and medical care, under the Eisenhower administration there have been laws to improve the status of veterans in many other ways. For instance, there has been a decided improvement in the law regulating housing loans, improved procedures relating to veterans' life-insurance policies that will give veterans better service, continuance of pay checks and family allotments for Korean war prisoners or soldiers missing in action, extending to Korean veterans public-housing provisions enjoyed by other veterans, facilitating appointment of veterans who had lost civil-service opportunities due to service in the armed services, legislation providing an additional $75 million to pay World War II veterans for compulsory labor or inhuman treatment suffered as prisoners of war, granting preferential status of veterans in Federal employment, and, in addition to the above, many more designed to be beneficial to our veterans.

It has been a personal pleasure and privilege to have had a part in the enactment of these laws, and, assurance is given that the same considerate action may be expected in the future with the privilege of continued service in Congress being granted.

HEALTH AND HOSPITALS

There has been no activity of Government that has been of more interest to the Eisenhower administration and its supporters in Congress than that pertaining to the health and welfare of our people. This interest has been translated into action surpassing all that has been done in the past 20 years.

The intense interest displayed by Republicans in this important activity of Government was shown by the creation of a Cabinet post, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

It was created for the purpose of expanding the Federal Government's interest and participation in promoting the health of our people. Under its jurisdiction has been created facilities to better care for the sick, the disabled, the handicapped in all categories, temporary and chronic. To accomplish this, provision has been made for greater Federal assistance in hospital construction, including nursing homes, rehabilitation centers, clinical and diagnostic centers. All of this has been done through a Federal-State building and maintenance program in which each participates in sharing the cost.

In addition to the hospital construction program, there has been a tremendous interest taken in providing the National Health Service with facilities to carry on the most extensive research as to the cause, prevention, and cure of our most outstanding, crippling, and killing diseases. This includes heart, cancer, all mental, nervous, and muscular diseases. The accomplishments of this increased and ever-expanding research program is producing results that have meant much to the individuals affected by such, as well as providing methods of care and cure that have greatly reduced the cost of maintaining public institutions devoted to their welfare, and also the cost of home and private treatment and care.

There is no Government activity in which the Eisenhower administration is more interested or more definitely committed to extending. Already appropriations for the accomplishment of these activities are being greatly increased each year. I confess it has given me a pleasure and privilege to have been a participant in this great undertaking as a member of the committee having jurisdiction and on two occasions its chairman. It was indeed gratifying to receive the following letter from Dr. Leonard Scheele, the retiring Surgeon General of the United States:

DEPARTMENT OF
HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE,
PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., July 27, 1956.

Hon. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN WOLVERTON: In departing from Washington and my Government career, I want you to know how much I have enjoyed, and have appreciated, my association with you. I shall always cherish the experiences during my years in Government service, and I want you to know that among the most pleasant has been my relationship with you. Your understanding and your sympathy with the aims of the Public Health Service have been an inspiration to all of us. Much of our accomplishment—and I like to think of it as substantial—would not have been possible without your counsel, your friendly and constructive criticism, and your support.

I will be located in New Jersey, as you know, but I hope to come back to Washington from time to time, and, hope that I may be privileged to appear before the Congress in the future in behalf of health legislation. I am sure that our paths will continue to cross.

With all good wishes,
Sincerely yours,

LEONARD A. SCHEELE,
Surgeon General.

HIGHWAYS

President Eisenhower proposed and the Congress enacted a law that will provide the greatest road system in the world. It will cross the Nation from north to south and from east to west. Every one of the 48 States will benefit. It will be financed by Federal-State participation. It will be one of the greatest achievements that has ever been carried out in the entire history of the Nation. It will prove beneficial to all our people and carry the Nation on to greater heights of progress.

SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

Much to the dismay of President Eisenhower the Congress failed to enact a program for school construction. The question of segregation played a big part in the failure to pass appropriate legislation. The Republicans in Congress proposed a measure that would have greatly relieved the present stringent need for additional schoolrooms. The South is adamant in its refusal to accept any legislation that will curtail or eliminate the right of the individual States to adopt a policy of segregation if they so desire. Of course, such a policy runs counter to the Supreme Court, which has declared that segregation, as applied to the public-school system is unconstitutional. It is hoped that legislation can be enacted in the next Congress that will supply the need that exists for additional schools.

HOUSING

Another agency of Government that reflects the interest that Government should take in promoting the welfare of our people is that of providing proper housing and means for individuals to own their own homes. This, taken together with the legislation that has made possible slum clearance and the substitution of up-to-date and sanitary living quarters for the low-income groups, has improved the morale of our people to a point that cannot be fully estimated. In accomplishing these most desirable results the home builders as well as homeowners have been greatly assisted in providing these better living conditions. Homeownership makes for a stronger nation and a more satisfied people.

SOCIAL SECURITY

As an agency of Government social security has proved that it is worth while. Every day there comes to my attention the advantages that arise as a result of its far-reaching provisions. Of course, we are all aware that payments under social security and old-age assistance do not produce a state of affluence by any means, but it does constitute some help to those who come within its provisions. As our experience in its operation increases we learn of deficiencies and the need for improvement.

Since the Eisenhower administration came into office, and under a Republican Congress that was in the majority for only the first 2 years of that administration, great and important changes took place; namely, there was added 10 million citizens to the eligibility rolls, and benefits were increased for more than 6 million of our citizens now entitled to and drawing benefits. The changes approved in social-security legislation were designed to provide coverage for an increased number of our older citizens as rapidly as possible. The changes provide that, by 1960, 75 percent of our citizens reaching 65 years of age will be eligible for benefits. When the Republican administration replaced the previous administration in Washington only 47 percent of our aged were eligible for social-security benefits. It is the basic thought of the Republican administration that the program should be designed for the full benefit of all who now, or in the future, will need to rely upon it. The most recent changes that will prove highly beneficial provide that women shall be entitled to benefits upon reaching the age of 62 years instead of 65, and all totally disabled persons shall be entitled to draw benefits at 50 years of age instead of 65. Thus, we are moving on and the future will see further necessary improvements in the Social Security Act.

CIVIL RIGHTS

The question of civil rights is not new. The same old contentions arise in each session of Congress. The result is that legislation to improve and firmly establish the civil rights guaranteed to all our citizens by the Constitution passes the House and dies in the Senate. Its death in the Senate is not the result of a vote that defeats it but by reason of the fact that under the rules of the Senate it can be talked to death. This is accomplished by a filibuster carried on by Senators from the Southern States who talk and talk. The effect of this waste of time without action is to lay the legislation aside so that other business can be conducted, or, in many instances, the bill is held in committee and not permitted to be reported to the Senate floor for consideration.

This latter condition prevailed in the session just closing. A bill drawn by the Republican administration's Attorney General, Mr. Brownell, provided for the establishment of a bureau within the Justice Department, under an Assistant Attorney General, to investigate any denial of civil rights to any citizen on account of race, color, creed, or national origin, and giving authority to the Justice Department to go into court and protect the rights of any and all citizens. It can be readily seen that such a proposal was reasonable and entitled to favorable consideration by the Congress. And, of course, it would have had the signature of the President if the Congress had passed it.

But notwithstanding the fact the House passed the bill by an overwhelming majority, it was sent to a committee in the Senate on which Democrat Senators from the South prevailed, and the bill was not even permitted to go to the floor of the Senate for discussion or vote.

Such a disposition is wrong. It is hoped that the coming elections in November will correct the wrong by the election of a House and Senate that will see the justice of the legislation and enact it into law.

WOMEN IN GOVERNMENT

Many have said that the women elected President Eisenhower and the Republican Congress in 1952. There can be no higher tribute to our party than to know we have the support of the women of America. Our party will remain strong and effective in providing good government as long as we can claim the support of our women.

As might be expected, the present administration has recognized the ability and utilized the services of women in the Government service to a greater extent than has ever existed heretofore under any other administration. More than 40 top-level posts in the Eisenhower administration are occupied by Republican women, and an estimated 1,200 are holding positions classified by the administration as policymaking or of high administrative authority. They are in diplomatic positions, the United Nations, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, civil defense, social welfare, postal operations, fiscal positions, customs, legal jobs, and in employment and Federal parole offices. And this is only a brief summary of the positions held by women in important agencies of the Government. Altogether there are upward of nearly a half-million women engaged in the Federal Government service.

In the Federal diplomatic service, the Republican administration has called on the aid of women in 67 embassies and 9 legations abroad. Two ambassadorial posts are held by women, in Italy and Switzerland. More than 350 women hold important posts in the Forcign Service.

It is also interesting to note that at the State, county, and local municipal levels, innumerable women have been encouraged by the Republican Party to assume governmental duties. It is unnecessary to say, but pleasing to acknowledge, that in each instance these Republican women are doing an excellent and praiseworthy job. They are bringing credit to the women of America and the Republican Party of which they are a part.

COMMUNISM

The forces of communism are no longer in policymaking positions of our Government. They have been cleared out as soon as their subversive affiliations have become known, and none have been appointed to office by the Eisenhower administration, nor will they be. They are out and will stay out.

CONCLUSION

There is much more that could be said of which the present administration can feel proud and which the people of the Nation approve. In this connection it would seem that there has been nothing that has been more generally approved than the sincerity and dignity that has been displayed by President Eisenhower in his conduct of the affairs of our Nation. From the moment when at his inauguration he asked if he might offer a personal prayer, and in which he displayed a firm faith in the overruling providence of Almighty God and his personal dependence upon that divine source for guidance and help, there has been a feeling among our people that the Nation has as its head not only a just man but a religious man in whom they can trust and in whom they can have confidence. It is good for our Nation that this feeling exists throughout the United States regardless of political affiliation.

May I close by acknowledging the great honor and privilege it has been to represent the First Congressional District in the Congress of the United States. I hope that my service has been satisfactory and that if there have been differences of opinion at any time that at least I may be considered as having been sincere in my convictions and with no desire other than to serve our people well and thereby promote their welfare. The confidence that has been displayed in the past and which I sincerely appreciate I trust may also be justified as to the future.

Settle Cyprus Question

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. PHILIP J. PHILBIN
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, some time ago I forwarded strong appeals and intercessions to the Department of State expressing my deep interest, and urging the good offices of this Government to try to settle this very disturbing issue. At the time the State Department stated in effect that the Cyprus issue involved the direct interests of close friends and allies of the United States and was, therefore, a matter which the United States views with attentive interest.

The Department declared that this Government is ready to assist its friends to work out a solution in the Cyprus question, and that it viewed present problems with sympathetic concern and confidence that a solution can be found which will strengthen overall Western interests.

I find that the State Department Bulletin of some time ago, which was formulated in response to numerous inquiries and protests, is not particularly responsive to the many urgent requests that this Nation use its good offices to bring about a settlement of this dangerous issue; nor does it adequately set forth an outline of American policy in this distressing matter.

Reading the Bulletin, I got the distinct impression that it was comprised of generalized statements that would be applicable to almost any pending diplomatic situation.

In that sense it was disappointing, because I had high hopes that the Department would take a much more active interest and play a much more affirmative and positive role in seeking to bring about a satisfactory solution.

It would appear that the Department is more concerned about the feelings of some of our allies than it is about the settlement of this great human question which affects the claims to freedom of an historic and honored people, and which day by day is causing the deterioration of the attitude toward the western democracies in the Middle East. Cyprus is the type of question that should be approached not on the basis of the interests of allies alone, but on the basis of great fundamental principles to which this Nation is historically and unalterably pledged.

I believe that under the circumstances this Government, which is frequently making pious and understandable professions concerning its interest in world peace, should recognize that the issue of Cyprus is not only measurably disturbing world peace but it is gravely and seriously affecting our own interests and prestige in the Middle and Near East and throughout the world.

As the leading world democracy we above all should recognize that this question of Cyprus involves the sacred principle of self-determination to which Americans have been committed since before the founding of this Nation and which has been reiterated so very strongly during and following two great world wars as well as at many other times.

There is another very serious question involved here and that is the rights of religious minorities—a question which is very dear to the hearts of all true believers in freedom. This question relates not alone to freedom of worship which should be respected everywhere but also as it bears upon this issue, full respect for religious personages.

The callous treatment accorded Archbishop Makarios by the British Government was shocking to the conscience and moral instincts of the Christian and non-Christian world. It was an affront to all followers of religion. I hope and urge that our Government may take vigorous, affirmative steps to acquaint the British Government with the fact that oppression of the kind that is being practiced in Cyprus is offensive to the moral sense of enlightened mankind and will not be condoned by democratic, freedom-loving peoples.

Clearly Cyprus is having most unfortunate, adverse effects upon the cause of the free Western nations. Our Government should, therefore, use all means at its disposal to bring the issue of Cyprus to an early, just, and permanent solution. The free world as a whole will think the better of us for it.

The Farm Problems

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MORGAN M. MOULDER
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MOULDER. Mr. Speaker, the general prosperity is dependent on the prosperity of each major segment of our population. This fact makes the drop in farm income of 28 percent in the last 3 years most disturbing. During this period profits of business and income of others were increasing to an alltime high. Since each depression has been led off by a break in farm income, it is time the causes of the present farm situation be searched out and corrected. The present administration now seems to see the problem, but would do little to correct the causes. From my experience it is my opinion that the President's farm plan, when considered in connection with what our Government is doing to destroy our farmers by foreign aid and other governmental policies, could well do more harm than good. It is a case of giving the average farmer aspirin while he has his production dried up to producing for domestic consumption only. Of course, the big landowner would get several aspirin.

If implemented by cash it will provide a few dollars to each farmer. However, unless great care is taken to see that it is not all distributed to big landowners, it is to be doubted that such payments to the average small farmer will equal what he has lost this year on one hog. After all, what the President asks for is for his Secretary of Agriculture to take action under the law enacted years ago by the Democrats. Having brought about reduced farm income by lowering prices, increasing costs, and cutting acreage, truly, this administration—to cure the problem—has labored and brought forth a mouse.

The point I wish to make, however, is not along the line of how little it amounts to, but actually in view of present policies of our Government I believe for the farmers to rely on such program is dangerous in that it will lull the American farmer into going along with present policies which are destroying American agriculture and the farmer.

Secretary Benson has had and now has unlimited authority to sell our commodities in world trade through normal channels. Until recent months he would not use it. While he has held United States commodities off world markets, our Government is furnishing 738 agricultural experts, at United States expense, to help promote increased foreign agricultural production.

Through various foreign-aid programs the United States is supplying fine seed, tractors and combines, and other farm machinery to nearly every country outside the Soviet bloc. The United States is helping provide irrigation, flood control, highways, and cotton gins to increase foreign production to the point of meeting all world needs in the years ahead.

Our Government was and is granting tax concessions to American financial interests to advance increases in foreign production. United States promoted foreign production has increased as fast as Secretary Benson cut acreage in the United States. All this is shown in the report of the Committee on Agricultural Appropriations.

Pending the day when the United States Government has increased foreign production to the point of there being no need for United States agricultural production, except for our domestic consumption, the Government—through Public Law 480—has been virtually giving away United States commodities to take up slack in world needs, though our Government refused to sell such commodities in world markets.

Many people have supported Public Law 480 and foreign aid without realizing that, through the faulty policy of using Public Law 480 in substitution for sales through normal channels, such programs were being used to put American farmers out of business.

THE REAL CAUSES OF PRICE-COST SQUEEZE

Mr. Speaker, there have been 13 freight-rate increases in the United States since World War II. Prices charged by manufacturers and wholesalers have given them the highest profits ever received. Whatever the merits of such increases and the benefits to these groups, the result has been to increase the costs of what the farmer must buy.

At the same time, the farmer's parity formula has been changed on the recommendation of the Eisenhower administration so that these increased costs are no longer fully reflected in the price supports. The supports are now largely based on the average price the farmer has received for the preceding 10 years.

Since farm income is the sum of volume times price less cost, is it any wonder, in view of reduced acreage and volume, lower prices, and increasing costs, that farm income is dropping rapidly to depression-day levels?

The United States Department of Agriculture has held United States commodities off world markets so as to give markets to foreign countries far beyond their prewar share.

UNITED STATES AID TO INCREASE FOREIGN PRODUCTION

Largely financed by the United States, 1 million new acres of fine farmland have been added in Mexico through irrigation. The same situation exists with regard to many other countries in South and Central America. And in recent weeks, through the Aswan Dam proposal, the United States has taken the first step to help finance the development of 2 million new acres in Egypt.

India, where the United States financed 2,600 deep irrigation wells, has increased cotton production 50 percent since 1950–51 and will have a 4-million-bale crop in 1955–56.

Foreign dairy production has been increased by 740 million pounds of cheese and 66 million pounds of dried milk in the years 1950–54. During that period, while the United States would not sell competitively, exports of cheese from the United States dropped from 47.5 million pounds in 1950 to 5.4 million pounds in 1954.

During the period July 1, 1947, to August 1, 1955, the United States Export-Import Bank of Washington made loans of $250 million to foreign countries for farm machinery and equipment. The International Bank of Reconstruction extended $500 million in loans for the same general purposes.

From April 3, 1948, to March 31, 1955, the United States foreign aid program provided $984,159,436 in United States dollars to promote agriculture in foreign countries and created $710 million of counterpart funds for furtherance of agriculture in those countries. During this period the International Cooperation Administration granted a total of $476,819,000 for agricultural machinery, tractors, and equipment for foreign countries.

On June 1 of last year, there were 738 United States agricultural technicians—paid by our Government—on duty in foreign countries, helping to increase agricultural production. Two hundred and forty of such agricultural technicians are located in Latin America.

THE PRESIDENT'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Secretary Benson and President Eisenhower tried for the first 2 years of this administration to virtually eliminate the present soil-conservation program—in which the Federal Government pays for only about one-third of the soil-conservation work on land.

Making payments for the soil-bank acreage reserve, as recommended by the President, will put a little money into the hands of the farmer, but will cure none of the basic ills. How can these people who now espouse this solution believe in a soil-bank idea, where the Government pays substantially all costs and the farmer would take little affirmative action other than not to farm? May I say it is my belief that the suggested payment for conservation reserve could be much better used if added to funds available for present soil-conservation programs. However, even to receive the recommendation of his soil-bank program, is a belated recognition of the soundness of the action of the Congress in retaining the soil-conservation program in spite of administration attacks against the program back through the years.

Secretary Benson and the President led the fight for modern parity, which reduced parity itself. They led the fight for flexible supports which reduced the percentage of parity, all because they said high-level supports led to farmers producing for sale to the Government.

Now, this election year, after they have reduced price, increased costs, and reduced acreage by holding United States commodities off world markets through refusing to sell for dollars at competitive prices, they claimed to be surprised to learn that farm income is down. The United States Government goes merrily on, supplying dollars to foreign countries for building dams, furnishing seeds, providing tractors and combines and other equipment and machinery, and—to cap it all—at United States taxpayers' expense it furnishes 738 American agricultural specialists to teach people in foreign lands how to increase their production of wheat, cotton, corn, rice, tobacco, dairy products, and all the rest—much of it for export—all to add to world supplies in competition with American farmers.

With this state of affairs the situation of American farmers is bound to get worse before it gets better. Such a course leads to reducing the American farmer to producing for the domestic market only; and to remain solvent he must look to the Government for an annual dole, or Government handout, dependent on the whims of succeeding Congresses, and knowing full well only every fourth year is election year.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES OFFER AT COMPETITIVE PRICES

All foreign countries take what action they deem necessary to help move their agricultural commodities. I cite the following examples of subsidies provided by other countries. France pays $1.40 subsidy per bushel to export wheat: Uruguay pays a subsidy of 47 percent on beef exports; Australia pays an export subsidy on butter and cheese of 11 cents and 7 cents, respectively; and Colombia pays a 40-percent subsidy on tobacco exports. Brazil has met the export problem by juggling its rates of exchange. All these foreign countries move their commodities by one means or another. The United States seems to be one of the few countries which fails to take whatever steps may be necessary to keep its agricultural commodities moving into world markets.

If our Government wants its farmers to have any foreign market, it is basic and fundamental that it must offer what the farmers produce for sale through normal channels in world trade at competitive prices. Such action is not only authorized by law but is contemplated by the law and is essential to protect the American taxpayer as well as the farmer.

UNITED STATES POLICY ADDS TO WORLD SUPPLY

By refusing to sell, the United States has and is cutting its own farmers' production down and is putting many of them out of production entirely. Such United States Government policies constantly add to total world supplies and United States surpluses. Even more dangerous, perhaps, is the fact that the United States is deliberately promoting increased world production in foreign countries for export. In addition to creating competition for United States farm products, such a policy will eventually enable Russia to meet her agricultural needs from these other countries, despite anything the United States may do to prevent it.

ORIGINAL FARM PROGRAM

The farm program was originally written in the midst of the last depression, at a time when the farmers' purchasing power had fallen to an alltime low, leading to the break in prices which resulted in the depression. It was realized that if we were to restore a fair share of the purchasing power to farmers, in relation to other segments of our economy which are protected by various laws, agriculture would have to have protections written into the law.

It was then provided and has since remained, until changed on the recommendation of the Eisenhower administration through Benson, the present Secretary of Agriculture, that price supports should be a percentage of the comparative purchasing power which the farmer had in 1909–14, which was determined by the Congress to be a fair base. Under that formula, the price the farmer was guaranteed, which was less than 100 percent of parity, was based on a parity formula which rose with increasing costs the farmer paid and fell with decreasing costs.

The whole approach was to assure the farmer a fair share of the Nation's purchasing power.

SECRETARY BENSON'S FARM PROGRAM

Secretary Benson apparently has differed with that concept. It seems to be his view, and concurred in by President Eisenhower, that price supports should be limited, as he would describe it, to preventing the bottom from falling out of prices; and he considers price-support levels as a means of regulating production.

First he recommended, and has gotten through the Congress, a change in parity. The old formula was repealed, leaving a so-called modern parity wherein price supports are based not on maintaining the average purchasing power of the farmer, but largely on the average price the farmer has received for the past 10 years. The so-called flexible price-support program.

Thus, increasing costs because of such factors as wage increases, and the 13 freight rate increases mentioned are not fully reflected under the new formula in the price the farmer receives from price supports. Actually, should the farmer have to continue to sell at the price-support level under modern parity, the price he receives will gradually go down, though his cost of production will probably continue to rise.

Further evidence that the Secretary has a different concept of price supports is that he would assure the farmer a larger percentage of parity under his flexible support formula—the average price the farmer has been receiving for the past 10 years—if supplies are short. Of course, if supplies are short enough, there will be a demand and a market and less farmer need for supports. On the other hand, if supplies are large so that there is virtually no market, which means that the farmer is in more serious straits, Secretary Benson would give a smaller percentage of his modern parity. Thus the Secretary's law helps the farmer more when he needs less help and provides less help when he needs more. That is the principle of the law which the Eisenhower administration requested and got through the Congress.

Experience has shown that a lower price does not necessarily reduce production; for the farmer, in the absence of other controls, will increase production in an effort to retain his income, declining because of reduced prices.

NONBASIC COMMODITIES

With regard to the nonbasic commodities, Secretary Benson has given clear evidence that he either does not understand the approach contemplated under the law or is opposed to it. To support prices for nonbasics, section 32 funds are made available to him automatically each year. A courageous Secretary of Agriculture should move in promptly, having the money at his disposal, and announce a purchase program before a break in the price of nonbasic commodities occurs.

When we review the actual operations of the various farm programs each year, there have been numerous instances where a prompt announcement that the Government would purchase a commodity in distress has resulted in sustaining the market. Usually it has had to buy very little of the commodity.

PORK PURCHASE

The prime example of the Secretary's lack of understanding is the break in hog prices last fall. This break could easily be foreseen. However, instead of moving in promptly, the Department of Agriculture waited until prices broke, as I recall, from some 20 cents a pound to around 15 cents a pound. Even at that time, instead of moving in to support prices, Secretary Benson announced in the press that the prices had not yet broken sufficiently for the Department to justify moving in. He stated that if prices broke still further apparently meaning to around 13 cents the Department would buy millions of dollars' worth of pork.

While I grant that it was probably not so intended, if you analyze this announcement, it was obviously an open invitation to the meat packers to further reduce prices to the farmers, in which event they would have a ready sale to Mr. Benson's Department of Agriculture for $85 million worth of pork. Quite naturally, within a short time the meat packers met his requirement, reduced the price as he indicated, and are now selling pork to Mr. Benson. The Secretary forgot to require that any benefits be passed on to the farmer, and the packers are declaring the largest dividends in years.

UNITED STATES COMMODITIES MUST CONTINUE FOR SALE IN WORLD MARKETS

Whether you believe in the approach of Secretary Benson, which is that price supports should be a means of regulating production, or whether you agree with me and others that price support should be used to maintain the purchasing power of the farmer, one thing is essential to either approach: That is, the production of American farmers, which is surplus to American need, must be kept on world markets for sale for dollars.

To finance these support programs, the Commodity Credit Corporation was created.

The Congress, in order to protect the domestic price, provided that the CCC could sell on the domestic market at its investment price, plus reasonable carrying charges, normally set at 105 percent of parity. However, when the Congress limited the price at which the commodities could be sold domestically, it also realized that in order to retain any of our share of world markets we must make our offering prices competitive with those of the same commodities produced in other parts of the world. Thus the charter of the Commodity Credit Corporation also provided for sales in world markets on a truly competitive basis, or at any price necessary to move them.

Most of our present difficulties have resulted from the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture has been buying commodities as provided by the law, but has refused to sell them in world markets as contemplated by that same law.

SALES POLICY, OR RATHER, LACK OF

For the past several years and until recent months, our Government has made the support price its offering price in world trade. In the words of Secretary Benson, this country became the residual supplier. By sticking to a position of offering our production in world trade either at the domestic sale price or at a fixed price close to that level, we have held an umbrella over expansion in world production. Foreign buyers have bought elsewhere until the world supply was exhausted, and then the United States has taken up the slack. These are the words of the Department of Agriculture, and yet that Department has at all times had authority to sell in world trade at truly competitive prices. Until recent months it has not exercised that authority, and is now doing so only on a very limited basis.

The course followed is an open invitation for foreign expansion in the very commodities in trouble in the United States. The records show such invitation has been accepted. As we have reduced acreage in the United States, under Mr. Benson's convenient umbrella over world prices, foreign production has increased at approximately the same rate that our farmers were reduced. This was not because of the high level of supports in the United States, but because of faulty governmental policy. I would point out again that whatever the level of supports, Mr. Benson and the Department of Agriculture have had, and now have, authority to sell in world trade at whatever price it takes to move the commodities.

WHAT WE MUST DO

It is my opinion that there are several things which must be done.

First. We must stop all foreign aid which increases production of agricultural commodities for export.

The present program whereby the United States is furnishing capital, machinery, improved seed, and technical assistance is doing United States agriculture great harm. And when this is coupled with tax concessions for United States investors abroad and a Government policy of holding United States commodities off world markets at competitive prices, despite authority to sell—thereby holding an umbrella over world prices—it can only have the effect of wrecking the present farm program or any which might be adopted.

Second. Whatever the percentage of purchasing power the farmer should have in the opinion of the Congress, and I personally believe 90 percent is low enough, we should immediately restore the original parity formula so that parity will be tied tightly to the cost of what the farmer has to buy and provide that whichever formula—modern or old—provides the highest support level should apply.

Third. Since reduction in acreage will not necessarily reduce production of the basic commodities, price supports should be placed on a given number of pounds, bushels, or bales with some attention to farmers instead of being tied to land entirely. It is bad enough for small farmers to be squeezed because of economics; certainly we must see they are not squeezed out of business by Federal law.

I know many farmers differ with this approach. They believe that under acreage controls, by the use of fertilizer and other chemicals, they can produce just as much on reduced acreage. In fact, they usually have; but what most farmers overlook is that each time they do this, under present law they get further reductions in acreage the next year—with more fertilizer and other overhead costs. Thus each year the situation becomes worse.

Fourth. In order that curtailment in United States production will have the effect of reducing world production, which is essential to any effective farm program in the United States, I believe the Congress should require the Secretary of Agriculture to use his authority under the CCC charter to offer our commodities in the markets of the world for sale for dollars through normal channels on a competitive basis. This should be done at least to the extent of recapturing our normal share of world markets.

Fifth. Since most of the CCC losses come from inferior quality commodities, we should greatly increase the spread of support levels for good and poor qualities. This should be done by increasing supports on the good grades to the extent supports are lowered on inferior qualities.

Sixth. We should see that United States farm production is allowed to move into every section of the United States free of local boycotts or other restrictions.

Seventh. We must insist that the Secretary of Agriculture move promptly in the purchase of perishables, diverting purchases to the school lunch or similar good uses; and we must require that the benefits be passed on to the producer.

The suggestions I make are "musts." If we act on them, doubtless experience will show other changes which may be needed later.

ACTION BY CONGRESS

In the last appropriation bill before the Congress we made separate provision for a sales organization, for which there was already authority and funds but no organized sales force. Over the opposition of Secretary Benson we earmarked money in the bill for that purpose only. This organization has now been set up.

The committee also provided separate funds to find out what foreign countries are doing to export their commodities, though here, too, authority and funds were already available.

We provided for a study by the Department as to the price spread between the farmer and consumer, because the Department was urging reduced farm price supports. This information is now being assimilated.

We demanded that United States commodities be sold in world trade on a competitive basis; and in recent months limited amounts of several commodities have been offered on a competitive-bid basis. But even here the announcement of the Department of Agriculture gives no assurance that our Government will issue an export permit to whomever buys commodities on a competitive-bid basis from the CCC for export.

CONCLUSION

We may argue as to the proper parity percentage; we may argue as to the mechanics of the program; but in order to be of lasting value to the farmer, the support price must be tied to the cost of what the farmer has to buy. That we did have. That has been taken away from the farmer by the Eisenhower administration.

Any farm program, to be workable, must provide for the sale of what we produce over and above our needs in world trade for what it will bring; that is authorized by existing law, but has not been done.

Any farm program, if it is to work, requires an absolute cessation of the use of United States taxpayers' money for foreign aid to put the farmer out of business by providing everything for foreign expansion, including an umbrella over the sale of their increased production. If this foreign aid, which increases foreign production for export, is not stopped soon there will be no foreign markets to reach and the United States farmer will be cut back to producing for the domestic market only. Under existing administration policies such a situation is drawing near.

Activities of the House Committee on Public Works, 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES A. BUCKLEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. Speaker, with the adjournment of the 84th Congress the Committee on Public Works left behind it an outstanding record of legislative enactments which, without doubt, is the most important program of public works that has ever come from this committee during any session of the Congress.

Six hundred and twenty bills were referred to the committee during the first and second sessions. Eighty-six of these measures were acted upon favorably by the committee, 72 of which were passed by both Houses.

In addition, the committee adopted 74 river and harbor resolutions and 65 flood-control resolutions. These resolutions authorized review survey studies by the Corps of Engineers that will ultimately result in project reports submitted to Congress if the projects are found worthy and are approved by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors and the Chief of Engineers.

The committee also approved 141 post office and Federal office buildings for construction under the Lease-Purchase Act—Public Law 519, 83d Congress—involving a total estimated cost of $753,040,994. Of this number 88, at a total estimated cost of $516,532,540, carried budget approval; 22 at a total estimated cost of $11,662,954 were revised projects with budget approval; and 31 at a total estimated cost of $224,845,500 were approved subject to budget approval.

FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAY ACT OF 1956 (PUBLIC LAW 627)

Probably the most outstanding piece of legislation handled by this committee is the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956, providing for a $25.5 billion construction program on the Interstate Highway System through fiscal year 1969, and $2.5 billion for Federal-aid highways through fiscal year 1959. The States will provide matching funds in the amount of 50 percent on the Federal-aid highway system and 10 percent on the Interstate System. As a result of this legislation, the 43 States of the Nation are about to embark upon the largest highway building program in the history of the world.

RIVER AND HARBOR AND FLOOD CONTROL OMNIBUS ACT OF 1956 (H. R. 12080)

Equally important to the Nation is the Omnibus River and Harbor and Flood Control Act of 1956, H. R. 12080. The committee gave detailed consideration to the needs of every section of the country in formulating this bill, especially with respect to flood control remedial works necessary as a result of the disastrous floods in the Kansas River area in 1954, the northeast floods induced by hurricanes which occurred last fall, and the west coast floods of last December and January. The bill contains 108 project authorizations in 37 States.

WATER POLLUTION CONTROL AMENDMENTS OF 1956 (PUBLIC LAW 660)

This legislation is designed to strengthen and extend the Water Pollution Control Act of 1948. It authorizes funds for research, investigations, training, and information programs, and provides financial assistance to States and Territories to assist them in meeting the cost of establishing water pollution control measures. In addition, it provides, for the first time, financial assistance to States, cities, and municipalities for construction of sewage treatment works. Fifty million dollars annually is authorized to be appropriated for this purpose, with a maximum of $500 million for 10 years. The Federal grant for any project will be 30 percent of total cost, or $250,000, whichever is the smaller. The measure provides that 50 percent of the funds must be used for communities with less than 125,000 population. The Second Supplemental Appropriation Act of 1957 carries a $50 million appropriation for the start of this program.

Below is a brief summary of other general bills acted upon favorably by the committee and enacted into law during the 84th Congress:

Small flood-control projects—Public Law 685: Authorizes the Secretary of the Army to allot not to exceed $10 million in any one fiscal year for construction of small flood-control projects not specifically authorized by law, when in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers, such work is warranted, with not more than $400,000 to be allotted for any single locality. Will permit immediate construction of flood-protective works in many areas which might otherwise be unduly delayed awaiting the usual detailed survey and authorization process.

Federal participation in protection of private as well as public shore property—Public Law 826: Extends the policy of Federal participation in the construction of shore-protection measures to shores of privately owned property under certain circumstances, as well as the shores of publicly owned property. Also clarifies existing policy with respect to periodic placement of sand fills, and eliminates the presently unnecessary seawall proviso.

Hurricane damage study—Public Law 71: Authorizes Chief of Engineers to make an examination and survey, together with the United States Weather Bureau and other agencies, along the coastal and tidal areas of the eastern and southern United States to secure data on movement of hurricanes, forecasting their paths, and investigating possible structural improvements which may be provided to prevent loss of life and property damages during the occurrence of hurricanes.

Following is a list of lease-purchase public building projects approved by the committee in the 84th Congress:

Statement in Support of Amendments to the Social Security Act Contained in H. R. 7225

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. THOMAS J. DODD

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. DODD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to present my views on the 1956 amendments to the Social Security Act embodied in H. R. 7225, and to voice my support for the humanitarian measures contained in this vital legislation.

When this legislation was before the House just a little over a year ago, I was glad to join my colleagues from Connecticut on the other side of the aisle in supporting these measures to improve our social-security laws. The other body passed a bill with certain modifications, and still further changes were made by the conference committee of the House and Senate. The final result, in my opinion, is not a perfect bill, but certainly one that will add many vitally needed changes to the Nation's social-security program.

I am particularly pleased that the essential characteristics of a provision for the payment of disability benefits has been retained in this bill. The Senate bill as it went to conference provided that this program for protection to those permanently and totally disabled be set up with a separate system of financing.

No doubt a great many, and probably even a majority, would agree with me in the belief that this was not necessary in order to preserve the integrity of the old-age and survivors insurance fund or to prevent excessive drains upon that fund. However, no one can quarrel with the desire of those who designed this particular provision to set up special safeguards to make doubly sure that the equity of the 70 million wage earners and self-employed who have contributed to the present reserve fund is thoroughly protected.

Even those of us who felt that it was probably not necessary can likewise agree that no harm is done by this arrangement and that the interest of those who look to the fund for the basis of their security in retirement as well as those who look to the newly created fund for protection against the contingency of physical disability are both adequately provided for.

I was pleased that the House and the other body promptly approved this bill as it came from conference. Passage of this bill in my opinion marked a significant advance in protection afforded the working people of this country. It will go down in the history of the social program of this country along with the first passage of the Social Security Act 21 years ago, the addition of survivors' insurance in 1939, the notable advancement in benefits marked by the amendments of 1950, and the significant extension of coverage contained in the amendments of 1954.

The extension of our system of social insurance for the first time into the field of disability insurance well deserves a place among those historic landmarks.

This venture, while of deep and lasting significance, should not be thought by any to be hasty or without the most careful study and analysis. In fact, a great part of the significance of this venture arises from the fact that it culminates efforts reaching back for some 18 years. I am informed that in 1938 studies made by the then Social Security Board outlined the feasibility of providing protection against the contingency of permanent and total disability. The Advisory Council on Social Security to the Senate Finance Committee studied this proposal in 1948 and 1949. They included the following statement in their report to the Senate:

> Income loss from permanent and total disability is a major economic hazard to which, like old age and death, all gainful workers are exposed. The advisory council believes that the time has come to extend the Nation's social-insurance system to afford protection against this loss.

There can be no question concerning the need for such protection. On an average day the number of persons kept from gainful work by disabilities which have continued for more than 6 months is about 2 million. The economic hardship resulting from permanent and total disability is frequently even greater than that created by old age or death. The family must not only face the loss of the breadwinner's earnings but must meet the costs of medical care. As a rule, savings and other personal resources are soon exhausted.

This was the finding of a distinguished group of 17 people drawn from the fields of industry, organized labor, and representatives of the general public, many of whom held posts of honor and distinction in our great universities.

Members of longer service in this House will recall that the House bill of 1950 incorporated the recommendations of this advisory council but it failed of passage in the other body. We are most happy now to observe that the Senate bill carried this provision for payment of benefits to the permanently and totally disabled after age 50.

In 1954 a start was made toward the problem of disability by including the provision to freeze the benefits of those covered by social security who suffered disablement. This was a worthwhile step and it laid the foundations by proving that the determinations of a disability can be made soundly and objectively by a Government agency. The provisions similar to the waiver of premium provisions of private life insurance companies preserve the retirement benefits of a worker whose earnings were cut off because of his disability.

However, as Mr. George Meany, now president of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations, said in his statement to the Senate Finance Committee in support of this measure on April 9, 1954:

It is not enough to say to the permanently and totally disabled worker, "If you contrive to hold body and soul together during your years of incapacity until you reach age 65, we assure you payment of full retirement benefits."

This measure will give much more assurance to the unfortunate disabled workers. We are giving them the assurance that their primary retirement benefit will be paid to them if they should be forced to retire as early as age 50 because of a physical disability.

Through this legislation we are recognizing that men and women, while still young in years, are inflicted with the impairments associated with old age that result from illness, disease, and accident.

Many of us were distressed in the course of the hearings to observe the effort that was made to place the provision for benefit payments in opposition to rehabilitation efforts. No greater disservice could be done the very worthwhile and highly successful rehabilitation programs carried on by our State vocational rehabilitation agencies with the assistance that has been made available to them through Federal grants.

We need, however, to recognize that there are some cases that are beyond rehabilitation either because the physical impairment is too severe or because it occurs too late in life. But for the vast majority of the totally disabled rehabilitation is possible and great encouragement to the restoration of these people to useful and gainful employment will come from this measure. Their morale will be lifted knowing that the economic needs of the family are being met, at least in part.

Assistance as well as encouragement will come from the provision to retain the benefit status for a maximum of a year for getting started in a new occupation or employment. I look for the greatest advancement in the field of rehabilitation that we have seen in many years.

Mr. Speaker, I have dwelt upon the disability benefits aspect of this legislation which is, of course, a most important aspect of the bill, and one often misunderstood. However, H. R. 7225 does much more than provide disability benefits.

The bill also provides for lowering the retirement age from 65 to 62 for widows and surviving dependent mothers. The bill provides that insurance benefits for children who were disabled before they reached the age of 18 may be continued so long as their disability remains, which I feel is perhaps the most humane and desperately needed amendment contained in the bill.

The bill provides for a more liberal coverage for migrant agricultural workers, and for Ministers working outside the limits of the United States. The bill has many other provisions worthy of merit, but the ones that I have listed should serve to show the great good that this legislation will do for so many Americans.

I feel confident that the provisions of H. R. 7225 will become part of our social security laws. I am also confident that the liberalization of our existing social security laws provided for in this humanitarian legislation will be welcomed by the American people as one of the outstanding achievements of the 84th Congress.

Beware of Republican Promises

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ABRAHAM J. MULTER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, we all remember how during the 1952 campaign, Republicans told us about how inflation was destroying the country and that their election would stop the runaway inflation and bring things back to normal. One of the things they prated most about was their ability to increase the value of the dollar.

The statistics made available to us during this last week of this session of Congress establish the emptiness of their promises and their inability to cope with the situation. Our Republican friends can hardly pretend that the figures were colored, certainly not colored against them, because the statistics have been made available to us by departments controlled by Republican-appointed Republican appointees.

There has been a softening of the talk about controlling credit as the inflationary influences continue at work. While the profits of the big corporations have continued to climb, the profits of the small-business man have continued to decline. While the earnings of the wage earner have declined, disappeared, or remained static, the cost of living has increased and the value of the dollar has again slipped.

Thus far in 1956, the rate of failures, according to Dun & Bradstreet, is higher than in any of the previous years in this administration. Obviously the failures are not in big business, but in small business.

The national public debt at the end of the year 1952 was just over $259 billion. At the end of 1953 it was $7 billion higher. It climbed another $5 billion in 1954, and more than $3 billion more in 1955. The 1956 estimate indicates that there will be no decrease.

Textile Enigma Under the Trade Treaties

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. PHILIP J. PHILBIN
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, are we not shocked by recent figures indicating that from 1947 to 1955 textile jobs in New England declined from 301,000 to 172,000? Do we not realize that this means a loss of 43 percent in the largest manufacturing industry in our region? How long can this continue, I ask in all reasonableness, without completely wrecking this vital industry?

What is the remedy? Well, a large part of it lies in checking cutthroat foreign competition. Rapidly growing imports from Japan, added to the rest, now create a great additional threat.

Now we are selling surplus cotton to Japan 25 percent below domestic prices. If this continues, it will provide us with another fantastic, crazy-quilt economic pattern—American cotton purchased and stored with money of American taxpayers, sold at reduced prices to foreign nations, converted under sweatshop and coolie conditions into textile goods and shipped back into the United States under the terms of the Geneva agreement to compete with high-standard, high-cost American labor and goods. The conclusion is inescapable that the New England textile industry under this agreement is made to bear the brunt and become the goat of the help-Japan policy now being followed at Washington.

Is it wise for us to give ourselves a knockout, economic blow in order to help other nations? Yet that is just what is happening under the current policy. It is interesting to note that not a single European country granted comparable concessions to ours in the 1955 parleys. How long can this Nation pursue this policy without most serious impact upon our economy?

We can ill afford to overlook the importance of attacking the problems presented by cutthroat competition in textiles by Japan and other nations, and I hope that satisfactory agreements may be reached at an early date and, if not, that Congress will go forward with appropriate legislation to check these injurious imports.

By all means, let us be friendly and helpful in every practicable way to Japan and other free nations. But let us, in that process, in carrying out that aim of good will and cooperation, let us avoid measures that will inevitably destroy our own industries and seriously impair the overall strength of our own economy.

Fundamental Differences Between the Democratic and Republican Parties

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ELMER J. HOLLAND
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to insert the following in the RECORD.

Before this 84th Congress fades into history, before we go home to account for our stewardships and begin our campaigns, I should like to say that never before have I felt so proud to be a Democrat.

For the accomplishments of this 84th Congress are Democratic—not Republican—accomplishments; and the failures of this 84th Congress are Republican—not Democratic—failures.

I am, of course, partisan. Yet all Democrats are partisan—consistently partisan—in their beliefs. For Democrats are consistently partisan to people, and to the things people need for richer, happier, healthier lives.

But the distinction between this Nation's two major parties is far greater than a simple matter of consistency.

The Republican Party is the party of property values.

The Democratic Party is the party of human values.

And no matter where you encounter the members of one party or the other—whether at the local, State, or National levels—you will find this same sharp cleavage, this same basic difference in approach to government.

I feel that I am in a particularly good position to make the comparison, for I not only served in the Senate of Pennsylvania under four Republican governors, but I just recently served in my State's senate under a Democratic governor.

The comparison is as stark as the difference between day and night.

If I ever had illlusions about the Republican Party—and it must have been long ago since I do not recall them—I have none now.

Mr. Speaker, I tell you this: Reaction is reaction wherever you find it. There is only a difference of degree between the Pennsylvania Manufacturers Association and the National Association of Manufacturers; there is only a difference of degree between reactionary government in Harrisburg and reactionary Government in Washington.

At long last Pennsylvania has a Democratic governor in George M. Leader. And in the short year and a half since his inauguration, our Commonwealth has taken giant strides into the 20th century.

Governor Leader took office with a positive, constructive, forward-looking program. He wanted to put unemployed men and women back to work; he wanted to ease the plight of the mentally ill, which was scandalous; he wanted to rebuild Pennsylvania's school system and, especially, to lend a hand to his State's crippled, retarded, and otherwise handicapped children.

He has done these things and more. But he had to do it the hard way, because a Republican-controlled senate booby-trapped every inch of the road toward humane accomplishment.

Among other things, Mr. Speaker, Governor Leader concerned himself and his administration with the problem of the totally disabled worker. Why, he wondered, should a totally disabled man be disqualified for workmen's compensation after a prescribed period of time? Should a disabled worker be forced to beg until 65, when he would be eligible for social security?

Mr. Speaker, Pennsylvania now has a revised workmen's compensation law. It is among the best in the Nation, and it provides—among other things—that a totally disabled worker will henceforth receive compensation as long as he lives.

Such legislation has been overdue since 1800. Certainly it poses no moral or ethical problem to anyone who believes in decency or fairness.

Yet in 1955 the Republican Senate in Pennsylvania fought tooth and nail to keep that law from passing. Big business opposed it, you see, and big business calls the shots for Pennsylvania's Republican Party just as big business calls the shots for the Republicans right here in Congress.

Governor Leader got the workmen's compensation law he wanted by going to the people. The people spoke—and in no uncertain terms, for human beings think in terms of humanity, and not in terms of profit and loss statements.

I mention this one law passed in Harrisburg because the Democratic Party in Washington has long fought to give the totally disabled worker his social security at the age of 50.

We have finally won that fight, but only by the hardest effort.

President Eisenhower opposed it, and expressed his administration's opposition through Marion Folsom, Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. Mr. Folsom, testifying against the amendment said:

> We should be careful not to take any step which might reduce the incentive for rehabilitation.

Now if a disabled worker has been certified by doctors as permanently disabled, what, in the name of all that is holy, are his chances for rehabilitation? Does medical opinion have no validity?

The point is timely, Mr. Speaker, for no administration in this country's history has ever set more store by medical opinion, has ever claimed for the physician the infallible powers of the oracle.

And while we are on the subject of social security, what of the amendment which reduced, from 65 to 62, the age at which a woman can retire? The Democratic Party passed that amendment, Mr. Speaker, and President Eisenhower's Republican stalwarts fought it all the way.

Mr. Folsom had something to say about that amendment too.

> Such a change—
> He pontificated—
> would actually be a disservice to many thousands of older women by reducing their opportunities for employment.

Does it take a degree in sociology to know that a woman's chance of getting a job at 62 is one in a million?

Ask the working women of America how easy it is to find work at 52, or even at 42. They know how to answer Mr. Folsom.

Yet, Mr. Folsom's pious nonsense is not surprising. Unless, of course, we are still capable of being surprised at Republican thought processes. For Mr. Folsom is simply expressing what his party believes, and what the President believes.

But let us continue our parallel between Harrisburg, Pa., and Washington, D. C. Let us discuss taxes.

When the Democrats took office, we Pennsylvanians inherited a financial mess that beggars description. We also inherited a tax dear to the Republican heart—a tax absolutely guaranteed to milk the many and spare the few. For the reverse-English Robin Hoods of the Republican Party had placed a sales tax on the people of Pennsylvania.

The Governor took it off, pointing out its unfairness, and asked for a tax based upon a person's ability to pay. Specifically, he requested a classified income tax.

The Republican Party would have none of it, and months dragged on. Governor Leader proposed a manufacturer's excise tax. The GOP, ever alert to the dictates of big business, killed it. Governor Leader offered a compromise proposal in desperation. The answer was still "No."

To make a long story short, Governor Leader—the Republican pistol at his back—was finally forced to swallow another sales tax. It was that or nothing, said the GOP, and either the Governor would or the Commonwealth could go broke.

I should like to remind the House, however, that Pennsylvania's Senators of the Republican Party were merely taking their cue from the Republicans of the 83d Congress, whose view of taxation was identical.

All of us, I think, remember that tax-relief bill.

What a bill it was. It filled every Republican heart with nostalgia for the good old days of Andrew Mellon.

Some $7.4 billion was slashed. And what happened to each tax-relief dollar? The corporation got 73 cents; families earning more than $5,000 a year got 18 cents; and families earning less than $5,000 got 9 cents.

Working mothers got less than a nickel. Families with heavy medical expenses got less than a dime. In other words, 80 percent of the people got only 9 percent of the tax relief.

Yet when the Democrats tried to correct the unfairness of the 1954 tax bill by giving every taxpayer a $20 tax cut, the Republican Party called them irresponsible.

How long can this Republican doubletalk go on? Does the GOP think the American people will mistake the word for the deed indefinitely? Does President Eisenhower's administration believe that the ever-widening gap between promise and performance will go unnoticed?

One last example, Mr. Speaker.

In Pennsylvania, a Democratic administration has just passed the most extraordinary school-construction program in Commonwealth history. It makes available $500 million for new building.

Here in Congress we have just seen a Federal school-construction bill go down the drain—thanks to the Republican Party.

No one will argue with the critical need for schools in every one of these 48 States.

Yet, despite the President's specific request for the school bill, his own party preferred to sabotage the future schooling of future citizens by voting against it.

Why, the Powell amendment, to deny aid to any State where segregation exists, was supported by 148 members of the Republican Party. Would it not be reasonable to expect that, having voted for the Powell amendment, all 148 would vote for the entire school-construction bill?

They did not, of course. Of those 148 Republicans, 96 voted against the bill in its final version, thus killing it for this session. Their reason is plain: They expect to tell their Negro constituents that they supported the Powell amendment in their campaigning this fall.

In all of my political experience, Mr. Speaker, I have never encountered a lower brand of politics nor a more sickening instance of hypocrisy.

Yet, this being an election year, every Republican who seeks reelection will declare that he likes Ike, will claim that he has followed him faithfully, will insist that he and Ike both think alike—and that both of them are rock-ribbed liberals.

It happened 4 years ago, and it will happen again.

From the drab, dreary cocoons of reaction will crawl the Republican butterflies of liberalism—to flutter briefly across the political landscape and die conveniently on November 6.

But I do not think they will dazzle the voters again.

Yet we must expect them to try. And make no mistake about it: They will try their best to fool the people once more.

Tambourines will rattle and bass drums will boom; radio, television, and the press—primed with advertising dollars—will sound the jamboree; and the techniques of revival tent and medicine show will once more be used to paddle the snake-oil liberalism of the Republican Party in an election year.

The idea, Mr. Speaker, is to becloud the issues. For if the issues are sufficiently smogbound, they think, all a candidate will have to do is say the magic works: "I like Ike."

But does the Republican Party really like Ike?

I say it does not—except in an election year. They will follow him merrily to the polls, but not one step further.

As a military man, General Eisenhower must realize that the possibilities of maneuver are limited when the awkward squad you command disobeys any order but "squads right."

And the Republican Party, Mr. Speaker, turns to the right just as inexorably as a compass needle turns north.

So where is this vaunted Eisenhower leadership? It ended, I think with World War II. Nor is the President entirely to blame.

For you cannot lead Republicans unless you carry the Dun and Bradstreet seal of approval.

I think that the voters know that now.

I do not think that they will forget the lesson quickly despite all the ballyhoo the GOP will generate.

I think that this will be an election in which the issues will determine the results.

And speaking as a member of the Democratic Party, I think the issues tell the story.

I think the record speaks for itself.

It is a Democratic record of man's responsibility to man.

American Music at Home and Abroad—No. 1

OF

HON. FRANK THOMPSON, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, we in America can be proud of our country for a great many reasons, reasons which have been stated often on the floor of the House during this session of the Congress. It does seem to me, however, that there is a tendency on the part of our fellow citizens to overlook one aspect of American life of which we have every right to be proud. I refer to our cultural attainments. In this area we sometimes tend to think that we are weak and must look to other countries for leadership. America is, of course, greatly indebted to Western Europe for a great deal of its cultural heritage and we should be thankful for it but, at the same time, we have contributed a great deal that is of outstanding and lasting value to Western culture in the field of the arts and crafts.

Of all these contributions none is more important than our jazz music. This musical form has been developed fully in the United States in recent years and it has been one of our most successful exports abroad. Of this export I should like to speak in a moment. At this point, I should like to discuss briefly the state of music in America in 1956.

For many years our musicians who played American music played to very small audiences, and, as a result, many a fine American musician was forced either to give up his music or starve. Of course, a few musicians whose names were widely known were extremely well paid from the beginning but those musicians who were less well known, while in many cases they were equally gifted as musicians, found it extremely difficult to make a living at all.

Today, we have begun to appreciate our music on a much wider scale and it is possible to hear it in many cities of our land. It is played by our symphony orchestras of which there are more than 900. It is played over the air by radio and television stations. We hear it on records, long playing and short, classical and jazz. We hear it in our night clubs and in our fine hotels. We hear it in our theaters, especially the living theater, and in our movies. In many, many places—but so much of it is recorded and played by only a few name bands, and our symphony orchestras devote less than 10 percent of their programs to our own music. So, while Americans in all walks of life are now beginning to appreciate our own music it is still very hard for a musician to earn a living, and if something is not done soon to correct the situation, it may soon reach a point where it is not possible for more than a few musicians to make a living at all.

One of the principal reasons for this unfortunate situation is very simply that the places where music is being played are finding it increasingly difficult to stay in business. Cabarets and night clubs, hotel dining salons, and so on are all existing on the slimmest of profit margins or going out of business. All too frequently they are being forced by high taxes, among other things, to drop live entertainment and living musicians in order to stay in business. Thus at place after place throughout our land music is being heard increasingly on records and the living musician is finding it increasingly difficult to make a livelihood—and this is in the wealthiest nation in the entire history of the world.

In a speech before the New Jersey Hotel Association I attempted to develop the background information supporting a bill I have introduced in the Congress to help keep music alive in our land. My measure would eliminate the entertainment or cabaret tax. I am confident that the elimination of this tax would help relieve a deplorable unemployment situation which is facing many thousands of good American musicians and I should like to see the Congress adopt this legislation during the next session.

I include here my speech before the New Jersey Hotel Association in which I set forth my concern for American music and American musicians:

SPEECH OF CONGRESSMAN FRANK THOMPSON, JR., DEMOCRAT, NEW JERSEY, AT THE 38TH ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE NEW JERSEY HOTEL ASSOCIATION, ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., APRIL 23, 1956

Many hotel people in New Jersey and particularly in my district have complimented me on my sponsorship of H. R. 8403 to repeal the so-called 20 percent cabaret tax. I am deeply appreciative of the support you and your national office in Washington are giving me and others who seek to abolish this uneconomic and wholly repressive tax, I am conscious that your industry has been one of the chief sufferers under this misguided Federal tax policy. In the last 6 years, I am informed, fully two-thirds of all of the hotel rooms throughout the country formerly devoted to dine-dance entertainment have either been darkened or converted to other uses. I am conscious, too, of the unemployment this tax policy has occasioned among service people, entertainers and particularly musicians.

Down in Washington where the administration continues to proclaim this as a "no-tax-cut-year," we are told that it would cost the Treasury $40 million a year to abolish this tax. I do not accept that kind of schoolboy mathematics or economics. Recently I have seen the findings of a national survey conducted by a responsible independent fact-finding agency, the Research Company of America. It was made at the instance of the American Federation of Musicians. During the course of this survey the researchers talked to many hotel people like yourselves and to hundreds of others in the entertainment business. They came up with a finding that if this prohibitive 20 percent tax is repealed the Treasury will actually benefit to the extent of some $12 million annually over and above the $40 million which this tax now turns in to the Treasury. These extra accruals would come, of course, from increased business taxes and largely increased personal taxes resulting from more business and more employment.

It would be pure political "bunkum" for me to tell you today that my sole motivation in sponsoring repeal of the 20-percent cabaret tax was to help the hotel industry. That would be only half the truth and half truths are half lies. There was an added motive that cuts much deeper than the economics of any industry. That motive concerns our future as society which can hold its head high as a leader of the free world.

I imagine that many of you know that, in addition to my sponsorship of legislation to repeal the cabaret tax, I am the author of several other proposals to safeguard music and the arts. It happens that the cabaret tax is probably responsible for fully half of the wide unemployment existing among musicians, a critical situation that now threatens the very existence of musical culture in our Nation. In a country which has done so much in the past to overcome its inferiority complex regarding its musical creativeness and appreciation, this is a tragic situation.

I am concerned, too, that the weakest link in our defense against communism, the puniest effort in our all-important contest to win the hearts and minds of free men, lies in the fields of our cultural relations with other nations. The administration in Washington confesses that the Russians are spending more than $3 billion annually on direct propaganda designed to communize the free world. Yet we have matched this mammoth effort with something like $5 million a year over the last 2 years to display our cultural attainments abroad.

Presently we have the advantage of great talents for export. The timid, parsimonious experiments our State Department have made have paid off handsomely. I refer to the tours of some of our great symphonies, the triumphal appearances abroad of the American folklore classic, Porgy and Bess, and yes, to the American jazz presentation of "Satchmo" Armstrong and his lusty hornblowers. I repeat that presently we have great talent for export. But the wells of great talent, particularly in the field of music, are fast drying up. Why? Because I am forced to admit reluctantly there is some merit to the Russian claim that we are a materialistic people bent on corraling a fast buck while we let our great heritage in the arts exist in a garret, and the garret, I fear, is about to be foreclosed by the United States Treasury unless the present tax policy is modified.

In spite of an outmoded, uneconomic Federal tax policy the hotel industry still is a large employer of musicians. If we are successful in abolishing or reducing substantially the 20 percent cabaret tax your industry will become a much larger employer of instrumentalists. It is from employment pools such as you create and maintain that great talents in music emerge, just as the sandlots of America supply the great stars of the baseball diamond.

Unless we can awaken the Federal Government to its responsibilities with respect to music and all of the cultural arts the vaunted "American way of life" will become a very dull and pallid export product indeed. Take the field of music alone:

While most occupational groups have enjoyed a great expansion of job opportunities since 1930, musicians have suffered a 40 percent job loss. There were enough jobs in 1930 to provide full-time work for 99,000 musicians. By 1954 there were full-time jobs for only 59,000. The instrumental musicians lost 20,000 man-years of work between 1930 and 1940 due to the advent of mechanical music. Since 1943 an additional 25,000 man-years of work has been lost in places subject to the 20 percent cabaret tax which you and I seek to abolish. Average earnings for instrumentalists in 1954 were $3,454. Little wonder the profession of music attracts fewer newcomers each succeeding year.

My concern for the shrinking field of music and musicians lies in the area of jazz and theater music as well as "longhair" or cultural instrumentation. I realize that we cannot continue to have great musicians in America unless we have great numbers of musicians gainfully employed. Nor can we continue to create a great American musical idiom of our own unless we encourage the dance and jazz musicians which you largely employ.

The one consoling aspect of this glum story of the decline of music in America is that the public is not to blame. Indeed, there are significant signs that public demand for good music is beginning to tax the dwindling supply of skilled instrumentalists. Between 1945 and 1954 this public demand created new part-time jobs for some 7,500 players of symphonic music. Unfortunately, our major symphonies operate for an average season of only 22 weeks per year and the secondary orchestras average no more than 8 weeks a year. Although the major symphonies require the finest in musical talent and training, the minimum scale for instrumentalists of many years' training averages only $89.02 per week. No fond father is going to willingly consent to son John perpetuating his horn-blowing career in college unless the economics of professional musicianship improve.

As people in the hotel business many of you are acutely conscious of the importance of our natural resources as an attraction for tourists. As a Congressman, I have frequent occasions to vote upon bills devoted to the conservation of natural resources. It reminds me that there are more natural resources for us to be concerned about than our forests and our minerals and water supply. None of us in Congress or here in this room would willfully destroy valuable timber lands by lighting a forest fire. I see no reason why we should be less concerned about our cultural resources. The depletion of our musical profession is more insidious than a great forest fire because it takes place slowly and it doesn't throw up a great light. For this reason it is more difficult to fight. The reduction of the present cabaret tax, however, is as clear a bit of fire prevention as I can think of in this area of conservation, and I urge your support of our efforts in Congress to reduce this destructive bit of taxation.

Activities of the House Committee on Government Operations During the 2d Session of the 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHET HOLIFIELD
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, in the 2d session of the 84th Congress, the Committee on Government Operations continued its efforts to make itself a more effective instrumentality of the House of Representatives. No matter is more basic to the preservation of the checks and balances of our constitutional form of democracy than continuous and comprehensive review of executive and administrative actions by the Congress. The committee's activities, therefore, have been directed toward assuring responsible, efficient, and economical administration of the laws in addition to its role in the enactment of legislation.

OVERSIGHT OF AGENCY EXPENDITURES AND OPERATIONS—GENERAL OVERSIGHT OF EXPENDITURES AND OPERATIONS

Just 10 years ago the Congress enacted the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. By its terms the Committee on Government Operations was required among other things to evaluate the effects of laws enacted to reorganize the legislative and executive branches of the Government.

As an incident of such evaluation the committee has had a review made of the evolution of the powers and duties of the committee and summarizes such a review for this report.

As early as 1816 Congress recognized its inherent right and responsibility to follow the appropriated dollar by creating a Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. At that time the only executive departments were State, Treasury, War, and Navy. As new departments were created corresponding new committees on expenditures in the executive departments were added until they became 11 in number.

These committees had no established means of getting information about expenditures. None of their data came to them automatically—everything had to be in the nature of a special investigation. The result was that their work was necessarily limited in effect.

This situation was in a large measure responsible for the Budget and Accounting Act of 1921.

The hearings and debates on that measure so clearly reveal the intent of Congress in respect to what is now the Committee on Government Operations as to merit quoting at length. Prof. W. F. Willoughby, a prominent political scientist was called upon to assist in this study. His testimony was voluminous and received by the legislative committee hearing the bill with every evidence of respect and agreement. After outlining a parallel in the British Parliament, Professor Willoughby went on to say:

Congress is a fund granting authority. No organ that grants funds has fulfilled its obligation until it follows up and sees that the orders it has given have been carried out * * * [It should be the duty of the Comptroller General to] give Congress as complete a report of the way its agent, the administration, has carried out the orders given to it as possible. * * * [I would have a public accounts committee created.] I think if you merely provide for this Comptroller and auditor general submitting a report, and stop there, you do not get very far. We know the end of most official reports. They are filed and dismissed. * * * Congress should make provision for a committee on accounts, whose duty it would be to receive this report, examine it, take up all the points that were mentioned for examination, and if the criticism was of the Bureau of Fisheries, for example, in respect to the exercise of its discretion in the establishment of a station where it was not needed, or what not, the committee could call the director of the bureau before it, or any other officials. It would have the comptroller and auditor general right at its elbow to act as its technical adviser, and they would track that right out and report the results to the House. That committee ought to be a very serious-minded and a very important committee. It would assume all the functions of [the numerous committees on expenditures] and perform them in a much more efficient way, because it will get the information automatically rather than as the result of a special investigation.

A month later these views were reflected in the debate in the House where Mr. Byrns said:

The control of expenditures should properly be vested in the fund-granting rather than the fund-spending department. No private business of any magnitude would permit its executive officers who are charged with the duty of handling its finances, to audit its own accounts. And yet that is exactly the course pursued in our Government under the present system. * * * Congress has no control over expenditure. It cannot have complete control of expenditures without some system whereby the expenditures may be subjected to an examination by independent officers for the purpose of seeing whether or not the wishes of Congress in making the appropriations and any conditions imposed in making the grants are carried out in good faith. * * * The pending bill seeks to [provide] an officer, responsible only to Congress, whose duty it shall be to audit and pass on the legality of all Government expenditures.

Mr. Madden recognized the necessity for a strong single committee of the Congress to receive reports from the Comptroller General and make recommendations based on them.

Mr. Madden said:

If I have my way, when this legislation is completed, I shall propose the creation of a great committee of the House, to be known as the Committee on Expenditures, consisting of the best men in the House—because it is to be a great committee if it is created—to whom this auditor and Comptroller General may report from day to day, and through this medium supply the House of Representatives and the Senate with such information as to what is being done with the money appropriated as to keep the Congress advised in connection with every step taken. In this way we will have a check against the executive branch of the Government not only as to the methods of appropriating, but as to the method of expenditure, and my judgment is that the foundation of the future financial system of economy could not be so well laid in any other way as by the adoption of the bill, which is now before you for consideration.

However, it was not until 1927 that action was taken to consolidate the 11 expenditure committees. The next year Congress clarified and made specific the power of the committee to obtain information from the executive department and independent establishments.

Every executive department and independent establishment of the Government shall, upon request of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments of the House of Representatives, or any 7 members thereof, or upon the request of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments of the Senate, or any 5 members thereof, furnish any information requested of it relating to any matter within the jurisdiction of said committee. (May 29, 1928, ch. 901, No. 2, 45 Stat. 996.)

But even then there was no clear delineation of function or jurisdiction directly reflecting the intent of the Budget and Accounting Act. This delineation awaited the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. In the studies that accompany the report on that act the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments is not even listed among the hitherto important committees of the House. Small wonder, since in the preceding Congress it had held 19 hearings.

For the 2d session of the 84th Congress, lasting some 230 days, the committee has held 206 days of investigative hearings in addition to its legislative hearings. This growth in committee activity, in large part, may well be due to the definition of its jurisdiction adopted as a House rule pursuant to the enactment of the Reorganization Act of 1946.

REVIEW OF AUDITS BY THE GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE

During the past year the General Accounting Office has stepped up the number of its audits. More important, it has now adopted a policy of making comprehensive audits as distinguished from a mere dollar-and-cents reconciliation. As stated by the Comptroller General:

A comprehensive audit includes consideration of the following:

1. That the agency is carrying out only those activities or programs authorized by the Congress and is conducting them efficiently and in the manner authorized by the Congress.

2. That expenditures are made only in the furtherance of authorized activities and in accordance with the requirements of applicable laws and regulations, including decisions of the Comptroller General.

3. That the agency collects and accounts properly for all revenues and receipts arising from its activities.

4. That the assets of the agency or in its custody are adequately safeguarded and controlled and utilized in an efficient manner.

5. That reports by the agencies to the Congress and to the central control agencies, such as the Bureau of the Budget, disclose fully the nature and scope of activities conducted and provide a proper basis for evaluating the agencies' operations.

The Committee on Government Operations is rearranging its work program so as to receive these comprehensive audits, and, in terms of the legislative intent, examine them, question the officials concerned, get the technical advice of the Comptroller General, and then make its recommendations available to subject-matter committees, the Appropriations Committee, and the Congress. To this end an analysis of the latest comprehensive audits is now being made.

STUDY OF ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE

It is only within the adult life of most of the Members of Congress that the growth of recourse to administrative agencies has made the Federal agencies assume such great importance. This growth has been so phenomenally rapid that the attention of Congress to matters of administrative procedure has lagged behind the growth. Yet more and more our daily lives and economic activity are influenced or directly regulated by procedures within Federal agencies.

The Honorable WILLIAM L. DAWSON, chairman of the committee, recently made the following comment on this subject:

The calculated executive expropriation of direction and control in the administrative agencies tends to obscure the fact that these rulemaking functions are derived solely from the Congress in the exercise of which the administrative agencies are responsible to the Congress.

The remedy for the resultant administrative irresponsibility is a conspicuous and unequivocal precept that these agencies are conformably accountable to the Congress. As Elihu Root said, "these agencies of regulation must themselves be regulated."

And the application of this remedy is exclusively in the hands of Congress. Professor Schwartz has appositely pointed out, "the role of the courts is to grant relief against administrative action which is ultra vires—that is, which exceeds the limits of the powers delegated by law."

The question of the propriety and effectiveness of the utilization of the powers thus delegated is solely the concern of the Congress as is also the precision with which the agency to which the power is delegated exemplifies the legislative intent which prompted the delegation.

As a means of implementing these views a questionnaire is being sent to each administrative agency in the Government. This questionnaire is prepared by experts in the field and covers every aspect of the numerous questions that arise. The purpose is to examine whether the laws enacted by the Congress are being efficiently administered so as to serve the public purposes embodied in the statutes while incorporating the elements of fair play to our citizenry which the courts long ago characterized as the due process necessary to the preservation of our system of government.

The answers to this questionnaire will be published this year. It is expected that they will serve to disclose places in the present law which need amendment, instances which require administrative remedial action and areas not covered by any law or regulation.

This may well be one of the most useful and far-reaching studies made by this Congress.

SAVINGS IN GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

By subjecting the activities of the various departments and agencies to a continuous review, the committee has laid the foundation for, and actually brought about considerable dollar savings in Federal expenditures. The greatest savings come when the agencies are made conscious of the fact that a committee of the House, such as the Committee on Government Operations, is always scrutinizing the expenditures authorized by the Congress and the operations conducted by the agencies in connection with such expenditures.

For example, the reports of the Commission on Organization on certain supply activities in the Department of Defense called attention to the fact that the congressional mandate for unification of supply activities largely was being ignored. The Commission's reports estimated that more than half a billion dollars annually could be saved if the congressional policy of unified supply services for the military departments was followed. As a result of the committee's studies and investigations the Department of Defense installed a single manager system for supply which may result in the savings in the near future.

The committee's activities have resulted in very specific and very tangible savings in a number of areas. More important, the fact that the committee caused the savings of specific sums will undoubtedly lead the departments and agencies concerned to save many times the amounts involved in the specific situations called to their attention by the committee's investigations. Some examples of these kinds of specific savings which should have salutary effects upon departmental operations leading to even greater savings are as follows:

Approximately $14 million had been earmarked for contracts for survival studies by the Federal Civil Defense Administration. Only slightly in excess of $1 million had been obligated for these contract studies. Before the hearings of the committee were completed the FCDA began a critical review of these studies. There is good reason to believe that a review of these studies in the light of what the committee's report recommended will result in these contracts not being awarded as planned. If the FCDA suspends these contracts, the savings will approximate $13 million.

The committee's investigation of Commodity Credit Corporation transactions in butter and cheese have led to legal action by the Attorney General to recoup approximately $2½ million paid out to processors of such commodities. Similarly, the committee's investigation into the distribution costs connected with the school lunch program in the State of Illinois resulted in a new contract which saved taxpayers about $150,000 in a period of about 8 months.

The committee's investigation into the use of experts and consultants will result in a more judicious use of this authority. In the case of individual experts and consultants, if the committee's recommendations are followed, there should be an annual reduction of costs in the amount of approximately $25,000. Several million dollars a year will be saved as a result of a probable curtailment of the use of contracts with firms or organizations of such experts or consultants.

A good example of how the committee's investigation of one instance will result in the savings of millions to the Government can be found in connection with the disposal of surplus property by the General Services Administration. The committee found that General Services Administration was about to dispose of an alumina plant at Laramie Wyo., at a proposed sale price of $1.2 million. The committee's investigation of the matter resulted in a higher bid by the same high bidder yielding $173,000 more to the Government.

The committee's legislative actions were also directed to the savings of specific sums of money wherever possible. An example of this can be found in H. R. 9593, Public Law 798, which would set up an entirely new method of paying claims out of appropriations which have lapsed. It is estimated that once this system has been placed into operation there will be an annual saving of some $600,000.

ORGANIZATION OF THE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS

In order to carry out its responsibilities of regular oversight of agency activities as well as the study of special problems, the committee has functioned during the 2d session of the 84th Congress through a number of subcommittees as follows:

Executive and Legislative Reorganization Subcommittee, Hon. WILLIAM L. DAWSON, chairman.

Military Operations Subcommittee, Hon. CHET HOLIFIELD, chairman.

Intergovernmental Relations Subcommittee, Hon. L. H. FOUNTAIN, chairman.

Public Works and Resources Subcommittee, Hon. EARL CHUDOFF, chairman.

International Operations Subcommittee, Hon. PORTER HARDY, JR., chairman.

Legal and Monetary Affairs Subcommittee, Hon. ROBERT H. MOLLOHAN, chairman.

Special Government Activities Subcommittee, Hon. JACK BROOKS, chairman.

Special Subcommittee on Donable Property, Hon. JOHN W. MCCORMACK, chairman.

Special Government Information Subcommittee, Hon. JOHN E. MOSS, chairman.

Special Water Resources and Power Subcommittee, Hon. ROBERT E. JONES, chairman.

LEGISLATION

The committee has had studies made of the several score bills referred to it in the 2d session of the 84th Congress. Hearings were held on many of the bills and a number of important pieces of legislation were reported favorably to the House.

First. Budget and accounting legislation:

Under rule XI–8 of the House of Representatives, the committee receives budget and accounting measures, other than appropriations. Legislation governing the budget and accounting system of the Government is basic both to congressional control over the purse and to efficient management in Federal administration.

A major change in the governmental accounting system is incorporated in H. R. 9593, which was reported by the committee. This legislation will permit each agency to consolidate obligated balances in merged appropriation accounts and pay obligations chargeable against such accounts without prior reference to the General Accounting Office. This simplified procedure will save Government service hundreds of thousands of dollars a year. It will also clarify expenditures by the various agencies inasmuch as the obligations will be paid by the individual agency rather than out of a central certified claims account maintained by the Treasury Department. H. R. 9593 became Public Law 798 of the 84th Congress.

A long step toward improving budgeting and accounting in the Federal Government was taken when the committee favorably reported H. R. 11526 to the House. This legislation will not only promote simplification in reporting the complex financial operations of the Government but will also lead to greater congressional control over appropriated funds. The legislation should also contribute to reducing the large carryover of funds from year to year which has reached tremendous proportions and over which the Congress has become increasingly concerned in connection with request for new appropriations. H. R. 11526 would accomplish these results by requiring that budget estimates be predicated on a cost basis and that Government accounts be maintained on an accrual basis. In the interest of expediting congressional action H. R. 11526 was substituted by the House as the text of S. 3897, and S. 3897 became Public Law 863 of the 84th Congress.

Second. Disposal of Federal property:

The committee has general legislative jurisdiction under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 over disposals of Federal surplus property. Under this statute, Congress has laid down certain general rules and created administrative machinery for disposals of Federal surplus property pursuant to article 4, section 3, of the Constitution, which provides:

> The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territory or other property belonging to the United States.

From time to time legislative proposals are made for disposals of individual parcels of property as exceptions to the general laws enacted by the Congress. The committee has had a substantial legislative workload in considering and passing upon many bills for such disposals.

In each case the committee has had to consider the particular details and circumstances of the proposed disposal of real property belonging to the United States. The particular circumstances have to be weighed against considerations of national policy and national interest to see whether there is a justification for departure from the established general statutory procedure. In the 2d session of the 84th Congress the committee reported favorably to the House approximately a score of bills providing for disposals of real property. Eighteen of these bills passed the House and 17 bills became law.

Third. Amendment of Employment Act of 1946:

One of the most important pieces of legislation recommended by the committee in the past became the Employment Act of 1946. This legislation provided, among other things, for systematic and continuous attention by the Congress to economic indicators through the medium of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, established by the 1946 act. That act also required the President to transmit his economic report to the Congress at the beginning of each regular session. H. R. 9764, reported favorably by the committee in the 2d session of the 84th Congress, changes the name of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report to the Joint Economic Committee and provides a more specific date for the submission of the President's Economic Report to the Congress following upon the transmission of the President's budget. The latter provisions will enable the Council of Economic Advisers to take budget proposals into consideration in the preparation of the economic report. This bill became Public Law 591 of the 84th Congress.

Fourth. Travel expenses of Federal employees:

In connection with its continuous interest in, and responsibility for, the efficiency of general administrative procedure in the Federal agencies, the committee reported favorably to the House, H. R. 11515. This bill would permit the payment of expenses of travel of persons selected for appointment in manpower shortage occupations and would authorize the payment of expenses of transportation of their immediate families and household effects. In addition the bill would authorize the payment of travel expenses of persons in manpower shortage categories who are invited to visit a Federal establishment for purposes connected with employment. This legislation was intended to enable the Government to recruit enough scientists, engineers, and other technically trained personnel in manpower shortage categories to provide for our military preparedness and efficient conduct of the Government. H. R. 11515 was passed by the House on July 26, 1956.

Fifth. Improvements in paperwork management:

In order to achieve economies in the field of paperwork management, the committee favorably reported S. 2364. This legislation would remove any doubt about the authority of the Administrator of General Services to promulgate policy and principle pertaining to records management which would be binding on the various Federal agencies. In addition it was expected that the legislation would promote a greater utilization by the agencies of the talents of the records management specialists now employed by the General Services Administration.

REORGANIZATION PLANS

Under rule XI–8 of the House of Representatives, the committee receives all proposed legislation and other matters relating to "reorganizations in the executive branch of the Government." Pursuant to this rule the committee received and acted upon Reorganization Plans Nos. 1 and 2 of 1956, and their pertinent House resolutions.

First. Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1956:

On May 16, 1956, the President transmitted to the Congress of the United States Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1956. The plan was referred to the committee for consideration and action. Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1956 would have created an additional position of assistant secretary for research and development in each of the three military departments within the Department of Defense. Chairman VINSON, of the House Committee on Armed Services, introduced House Resolution 534 to disapprove Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1956. This resolution was also referred to the committee and the committee held hearings, considered and acted upon the resolution, together with the reorganization plan.

On July 3, 1956, the committee reported favorably to the House, House Resolution 534, disapproving Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1956. The committee found that the reorganization plan was not a valid reorganization plan under the Reorganization Act of 1949 which limits the creation of new positions to those made necessary by a reorganization made in the plan. The committee found and so reported to the House that the plan merely created new positions without any accompanying reorganization. In addition, the committee found that the purpose of the plan was one that could and should be accomplished by the regular legislative process.

On July 5, 1956, the House, following the recommendation of the committee, adopted the resolution disapproving Reorganization Plan No. 1 by a majority of the authorized membership as required by the Reorganization Act of 1949. This action had the effect of preventing Reorganization Plan No. 1 from becoming effective.

Second. Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1956:

On May 17, 1956, the President transmitted to the Congress Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1956. The plan was referred to the committee. Also referred to the committee was House Resolution 541 introduced by Mr. FASCELL, of Florida, a member of the committee. House Resolution 541 disapproved Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1956.

Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1956 provided for separating the management of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation from the management of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. The plan would have created a new and separate Board of Trustees to manage the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation although the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board would have been a member ex officio of the new three-man Board of Trustees.

The committee considered Reorganization Plan No. 2 and House Resolution 541 together. On July 3, 1956, the committee reported favorably to the House, House Resolution 541, disapproving Reorganization Plan No. 2. The committee found that Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1956 was deficient in a number of respects including the following:

First. Separation of the two institutions would not necessarily accomplish the results which the proponents of the plan assumed would be accomplished.

Second. There was no complete separation of the agencies as suggested since the Chairman of the Home Loan Bank Board would also be a member of the new Board of Trustees of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation.

Third. The new Board of Trustees was not created on a bipartison basis. At the same time the President was given specific direction and control over the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation.

Fourth. No economies or savings were shown to be involved in the reorganization.

On July 5, 1956, the House adopted the recommendation of the committee by approving House Resolution 541 by a majority of the authorized membership as required by the Reorganization Act of 1949. This action had the effect of preventing Reorganization Plan No. 2 from becoming effective.

INVESTIGATIONS

The committee is the major overall instrument of the House of Representatives for legislative oversight of the operations of Federal departments and agencies. Pursuant to rule XI–8 of the House of Representatives, the committee has the duty of studying the operations of Government activities at all levels with a view to determining its economy and efficiency. The committee has organized its activities so as to follow and review the operations of all the major departments and agencies as well as activities which involve and cut across the jurisdiction of more than one department or agency. In the course of its review of Federal activities a number of major investigations have been made, the results of which have been reported to the Congress.

In connection with reports made by the committee at this session of the Congress, more than 200 days of hearings were held. The magnitude of the effort devoted by the committee members to these hearings can be appreciated by the fact that the second session of the Congress lasted some 230 days—only slightly more than the number of days hearings conducted under the aegis of the committee. In addition, during the 84th Congress the committee made a record number of intermediate reports to the House—31 in all.

First. Post Office Department—(a) Post Office Department procurement of motor vehicles:

The committee investigated the action of the Post Office Department in negotiating 3 contracts in 1954 with the Twin Coach Co., of Kent, Ohio, for the purchase of 250 trucks purportedly for experimentation and tests at a cost of nearly three-fourths of a million dollars. The payments under these contracts exceeded by almost $175,000 the Department's total expenditures for experimental purposes under 96 separate contracts with other companies during the 4-year period, 1951 through 1954.

As a result of its investigation of these matters the committee found that in departing from competitive procurement procedures and in negotiating contracts involving nearly three-fourths of a million dollars, the Department had failed to demonstrate that the procurement had been done for a bona fide experimental purpose. It was concluded that the role played in the so-called experiment by Robert Heller & Associates, management consultants, was highly questionable and that activities pertaining to Government procurement should be handled by responsible Government employees rather than by temporary special consultants. Moreover, in the opinion of the committee the weight of the evidence indicated an attempt to avoid competitive procurement by designating the vehicles as experimental.

In order to avoid a repetition of the evasion of procedures laid down by the Congress, the committee recommended stronger controls by the General Services Administration over the negotiation of contracts for experimental purposes and the enactment of legislation to prohibit the inclusion of purchase options in Post Office Department contracts for the lease of new vehicles unless an emergency of indefinite duration requiring the immediate acquisition of vehicles is shown to exist. The committee's report to the House on this matter is House Report No. 2951, 84th Congress, 2d session.

(b) Post Office Department's public opinion survey to influence postal rate legislation:

The committee investigated the circumstances surrounding the execution, conduct, and use of a public opinion survey made for the Post Office Department by the Wengel Service Corp. in December 1953. This investigation was one part of the committee's overall study of the use of experts and consultants by the Federal departments and agencies.

The committee found that the public opinion survey had been conducted with great haste in order to make the results available for the Post Office to use with Members of Congress when the new session of Congress convened in 1954. In view of the fact that the Post Office Department had unsuccessfully urged the adoption of higher postal rates by the Congress in 1953, all the circumstances indicated that the Post Office Department had entered into the contract for the public opinion survey with the definite purpose of influencing the Congress to act favorably on the Post Office Department's recommendations.

The committee found that the actions of the Post Office Department in having the public opinion survey conducted for the purpose of influencing the Congress were open to question under section 1913 of title 18, United States Code, which prohibits the use of appropriated funds for lobbying. The committee also concluded that the Bureau of the Budget had discharged its duties under the Federal Reports Act of 1942 in a perfunctory manner and had not attempted to ascertain whether the collection of information through the survey was necessary for the proper performance of the functions of the Post Office Department. A full report on these matters was made by the committee to the House in House Report No. 2914, 84th Congress, 2d session.

Second. Department of Justice—Immigration and Naturalization Service:

The committee investigated reports it had received on the improper use of Government equipment and Government personnel for hunting trips to Mexico by Gen. Joseph M. Swing, Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization. The committee's investigation showed that General Swing's hunting trips were improper and contributed little if anything to the effectiveness of his agency's operation. The committee found that General Swing's use of appropriated funds was improper including particularly his movement of 3 trailers over 1,500 miles when adequate hotel facilities were available.

The committee recommended that the General Accounting Office conduct a survey of the expenditures of the Immigration and Naturalization Service and that the Attorney General examine the record developed by the investigation. The latter recommendation was made in view of the conclusion of the committee that the conduct of General Swing was not consistent with his office. These matters were covered in the committee's report, House Report No. 2948, 84th Congress, 2d session.

Third. Department of Commerce—Civil Aviation:

The committee conducted an investigation covering all facets of civil aviation. Hearings were held at which principals in the aviation industry as well as representatives of the Civil Aeronautics Administration, Civil Aeronautics Board, Department of Commerce, and State and local aviation officials were heard. The hearings were perhaps the most extensive study of aviation ever undertaken by the Congress. In the course of the hearings the committee also considered H. R. 11065, to create a commission to study executive agencies handling problems in the field of aviation with a view to reorganization and greater efficiency.

As a result of the hearings and investigation the committee concluded that a drastic reorganization of agencies in the Federal Government having responsibilities in the field of aviation is urgently required. It was further concluded that the present Federal organizational structure in civil aviation is inadequate in that it merely attempts to provide a forum or bargaining table where conflicts can be settled and compromised. There is an obvious need for leadership and planning in addition to a means for a possible resolution of differences among agencies.

In order to achieve a better organizational structure for civil aviation the committee recommended:

(a) The prompt completion of the study being conducted under the aegis of the President's Special Assistant for Aviation Facilities Planning, Mr. Edward P. Curtis.

(b) Termination of Civil Aeronautics Board and Federal Communications Commission membership on the Air Coordination Committee.

(c) Clarification of the so-called authority of the Air Coordinating Committee.

(d) Avoidance of military domination of the Air Coordinating Committee and the Air Navigation Development Board.

(e) Acceleration of the 5-year Federal airways plan.

(f) Resolution of the TACAN-VOR/DME controversy.

(g) Review of air traffic control requirements within the Civil Aeronautics Administration before airport aid projects are finally approved.

A report on the Federal role in aviation was made to the House as House Report No. 2949, 84th Congress, 2d session.

Fourth. Department of the Interior—(a) Federal timber policies:

The committee investigated the administration of Federal timberlands in the Pacific Northwest, including timber sales policies. The investigation covered the timber operations of the Forest Service, Bureau of Land Management, and Bureau of Indian Affairs. Recommendations were made for the coordination and consolidation of the administration of Federal timberlands under the Forest Service. The investigation also covered problems of equal access to Federal timber; the need for up-to-date timber inventories and revision of the allowable cuts; the need for more access roads and increased salvage operations; the underpricing of Indian timber; the acquiring of timber under the guise of mining claims; the stifling of competition through huge long-term sales and other alleged favoritism to large operators; and instances of alleged abuse of administrative powers. Recommendations were made to bring about improvements in these various aspects of Federal timber management.

The recommendations were contained in House Report 2960, 84th Congress, 2d session.

(b) Al Sarena case:

The committee investigated the matter known as the Al Sarena case. The investigation and hearings disclosed that the Secretary of the Interior had acquiesced in a giveaway of valuable national forest timber on certain mining claims located in the Rogue River National Forest in southern Oregon. The Al Sarena Mines, Inc., had acquired mining patents on these claims from the Department of the Interior in order to obtain title to the timber, and not for the bona fide purpose of conducting a mining operation. The timber was valued at approximately $325,000.

The committee recommended that the record of the case be sent to the Attorney General with a formal request that he take appropriate steps, including action to cancel these patents and to investigate the truth or falsity of statements relating to the extent of improvement work that had been allegedly performed on five of the contested claims.

The committee also recommended that the Department of the Interior take appropriate steps to insure observance of the Administrative Procedure Act, including the adoption of regulations to assure that, in the case of a contested mining case located on land administered by an agency outside the Department of the Interior, such other agency be given notice and an opportunity to be heard. The committee report on Al Sarena case is contained in House Report No. 2408, 84th Congress, 2d session.

(c) Private electric utilities' organized effort to influence the Secretary of the Interior:

The committee held hearings on an alleged effort by five Rocky Mountain power companies to influence the Department of the Interior in the administration of the Federal power laws.

(d) Virgin Islands Corporation:

The committee has conducted a preliminary investigation into the Virgin Islands governmental operations and the Virgin Islands Corporation. The Virgin Islands have been faced with an acute and recurring water problem which had deeply affected the economy and general welfare of the area. Notwithstanding numerous surveys and recommendations made by various governmental agencies and private firms, no concrete action, looking to a permanent solution of this problem has been undertaken by the Department of the Interior. It is believed that as a result of informal hearings conducted in the Virgin Islands action will be taken leading to a permanent solution of the water problem.

The informal hearings also received testimony on the activities on the part of the recent Gov. Archie A. Alexander. The loan program of the Virgin Islands Corporation which was to provide credit facilities in that area for agriculture, livestock, commercial, and other purposes is open to severe criticism. It appears that, as of June 30, 1954, approximately $30,000 had been loaned to small borrowers. Two $100,000 loans have since been made—one to a distillery and the other for the building of a golf course on a private project, while at the same time an application for a $60,000 loan for a chicken farm which had the approval of the officials of the Virgin Islands Corporation was summarily turned down by the Board of Directors of VICORP, headed by the Secretary of the Interior.

(e) Changes in powerline regulations by Department of the Interior:

The committee investigated the circumstances surrounding, and the results of changes in, powerline regulations covering rights-of-way for electric powerlines across Federal lands under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior. As a result of the investigation, the committee concluded that the changes made on August 11, 1954, in these regulations, and the actions of the top officials in the Interior Department in connection with the changes, demonstrated that those officials willfully followed policies and practices at variance with Federal laws designed to give preference to rural electric cooperatives and public agencies in the marketing of power generated at Federal dams. It was also concluded that the changes in the regulations were adopted by the Interior Department verbatim from an anonymous document delivered personally without a covering letter or memorandum by a registered lobbyist of the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. to the then Solicitor and now Under Secretary of the Interior.

The committee recommended, in part, as follows:

First. Congress should enact legislation to put into statutory form the basic principles of the eliminated wheeling provision.

Second. In view of the increasing importance of the natural resources owned or controlled by the Federal Government to the economy and well-being of the Nation and in view of the widespread interest in the administration of those resources, Congress should enact legislation requiring the Secretary of the Interior and other officials having jurisdiction over such resources to publish notice of proposed regulations in the Federal Register at least 30 days in advance of their adoption. This would give the public an opportunity to present arguments favoring or opposing the proposed regulations. The period of notice could be shortened or eliminated where the responsible official finds in writing that an emergency exists and states the reasons for such finding. The issuance of regulations relating to federally owned resources is not covered by the advance notice provisions of the Administrative Procedures Act.

The report of the committee on these matters is contained in House Report No. 1975, 84th Congress, 2d session.

(f) Effect of Department of Interior and REA policies and public power preference customers:

The committee investigated the effect of policies of the Department of Interior in the last 3 years on statutory preference customers in the Southeast, the Southwest, the Intermountain States, the Central Valley of California, and the Pacific Northwest. In the course of the investigation the committee demonstrated that the present administration of the Department of Interior has followed a policy of withdrawing from its responsibilities for comprehensive river-basin programs and of taking actions designed to minimize its duties under various statutes to insure the most widespread use of federally generated electric power by giving preference to cooperatives and public bodies. The effect of the present policies of the Department of the Interior was shown to be that of enabling private utilities to gain an advantage over the preferred customers designated by Congress in various statutes. Included in the Department's action were the suppression of an Attorney General's opinion which in effect warned the Department of Interior against pursuing a proposed policy in contravention of section 5 of the Flood Control Act of 1944.

The committee's findings and recommendations designed to reaffirm the intent of Congress as stated in existing law are filed in House Report No. 2279, 84th Congress 2d session.

(g) Contract for rental of automobiles by Bureau of Indian Affairs:

The committee investigated a series of actions by the Bureau of Indian Affairs designed to circumvent requirements for competitive bidding in the leasing of passenger-carrying vehicles. The committee found that open competition would have resulted in substantial savings to the Government and that the Bureau of Indian Affairs had not availed itself of the results obtainable from a competent inquiry as to possible sources of supply from automobile-rental concerns. There was also an apparent disregard of normal time elements in contract negotiations indicating that the Bureau of Indian Affairs was intent on avoiding competitive bidding in the leasing of vehicles.

It also appeared that under existing Government discounts on automobiles it is cheaper for the Government to own rather than to lease passenger-carrying vehicles. The committee's conclusions were affirmed by the action of the Comptroller General in prohibiting an award under certain contrived invitations to bid issued later by the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Complete findings and recommendations of the committee designed to improve acquisition and utilization procedures in connection with motor vehicles are contained in House Report No. 1892, 84th Congress, 2d session.

Fifth. Department of Agriculture—(a) Purchase-resale transactions of the Commodity Credit Corporation:

The committee investigated the simultaneous purchase-resale transactions of the Commodity Credit Corporation involving cheese and butter in the early part of 1954. In carrying out price-support provisions of the Agricultural Act of 1949, the Department of Agriculture, through the Commodity Credit Corporation, is authorized to purchase butter, cheese, and nonfat dry milk solids. The intent of Congress in enacting this legislation was solely to aid dairy farmers of the Nation.

In 1954, the Commodity Credit Corporation paid nearly $2,500,000 to cheese and butter dealers as a result of purchase-resale transactions involving their commodities. In the transactions, the Commodity Credit Corporation purchased approximately 85 million pounds of cheese and 5 million pounds of butter which it simultaneously resold to the original owner. The cheese and butter was never moved from the warehouses in which it was stored but the Commodity Credit Corporation paid the difference between the purchase and resale price to the so-called owners.

The committee investigation discovered that this Commodity Credit Corporation program proved of little benefit to the dairy farmers, but resulted in substantial windfall payments to business firms. As a result of the committee investigation, the General Accounting Office ruled that the transactions were unauthorized and improper. Also, as a result of the committee investigation the Attorney General has filed suit for recovery of a number of the illegal payments and has demanded return of the others. The committee also called attention to the use of industry advisory committees in programs of this type and recommended that the Department of Agriculture take immediate action to eliminate possible conflicts of interest in connection with the use of such industry advisory committees. The committee's report is House Report No. 2952, 84th Congress, 2d session.

(b) School-lunch program in Illinois:

The committee investigated the distribution of surplus agricultural commodities in connection with the school-lunch program in the State of Illinois. The committee investigation showed that the State superintendent of public instruction was a political associate of a member of the firm of Dunbar & Co., a firm which was selected by negotiation to distribute surplus agricultural commodities for the school-lunch program.

It was disclosed that the contract with Dunbar & Co. was made under circumstances which indicated an intent to favor this firm to the exclusion of others even though Dunbar & Co. had only a limited experience in handling commodities. Moreover, the investigation showed that under the contract Dunbar & Co. made inordinate profits which constituted the major portion of the excessive costs of distributing donated commodities in Illinois.

Dunbar & Co. used its company income for a large number of questionable expenditures, showing a return of money to the political group in Illinois which undoubtedly arranged for Dunbar & Co. to obtain the contract.

Finally, the investigation demonstrated that the Department of Agriculture did not perform its functions in such a manner as to encourage maximum economy, since the Department was aware of some of the circumstances involved and could have known most of the others had the Department shown any positive interest in the matter.

The committee report covering these matters is House Report No. 2893, 84th Congress, 2d session.

Sixth. Department of State—(a) Foreign Service promotions under the Wriston program:

The committee investigated the implementation of the report of the Secretary of State's Public Committee on Personnel, known as the Wriston Committee. The Wriston Committee report recommended a series of measures to strengthen the United States Foreign Service. The report had been accepted by the Secretary of State, and the Congress enacted implementing legislation in the form of Public Law 759, 83d Congress, and Public Laws 22 and 250, 84th Congress.

The objective of the Wriston report and the ostensible policy of the State Department pursuant to the report have been to integrate some 1,200 former departmental officers together with some 1,200 former Foreign Service staff and reserve officer personnel into the Foreign Service Officer Corps without any discrimination or inequitable treatment with regard to assignments, frequency of transfers, or promotions.

The committee investigation showed that the State Department had been lagging far behind its ostensible acceptance of the Wriston report objectives and that the system being employed by the State Department gave a heavy advantage to former Foreign Service officers.

The committee recommended that the Department bring its actions into conformance with the basic premises of the Wriston report or else seek approval to revise it.

The results of the committee investigation are contained in House Report No. 1663, 84th Congress, 2d session.

(b) United States technical assistance in Latin America:

The committee studied the technical assistance program in Latin America. It found a lack of full coordination between the Department of State and the International Cooperation Administration. The committee also found that many projects were being engendered in Washington rather than being requested by the recipient country. Furthermore, too little attention has been given to the objective of transfer of projects for continuation by the host countries. In addition, certain projects have been developed beyond the technical assistance phase to actual economic aid.

Finally, the committee found that the Congress was not being presented with the necessary information for evaluation and approval of projects proposed by the executive branch.

The committee report on this subject is House Report No. 1985, 84th Congress, 2d session.

(c) Administrative management of the Department of State:

The committee investigated the administrative structure of the State Department and disclosed substantial weaknesses. In effect, the committee concluded that in terms of administrative management there are now five departments of State rather than one, since administrative management operations have been decentralized from the Department to four powerful regional bureaus which tend to hold aloof from accepting policies and services from the administrative area of the Department.

The committee study also showed that the expenditure of more than $250,000 for a 10-month study of administrative management of the Department by Robert Heller & Associates brought about no significant results.

Finally, the committee investigation disclosed that the funds used for the survey were those appropriated by Congress for emergencies arising in the diplomatic and consular services and that, therefore, the use of these funds for the study was of doubtful propriety.

The committee report on these matters is House Report No. 2172, 84th Congress, 2d session.

(d) Foreign aid operations in Iran:

The committee has been making an extensive investigation of foreign aid operations in Iran. The investigation has been directed toward establishing the economy and efficiency with which some $206 million of technical and economic assistance has been furnished Iran in the period through 1955.

This inquiry is intended to serve as a case study of the administration of foreign aid programs.

Seventh. Department of Defense—(a) Unification of supply systems within the Department of Defense:

Based on certain findings of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government—Hoover Commission—in its reports on food and clothing and depot utilization, the committee investigated the actions of the Department of Defense with regard to unification of the supply systems of the three military departments. It was disclosed that until the committee's investigation was started and for some time thereafter some of the highest officials in the Department of Defense had been engaged in an effort, starting in 1953, to reverse steps which had been taken to unify the supply systems of the three military departments as directed by the Congress.

As a result of the committee investigations, the Department of Defense seems to have dropped its policy of ignoring the congressional mandate for integration of supply services. Starting at the end of 1955, the Department began to evolve its single manager system for handling various commodities and supplies.

The committee report on these matters is House Report No. 2013, 84th Congress, 2d session.

(b) Merger of certain naval supply activities:

The committee investigated the disestablishment of the San Pedro Naval Supply Depot and its merger with the supply department of the Long Beach Naval Shipyard located at Terminal Island, Calif. The committee investigation showed that the merger was not based on an accurate determination of economies, but rather on a casual speculation sought to be fortified after the action had been taken.

While interested in economies through elimination of duplication of activities, the committee recommended that more accurate determinations of economies be made in justification of such mergers.

The committee report on these matters is House Report No. 1662, 84th Congress, 2d session.

(c) Navy jet aircraft procurement program:

The committee investigated the expenditure of more than $500 million for 280 aircraft in the Demon fighter program. It found that the first 60 aircraft costing at least $154 million will be limited with 4 exceptions to nonflying uses. The committee also found that the other 220 aircraft had not been tested in fleet use and might soon become obsolete.

The committee concluded that the expenditures were excessive when judged by the end results. While the committee found that there are no indications of dishonesty or improper influence in the awarding or termination of contracts, it was concluded that all three parties involved, the Navy Department, Westinghouse Corp., and McDonnell Aircraft

Corp., shared responsibility for errors in judgment and waste of public funds, although the Navy Department bore final responsibility as the Government procurement agency.

The committee made a series of recommendations designed to improve procedures and to avoid repetition of fiascos of this sort.

The committee report covering these matters is House Report No. 1891, 84th Congress, 2d session.

Eighth. General Services Administration—(a) Government nickel plant in Nicaro, Cuba:

An investigation was made by the committee of the expansion and operation by the General Services Administration of the Government nickel plant at Nicaro, Cuba. The committee investigation found that political and private influence had played an active role in the award of a subcontract in the construction project and that similar influence caused an award of an insurance brokerage contract to an insurance agency in Chicago, Ill.

Political influence combined with a passive attitude on the part of General Services Administration officials caused a large unnecessary expenditure to the Federal Government as well as a loss of about 10 million pounds of critically needed nickel of a market value of about $6,500,000. The committee recommended certain actions designed to cut down on the loss to the Government and also called certain matters to the attention of the Department of Justice for possible legal action.

The committee report on these matters is House Report No. 2390, 84th Congress, 2d session.

Ninth. Government information:

The committee has conducted a study of one of the most basic problems in our society, that is, the availability of information from Federal Government agencies. In the course of the investigation the information policies of every major department and agency have been thoroughly scrutinized. In addition, the views of eminent lawyers and other authorities on the problem of availability of governmental information have been obtained.

The legal aspects have been thoroughly researched and the legal and constitutional problems involved in the right of Congress to obtain information from Federal agencies have been summarized and documented in a committee print, "The Right of Congress To Obtain Information From the Executive and From Other Agencies of the Federal Government"—dated May 3, 1956.

The committee investigation has progressed to the point where two things are obvious:

First. A custom and orientation has grown up in the agencies leading to a strong tendency to withhold information. So strong has this orientation become that the custom itself is viewed as so-called law by many agency officials.

Second. The courts have recognized that congressional enactments govern information function and policy in the agencies. Consequently it is up to the Congress to take action to bring up to date various statutory provisions governing withholding and release of governmental information.

The report of the committee on this subject is House Report No. 2947, 84th Congress, 2d session.

Tenth. Experts and consultants:

For the first time since the enactment of section 15 of Public Law 600 in 1946, the committee has made a study of the employment and utilization of experts and consultants by the Federal Government. The study has been concerned with three different aspects:

First. The use of individual experts and consultants.

Second. Contracts with firms or organizations of such experts or consultants.

Third. The use of advisory committees.

The committee found a number of abuses in the use of individual experts and consultants, particularly as regards public relations activitives, lobbying within the Government, the use of trade association officials, and political and private influence.

The committee recommended the repeal of the blanket exemptions from conflict of interest statutes for certain experts and consultants and also an aggressive and positive role by the Civil Service Commission in preauditing instead of postauditing such appointments. The committee investigation has progressed to the point where it is obvious that Congress also must exercise a closer control in the case of contracts with firms or organizations. These contracts enable agencies to pay out sums without any limitation for services whose utility and necessity is highly questionable in too many instances.

With reference to advisory committees, the committee investigation has resulted in the publication of a number of committee prints listing for the first time the membership of all of the advisory committees being utilized by the major Federal departments and agencies. The committee study has also disclosed that there are no uniform practices governing the use of such advisory committees and that such uniform practices are probably a matter for legislation centralizing control over use of such committees and defining standards governing their activities.

Less than one-half of the advisory committees subject to the standards recommended by the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice are complying with those standards. Consequently, the committee recommended as a starting point that the President take immediate steps to obtain Governmentwide compliance with these standards by advisory committees.

The report of the committee on these matters is House Report No. 2894, 84th Congress, 2d session.

Eleventh. Civil defense:

One of the most comprehensive and far-reaching studies and investigations undertaken by the committee has been its investigation of the problems of civil defense. After many months of hearings and studies which disclosed that our country is woefully unprepared, the committee has recently reported to the Congress its recommendations designed to provide a sound approach to civil defense.

In the course of its hearings, 211 witnesses were heard including the highest officials of the Federal Government and of various State and local governments as well as experts and scientists of national and international renown.

As a result of its investigation, including hearings extending over a period of 5 months, the committee recommended:

1. Federal civil defense legislation should be redrafted to vest the basic responsibility for civil defense in the Federal Government, with the States and local units of government having an important supporting role.

2. The new legislation should create a permanent Department of Civil Defense, combining the civil defense functions—broadly defined—of the Office of Defense Mobilization and those of the Federal Civil Defense Administration.

3. The Department of Civil Defense should consult with the Department of Defense and be required to formulate a master plan for nationwide civil defense. Plans for each target area should be made and protective measures initiated after careful determination of their respective priority importance to national defense and survival.

4. The master plan for civil defense should be pointed toward the establishment of an integrated nationwide civil-defense system based on the key civil-defense measure of shelter protection against the blast, heat, and radiation effects of nuclear explosions.

5. Studies under the survival-planning contracts should be suspended, pending a reformulation of the criteria for the expenditure of the funds Congress authorized and appropriated for this purpose. A local or regional survival plan study should be concerned only with the adaptation and application of the national plan and of basic studies to a local situation.

6. The Department of Civil Defense should be authorized to finance the construction of shelters in all target areas, with the cooperation of State and local authorities.

7. The Department of Civil Defense should be authorized to institute all other measures necessary to establish an integrated nationwide civil-defense system, and to utilize toward this end such available resources and facilities.

8. The Department of Civil Defense should be authorized to strengthen State and local civil-defense organizations by contributing equipment, supplies, and funds for administration, training, stockpiles, and other necessary civil-defense uses, subject to the supervision, inspection, and approval by the Secretary of Civil Defense of the civil-defense programs of State and local authorities.

9. The Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Secretary of Civil Defense, should establish and implement an effective program of training active and reserve military personnel in civil-defense duties as a defined part of regular military training.

10. The Secretary of Civil Defense, in behalf of the President, should have defined statutory powers to act in an emergency and to mobilize all civilian resources for minimizing the effects of enemy-caused disaster upon the national economy and the people of the United States.

11. The Secretary of Civil Defense, in behalf of the President, should have greater statutory authority to carry out plans and operations in peacetime, under preattack situations, particularly before declarations of emergency have been made, in order to minimize the effects of enemy-caused disaster upon the national economy and the people of the United States.

12. The role of the military forces in civil defense should be clearly defined. The State governors should be fully informed as to the terms and conditions under which military assistance to civil-defense authorities will be rendered in the event of widespread disaster and the breakdown of civil government.

13. The studies of martial law conducted by the Attorney General, the Department of the Army, and other Federal agencies should be made public promptly upon completion to assist the Congress and the public in understanding the contemplated role of the military forces in civil defense.

The committee report on civil defense is House Report No. 2946, 84th Congress, 2d session.

Twelfth. Inventory of Federal real and personal property:

On March 21, 1956, the committee released, "Real and Personal Property Inventory Report (Civilian and Military) of the United States Government, Located in the Continental United States, in the Territories and Overseas as of June 30, 1955." This report represented an attempt, for the first time in the history of our Government, to record—in report form—an inventory of realty and personalty assets of the United States Government. Inventory figures were at acquisition cost and the finished product was a result of coordinated efforts on the part of all Government departments and agencies, including the Department of Defense, working closely with the committee.

Since March of this year, considerable effort and time has been spent with Government representatives outlining the scope of activities and additional data to be included in the 1956 property inventory report which the committee expects to release in December of this year. The next property inventory report, which will include real and personal assets of the United States Government, located in the United States, its Territories and possessions and overseas, as of June 30, 1956, will again list Federal real estate, excluding public domain properties, at acquisition cost and personalty inventories will be listed at acquisition cost. Public domain properties—with separate listings of land, buildings, facilities, and so forth—will be shown at current or estimated market value. This will be the first time an accurate up-to-date, or estimated, value has been published on public domain properties. As a result of revised and improved accounting control procedures, it is expected that the inventories of the Department of Defense for the current report will be substantially increased from those reported last year.

It is the desire of the committee, at an early date, to have all Federal real property listed in a comprehensive inventory report at an "in use" value. In this connection, assistance has been offered the committee by representatives of the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers. However, until criteria is developed and put into effect—which will involve assistance from all departments and agencies having real estate under their control—acquisition-cost figures will be used. In the meantime, however, a step in the direction of meeting this goal is being taken in the forthcoming report by having public domain properties listed at current market, or estimated, value.

A need continues to exist for a comprehensive reporting and accounting of this country's assets so as to afford the Members of the Congress and the taxpayers of this country with up-to-date figures on what this country owns. Such data will be vital in the issuance, one day, of an annual report of the Government which will reflect a true balance sheet approach of assets and liabilities of the United States Government.

The report of the committee is House Report No. 1930, 84th Congress, 2d session.

Thirteenth. Surplus donable property:

In the 1st session of the 84th Congress, the committee reported H. R. 3322 to the House of Representatives and this bill subsequently became Public Law 61.

The objective of this legislation is to insure that surplus property which should be donated for the purposes directed by the Congress is not withheld by the agencies from such donation. The committee is able to report that Public Law 61 has been effective as follows: The total surplus personal property transfers from January through May 1956 according to reports received from the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare amounted to $87,370,-177.

Fourteenth. Study of reorganizations:

Under rule XI–8 of the House of Representatives, the committee has the duty of studying the effects of laws enacted to reorganize the executive branch of the Government.

A study of the effects of past reorganization plans has been in process based on reports received from the various agencies which have been affected by such plans. The committee has sought to follow the reorganization plans and their effects after they have been adopted so that it can be prepared to recommend continuation or abolition of the extraordinary authority given the President under the Reorganization Act of 1949 and also to determine if the plans have been carried out in the manner the Congress has approved.

REPORTS OF THE COMMISSION ON ORGANIZATION OF THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH (HOOVER COMMISSION)

As reported at the close of the 1st session of this Congress, 13 of the 18 subject-matter reports made by the Commission on Organization were referred to the committee for study. Since that time a substantial number of bills designed to implement some of the Commission recommendations also have been referred to the committee. The committee has given the Commission reports serious consideration and has taken action on those recommendations and suggestions of the Commission which appeared to be meritorious. The budget and accounting legislation, which was reported favorably by the committee at this session, is based on recommendations of the Commission amended by the committee to accord with the needs of the Government after careful study. The committee's investigation and report on the unification of supply services in the Department of Defense are based on the findings of the Commission in its Reports on Food and Clothing and Depot Utilization.

In addition, the committee has had under study other Commission reports, including Transportation, Business Enterprises, and Paperwork Management, parts I and II. Hearings were held on a number of bills to eliminate certain commercial-type activities from the Government. This proposed legislation was based on certain recommendations of the Commission. After careful consideration, however, the committee decided not to report any of these measures for the elimination of certain commercial-type activities, since no case appears to have been made for the achievement of greater economy and efficiency.

A special and exceedingly comprehensive study and investigation has been made by the committee of the Commission on Organization's report on water resources and power. Hearings were held at 15 different cities in various parts of the United States, and the record made at these hearings consists of more than 5,500 pages. Nine volumes of these hearings already have been printed. These hearings covered every phase of the use of our water resources, including tolls on inland waterways, hydroelectric power, forestation, and flood control. A report is being prepared which will evaluate the recommendations of the Hoover Commission on water-resource development in the light of the information gained in the extensive hearings and studies of the committee. This report should serve as a valuable permanent work of reference on matters relating to the multiple-purpose development and use of the Nation's water resources.

REPORTS OF THE COMMISSION ON INTERGOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS (KESTNBAUM COMMISSION)

At the first session of this Congress the reports of the Kestnbaum Commission were referred to the committee for study and consideration. These reports consist of 16 separate volumes including the overall report. They represent 2 years' work by the Kestnbaum Commission and its many subcommittees and study committees composed of Federal, State, and local officials and private citizens.

Since the receipt of the report the committee has been making an intensive study of this important aspect of Government. There is probably no other aspect of Government which is so complex, involving as it does the Federal Government and all levels of State and local government.

Methods and coverage of study: In an effort to obtain a complete picture of the operation of Federal programs involving intergovernmental relations, two separate questionnaires were developed—one for Federal departments and agencies and the other for State and local governments. These were distributed in December 1955.

The questionnaire for Federal departments and agencies was designed to obtain, first, a detailed description of programs involving intergovernmental relations; second, departmental and agency judgments of program adequacy; and, third, the position and action of each agency with respect to recommendations of the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations which are applicable to its programs.

Replies to this questionnaire have now been received from all 62 of the Federal departments and agencies to which it was sent. These replies are being analyzed by the staff and a staff report is being prepared for the committee on this phase of the study.

The second questionnaire was sent to each of the State governors, to the District of Columbia, and to a representative sample of cities and counties. Special effort was made to obtain the participation of local governments representative of all sections of the country as well as of the communities of differing sizes. This questionnaire was designed to give State and local government considerable latitude for identifying and evaluating those intergovernmental programs regarded as most important to them.

Comparison of the number of questionnaires sent and replies received, by type of government unit, is presented in the following table:

Government unit	Number of—
	Questionnaires sent	Completed replies received
Total	305	115
States	48	[1] 39
District of Columbia	1	1
Counties	146	[2] 34
Cities	108	[3] 47
City-county units	2	2

[1] Includes 3 States which provided no data and 3 States that have transmitted reports prepared by special State study groups in connection with the work of the Federal Commission on Intergovernmental Relations.
[2] Includes 4 counties which provided no data.
[3] Includes 3 cities which provided no data.

NOTE.—In addition to the 39 States shown in the table, 2 States have advised that replies are being prepared. The remaining 7 States have indicated, in our most recent contact (June 15), a willingness to participate in our study but require more time.

It will be seen from the table, above, that replies have been received from four-fifths of the States, almost half of the cities, but less than a fourth of the counties to which the questionnaire was sent. The staff is continuing its efforts to secure the cooperation of those which have not yet replied.

Content of State and local replies to committee questionnaires: The intergovernmental programs identified as of primary importance by State government are welfare, highways, health, and employment security—in that order. Other programs frequently mentioned in the State replies are education, school lunch, fish and wildlife restoration, civil defense, and tax relationships.

The highway, health, and welfare programs are also regarded as of major importance by cities and counties. Other activities involving intergovernmental relations which were frequently mentioned by local governments include housing and urban renewal, Federal payments in lieu of taxes, air and water pollution control, law enforcement and narcotics control, and flood control and harbor development.

Related projects initiated: To supplement the data being provided by the questionnaire method, two related projects have been initiated.

First. The Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress is preparing for the committee a comprehensive but selective bibliography of literature available in the field of intergovernmental relations. Since no similar bibliography is presently available this document should serve a very useful purpose and will likely be in great demand. It is expected that this bibliography will be printed.

Second. In response to a committee request addressed to the President's Special Assistant for the Hoover Commission and Commission on Intergovernmental Relations Reports, the Bureau of the Budget has prepared a compilation of the recommendations contained in the report of the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations. Each recommendation is annotated to show the method of implementation and the Federal department or agency and program affected. It is anticipated that this document will also be printed.

Projected work program: Plans are being formulated for a series of hearings to be held in connection with the committee study of intergovernmental relations. The data obtained through the questionnaire surveys should provide valuable background for conduct of these hearings. It is expected that separate hearings will be arranged for the Federal departments and agencies and for representatives of State and local governments. Such hearings should serve to, first, provide a medium by which the views of Federal, State, and local officials might be focused on common problems with the objectives of finding solutions to existing difficulties and pointing the way toward more effective methods of cooperation; and, second, increase public awareness of the character of our Federal system and the problems inherent in the operation of programs involving intergovernmental cooperation.

The committee staff is making preliminary study of several areas where intensive studies may be valuable. An example of such a project is study of the feasibility of further delegation of responsibility for auditing and other administrative controls to the States in Federal-grant programs. It is contemplated that the General Accounting Office and other experts will be invited to participate in this project if undertaken.

Other activities under consideration include the establishment of closer and continuing liaison with quasi-official agencies and associations which serve State and local governments.

STUDY OF THE GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE

In recognition of the importance of the General Accounting Office as an arm of the Congress, and particularly of the Committee on Government Operations, the committee has made a comprehensive study of the organization and functioning of the General Accounting Office. The report of the committee study traces the history and functions of the General Accounting Office. The report also recommends changes in organization and procedure designed to improve the usefulness of the General Accounting Office to the Congress and the committee as well as to achieve economy and efficiency in the operations of the General Accounting Office.

The committee report on the General Accounting Office is House Report No. 2264, 84th Congress, 2d session.

Congressman Young Supports Small Business

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLIFTON (CLIFF) YOUNG
OF NEVADA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, in 1955 there were more new businesses incorporated than in any previous year in the Nation's history.

At the present time there are 4,225,000 business units, one-third more than in 1939. Of these, more than 98 per cent are small business units.

In 1939 there were 14,768 failures.

In 1955 there were 10,969 failures—more than 3,700 fewer than in 1939, although there were about a million more businesses in existence.

Since 1900 the average failures per 10,000 units of business number 70. The rate of failures in 1955 was 41.6 per 10,000 units of business—which is the lowest rate of failures during any normal year.

More important than the figures and percentages is the knowledge that the Nation's business community is healthy, that it is more prosperous than ever before, and that it is growing faster than ever before.

Wage earners have more to spend, inflation has been stopped, more people are working. There is a new confidence among the business community because the Eisenhower administration has demonstrated its confidence in the American system of rewarding enterprise.

As a member of the Eisenhower team, I am extremely pleased to see these results. Small business is the foundation of the American way of life. As long as a man with good ideas and hard work can create an enterprise and be proportionately rewarded for his effort, we can be sure of a dynamic and lasting democracy.

Critics of President Eisenhower's administration have called it a businessman's administration. It would be more accurate to say it is a businesslike administration and that is why more people than ever before are enjoying peace and prosperity.

Republicans have balanced the national budget. Inflation has been stopped. You can plan your business operations with more reliability.

Under President Eisenhower we have created the first peacetime agency exclusively devoted to small-business needs.

We have provided a larger share of defense contracts for small firms—25 per cent and 22 per cent of military prime contracts in fiscal 1954 and 1955, compared to 21 per cent, 17 per cent, and 16 per cent in 1950, 1951, and 1952.

Wage, price, and materials controls have been removed.

The excess profits tax was ended, new depreciation rules voted to foster expansion.

In the past 3 years under President Eisenhower, there has been a 27 per cent rise in gross private investment, reflecting the new climate of encouragement to personal incentive and enterprise.

We have systematically inventoried Government commercial activities; sold or terminated many of them; and are steadily withdrawing from others—until hampered by the present Democratic-controlled Congress.

In Nevada we have felt the impact of the expansion in residential building.

We will feel even more the new Federal highway program, which will create many new opportunities for business within our State.

As the Congressman from Nevada, I have worked to bring proper industry to our State. We are on the threshold of our greatest growth. The national climate will undoubtedly have its effect upon our efforts here in Nevada.

Continuation of the record prosperity we now enjoy throughout the Nation will mean more prosperous times in Nevada.

Voting Record of the Honorable Irwin D. Davidson, 20th Congressional District, New York

---

OF

HON. IRWIN D. DAVIDSON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Speaker, the last vote of the 84th Congress has been cast and the record of the legislation which has either been enacted into law or defeated is now complete. When I campaigned for the office of Representative for the 20th Congressional District of New York, I made a pledge to the voters in my district that, if elected, I would make a full report to them at the end of each session on both my voting record and my legislative activities.

Reports of that nature were made at the end of the first session, and I wish at this time to place once again, in the public record, the stand which I have taken and the vote which I have cast on every major issue presented to the House, since we reconvened on January 3, 1956. I do so with pride, because I know that each vote was cast after earnest consideration and attention to the issues involved, and because I feel that I have reflected in my vote the sentiments of the over 350,000 persons whom I have had the privilege and honor to serve since taking office.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, we passed many bills during this session without resorting to a rollcall vote. I should like to list the issues involved in those measures and the position which I supported and voted for on each of them.

SOCIAL-SECURITY AMENDMENTS

This was perhaps the most humanitarian piece of legislation passed by this Congress, and a bill which I was happy to support and cast my vote for. It provided for a reduction in the retirement age for women from 65 to 62 years and provided further for pensions to all totally disabled workers at age 50. These provisions were objected to by the administration but were supported by enough Democrats, myself included, to pass the bill. In addition, the bill broadens the coverage of the Social Security Act.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT

This bill provided for a major revision in the pensions paid to civil-service employees. I not only voted for this measure, but made a statement in support of it, before the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service of the House of Representatives, in which I requested that the committee report the bill favorably to the House without amendment. The annuities of present employees and their widows will be increased by about 25 percent and those of children by about 150 percent. This is the first major revision of the civil-service retirement system since 1948, and the increases that have been provided for by it will help bring the pensions paid under the act more into line with today's cost of living.

HIGHWAYS

Another one of the bills passed in the second session without a rollcall vote was the multibillion-dollar road program for an intracontinental highway system. The Democratic leadership was able to include in this bill provisions calling for a pay-as-you-go financing system which I wholeheartedly supported. The administration's alternative was to finance the program by a bond issue which would have put millions of dollars of interest into the hands of the purchasers of the bonds rather than into the road system.

FLOOD INSURANCE

The Congress passed, in the closing hours of the session, a $7.5 billion program of Federal flood insurance and loans. I supported that bill with my vote when it was acted on in the House, just as I had earlier supported the principle of this legislation by my introduction of bills designed to bring the Federal Government into this field. The flood losses of a year ago and the reluctance or inability of private insurance companies to write this type of insurance made the passage of this bill mandatory.

Mr. Speaker, on the other major issues of this session, rollcall votes were requested. The following is a summary of the issues involved in each of those major votes, and the position which I took on each. I have arranged this summary under the appropriate headings.

TAXES

January 31, 1956: Voted "yea." H. R. 8780, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to relieve farmers from excise taxes in the case of gasoline and special fuels used on farms for farming purposes. On passage: Yeas 387, nays 0.

March 13, 1956: Voted "yea." H. R. 9166, a bill providing for a 1-year extension of the corporate normal-tax rate and of certain excise-tax rates. On passage: Yeas 366, nays 4.

RUBBER PLANT DISPOSAL

February 8, 1956: Voted "yea." House Resolution 396, a resolution expressing the disapproval of the House of the sale of a West Virginia rubber plant as recommended in the report of the Rubber Producing Facilities Disposal Commission. On agreeing to the resolution: Yeas 61, nays 310. Here, again, as was the case on two occasions during the first session, a giveaway advocated by the Republican leadership was permitted to be approved.

COLORADO RIVER STORAGE PROJECT

March 1, 1956: Voted "yea." H. R. 3383, legislation authorizing the construction, operation, and maintenance of the Colorado River storage project and participating projects. On passage: Yeas 256, nays 136. This bill provided the basis for a vast irrigation and land reclamation project in the western and southwestern part of our Nation.

SCHOOL-MILK PROGRAM

March 21, 1956: Voted "yea." H. R. 8320, a bill extending and providing additional authority for the special school-milk program and the brucellosis eradication program for the fiscal year 1956. There were two separate votes on this bill. The first was on agreeing to the report of the House-Senate conference on the bill. This was rejected by a vote of 195 to 215. A motion was then made to agree to the Senate amendments to the bill, and on that motion I again voted "yea"; this motion carried: Yeas 406, nays 0.

FARM LEGISLATION

April 11, 1956: Voted "nay." H. R. 12, the Agricultural Act of 1956. This vote was on a motion to recommit the House-Senate conference report on the bill and return it to committee with instructions to substitute an 82.5-percent parity figure for the 90-percent figure agreed to. This motion was defeated: Yeas 181, nays 238.

April 11, 1956: Voted "yea." This vote followed the motion to recommit and was on the question of passage of the conference report. The report of the conferees was agreed to: Yeas 237, nays 181. This bill was vetoed by the President.

April 18, 1956: Voted "yea." This vote was taken on the question of whether or not to override the President's veto of the bill. The two-thirds majority vote could not be obtained and the veto was sustained: Yeas 202, nays 211.

May 3, 1956: Voted "nay." This vote was cast on the new farm bill which was prepared after the President's veto. It abandoned or watered down the high parity provisions that had caused the veto and established a $1.2-billion farm subsidy in the form of a soil bank. This vote was on a motion to recommit the bill to committee and thus prevent its enactment. The motion was defeated: Yeas 186, nays 208.

May 3, 1956: Voted "yea." This vote followed the motion to recommit and was on the question of passage of the bill. The measure was passed: Yeas 314, nays 78.

FOREIGN AID

June 11, 1956: Voted "yea." H. R. 11356, the Mutual Security Act of 1956. This bill provided the authorization for all of our foreign-aid programs. The authorization approved by this bill was $3.8 billion. On passage: Yeas 275, nays 122.

July 11, 1956: Voted "yea." H. R. 12130, the foreign-aid appropriation bill. This bill appropriated the funds to carry on our foreign-aid programs within the authorization permitted by the Mutual Security Act. The amount appropriated by the House in this bill was $3.4 billion. On passage: Yeas 284, nays 120. In the closing hours of the session, a conference report was agreed to in the House on a voice vote. I supported that report which appropriated almost $3.8 billion for our foreign-aid programs.

SMALL BUSINESS

June 11, 1956: Voted "yea." H. R. 1840, a bill to strengthen the Robinson-Patman Act and to amend the antitrust law prohibiting price discrimination. On passage, yeas 393, nays 3.

VETERANS' AFFAIRS

June 27, 1956: Voted "nay" on motion to recommit the bill and voted "yea" on passage. H. R. 7886, a bill, which, after a part was stricken on a technical point of order, amended part III of Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a) to liberalize the basis for, and increase the monthly rates of, non-service-connected disability pension awards. The motion to recommit the bill to committee was defeated: Yeas 110, nays 305. On passage: Yeas 364, nays 51.

July 12, 1956: Voted "yea," H. R. 12038, a bill to increase service-connected disability compensation and dependency allowances. On passage: Yeas 391, nays 0. The Senate allowed both of these bills to die in committee.

FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION

July 5, 1956: Four separate rollcall votes were cast on H. R. 7535, a bill to provide Federal aid to education through grants to finance school construction. The first vote came on an amendment to alter the formula for allocating funds to the States. On that amendment, I voted "nay." The amendment was defeated: Yeas 168, nays 250. The next vote was on the Powell amendment to bar funds to those States which fail to comply with the Supreme Court decision declaring segregation in public schools unconstitutional. I voted in favor of that amendment and it was adopted: Yeas 225, nays 192. A motion was then made to recommit the bill to committee with instructions that the bill be again reported to the House with amendments. On that motion, I voted "nay"; the motion was defeated: Yeas 158, nays 262. Finally, the question was put on passage of the bill. I voted "yea," but the bill was defeated: Yeas 194, nays 224.

POSTAL RATE INCREASE

July 6, 1956: Voted "nay." H. R. 11380, a bill to readjust postal rates and establish a congressional policy for the determination of postal rates. On passage: Yeas 217, nays 166. This bill would have caused the average citizen to bear the cost of subsidizing the great deficit caused by second-class mailing privileges granted to large magazine publishers. This, it seemed to me, was patently unfair and not the proper way to cure the annual deficit of the Post Office Department. The bill died in the Senate Post Office Committee.

COMMUNIST CHINA

July 18, 1956: Voted "yea." House Concurrent Resolution 265, a resolution expressing the sense of Congress against the admission of the Communist regime in China as the representative of China in the United Nations. On agreeing to the resolution: Yeas 391, nays 0.

CIVIL RIGHTS

July 23, 1956: Voted "yea" on passage of the bill and voted "nay" on a motion to recommit the bill to committee. H. R. 627, the civil-rights bill, was a watered down version of a bill introduced by myself and several other Congressmen. The bill as presented to the House for consideration was the very least that the Congress could have approved and still be labeled "civil-rights legislation." Opponents of the bill moved to recommit it to committee in an effort to kill the measure. I voted against the motion and the motion was defeated: Yeas 131, nays 275. The question was then put on passage of the bill, I voted "yea" and the bill was passed: Yeas 279, nays 126. Unfortunately, parliamentary maneuvering in the Senate prevented this bill from being considered in the upper House.

FEDERAL CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS

July 24, 1956: Voted "yea." S. 1644, a bill to prescribe policy and procedure in connection with construction contracts made by executive agencies. The measure would provide orderly procedures to curb abuses which had arisen in connection with such contracts. The bill was presented to the House on a motion to suspend the rules of the House in order to consider and pass the bill. Such a motion requires a majority of two-thirds of those voting, and such a majority could not be obtained. On the motion, yeas 245, nays 145.

CIVILIAN ATOMIC POWER ACCELERATION PROGRAM

July 24, 1956: Voted "nay" on motions to strike the enacting clause and on the motion to recommit the bill to committee. H. R. 12061, a measure to provide a program to accelerate the construction of atomic reactors. The purpose of this bill was to help our country to increase or at the least to maintain our lead in the field of atomic energy. My negative votes on the two motions were voted in favor of the bill, since both the motion to strike the enacting clause and the motion to recommit the bill were designed to kill this legislation. The motion to strike the enacting clause was defeated: Yeas 195, nays 199; the motion to recommit was, unfortunately, adopted: Yeas 203, nays 191.

HOUSING

July 25, 1956: Voted "nay" on motion to amend the rule so as to strike out title V of the bill, the title which authorized public housing. H. R. 11742, a bill to amend and extend the laws relating to the provision and improvement of housing and the conservation and development of urban communities. The only rollcall on this bill was on the motion to prevent consideration of the public housing sections of the measure. On that vote, I opposed the motion and it was defeated: Yeas 92, nays 299. The House then passed on a division vote an amendment to provide only 35,000 units of public housing in each of the next 2 years. This provision I opposed, feeling that a minimum of 200,000 units for each of the next 3 years was essential to win the race to provide decent public housing before the blight of slums overtook many areas. The Senate, however, agreed to the 35,000 units figure, and just before final adjournment, a conference report was approved by both Houses, thus preventing the termination of many of the Federal housing programs. On the voice vote to agree to the conference report, I voted to pass and adopt the report, since it was better to have some housing rather than to vote in favor of the death of many housing programs.

FRYINGPAN-ARKANSAS PROJECT

July 26, 1956: Voted "nay." House Resolution 641, a resolution permitting limited debate on H. R. 412, a bill to authorize the construction, operation, and maintenance by the Secretary of the Interior of the Fryingpan-Arkansas project, Colorado. On the resolution to grant the rule permitting consideration of the bill: Yeas 179, nays 194.

AERONAUTICS ACT OF 1938

July 26, 1956: Voted "nay" on a resolution to consider this measure and voted "yea" on a motion to recommit. H. R. 8902, a bill to amend the Aeronautics Act of 1938 to give valuable tax concessions to already subsidized airlines in the purchase of new equipment. My votes on this measure opposed the bill. I voted against the resolution to consider the bill, but the resolution was adopted: Yeas 184, nays 178. I then voted in favor of a motion to recommit the bill to committee, and that motion was adopted: Yeas 196, nays 153.

ELECTRIC POWER RATES AT FEDERAL PROJECTS

July 27, 1956: Voted "yea" on both the adoption of the resolution permitting consideration of this measure and on passage of the bill. S. 338, a bill providing that the rates charged for electric power and energy by the Southwest Power Administration shall not be revised before July 1, 1957. On adoption of the resolution permitting consideration of the bill: Yeas 219, nays 126. On passage of the bill: Yeas 201, nays 140.

LITTLE WOOD RIVER RECLAMATION PROJECT

July 27, 1956: Voted "nay" on resolution to consider the bill out of order. H. R. 7850, a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain the Little Wood River reclamation project in Idaho. My vote was cast against the resolution because it was an attempt to disrupt the orderly program set out by the majority leader who had already scheduled an identical bill, passed by the Senate, for consideration. On adoption of the resolution: Yeas 173, nays 168. The Senate-passed bill was actually the measure considered and passed by the House and I supported that bill on a voice vote.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the voting record that I leave behind as the session closes. So that the record of my activities is complete, I shall shortly present a record of my legislative activities, that is, a full report on the bills and resolutions that I have introduced in this session of the Congress as well as a summary of the other activities that have occupied my time as the Representative of the 20th Congressional District of New York. I hope that together with the record of my votes, that document will paint a complete picture of the Congressman that I have tried to be.

Congressman Young Active in Wildlife Improvement

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. CLIFTON (CLIFF) YOUNG

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, the State of Nevada—fastest growing in the Union—typifies the problem all of us interested in preserving the pleasures of hunting and fishing face. The westward population movement has meant increased demands on our present hunting and fishing areas and has pointed up the need for protection of our present wildlife and recreation resources and the development of new wildlife areas.

During the 84th Congress considerable progress was made along these lines.

WASHOE PROJECT

Foremost in this new appreciation of the aesthetic and economic benefits of protecting and improving our wildlife resources was the $2 million authorized for this purpose in the Washoe reclamation project to be constructed on the Truckee and Carson Rivers.

I am proud to have sponsored this bill in the House and to have first introduced the wildlife provisions which were subsequently sustained by both Houses of Congress and the President.

Not only will this provision do much to protect and enhance the portions of these river systems which have appealed to sportsmen from all over the world, but it serves to write a new page in the history of reclamation and wildlife development.

It was on this same river system that the first Federal reclamation project was built shortly after the turn of the century. The lack of planning at that time resulted in the faulty constructed Derby Dam, which aided substantially in destroying the fabulous fishing at world-famous Pyramid Lake. As the new dams are constructed under the authorized Washoe project, we can now be assured that proper attention will be paid to enhancing the fishing and wildlife resources in that area.

MILITARY LANDS

Considerable progress was made in the House this past year with regard to hunting and fishing on military reservations. The measure I co-authored requiring congressional approval of any proposed military land withdrawal or reservation from the public domain in excess of 5,000 acres passed the House in the closing days but did not get through the Senate. I am confident, however, that it will be reintroduced next year and in the meantime will greatly influence the Defense Department in its improving attitude on this important subject.

As it passed the House, the bill would require compliance with State fish and game laws on military areas and cooperation with state conservation officials in the management of wildlife resources.

Through continuing negotiations with the Department of the Navy, I have been assured of written agreements to allow hunting on the Navy aerial gunnery ranges in Nevada. With proper management, the wildlife resources of this area can be improved under the multiple-use arrangement I have proposed.

DESERT GAME RANGE

In the case of the Air Force versus the Desert Game Range in southern Nevada, I have asked that the Department of Defense study possible location of their proposed gunnery range expansion to the north of the Desert Game Range. This study is now in progress.

PREDATOR CONTROL

The wildlife resources of Nevada will be better protected by the increased funds for predator control we were able to obtain this year. A total of $96,710 in Federal funds for control of predatory animals and injurious rodents on Nevada rangeland was approved—a hundred per cent increase over last year.

FISH AND WILDLIFE SERVICE

The United States Fish and Wildlife Service will spend $655,680 in Nevada during the next 12 months. Of this amount $275,000 will be in Federal aid payments to States for wildlife restoration projects.

DUCK STAMP

Although legislation I sponsored last year provided substantial funds for wetlands acquisition, much remains to be done in this important field. It is my feeling that a greater portion of duck-stamp revenues should be spent for wetlands acquisition, and perhaps the duck-stamp price should be increased to make sure we acquire enough breeding grounds to keep apace with our skyrocketing population.

If an increase in the duck-stamp cost occurs, it should be specifically earmarked for waterfowl habitat acquisition, and nothing else till the acreage so badly needed is acquired. As most sportsmen are so keenly aware, one of the serious defects of existing law is the fact that duck-stamp funds can be and are being used for other purposes than acquisition of land and water resources. If waterfowling is to remain a sport for the average American citizen who does not belong to a private club, it is important that we speed up the rate of obtaining waterfowl habitat. It has been gratifying to see the interest on the part of sportsmen in Nevada in this regard and the progress made. The Mason Valley Ranch in Lyon County, acquired last year by the Nevada State Fish and Game Commission, is an excellent example of what can be done with foresight and determination.

FISH HATCHERY

I have been in close touch with the Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, urging establishment of a fish hatchery in the vicinity of Glen Canyon Dam for the purpose of stocking the Colorado River.

WATER POLLUTION CONTROL

H. R. 9540, the water pollution control bill, passed both Houses and was signed into law. It should be of considerable aid in the nationwide effort to improve our fishing resources.

BONNER BILL

Although there was opposition from Nevada to the original proposal to this measure, it was reshaped in committee and has generally met with favor by conservationists. It would create an Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Fisheries and Wildlife as a primary step in strengthening the whole program. Under the Assistant Secretary, it would establish the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, headed by a single administrator, thus preserving machinery for the necessary integration and coordination in the many places where fish and wildlife problems overlap.

COORDINATION ACT

I was disappointed to see that the efforts to revise this important law so as to insure a broader recognition of fish and wildlife values in reclamation projects met with no success. It was most gratifying, however, to see the enhanced awareness of recreational values reflected in the Washoe project, where $2 million was authorized for fish and wildlife purposes.

Aaron Riche

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JOSEPH F. HOLT

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, June 10, 1956, the Los Angeles Jewish community honored Aaron Riche for his 50 years in B'nai B'rith in the Embassy Room of the Hotel Ambassador in Los Angeles, Calif.

Testimonial resolution plaques from both the city council and the county board of supervisors were also presented to Riche at the banquet.

A native of Colorado, Riche joined B'nai B'rith Denver Lodge in 1906. He was a newspaper reporter and editor in Denver and in New York City, and did publicity and public relations work in both those cities and in Los Angeles. He came to Los Angeles in 1924.

In addition to the United States Treasury Medal, he holds citations from the Red Cross, Jewish Welfare Board, Zionist Organization, Mount Sinai Hospital, Bonds of Israel Government, Key Men of the Welfare Fund, California Safety Council, United Jewish Appeal, United States Savings Bond Campaign and the Jewish National Fund.

The city's citation, which was in the form of a framed plaque, was presented by Fifth District Councilwoman Rosalind Wiener Wyman.

Joe Herman, Jr., was chairman of sponsors for the testimonial.

Voting and Attendance Record of Hon. Gerald R. Ford, Jr., of Michigan

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GERALD R. FORD, JR.
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include a report of my voting and attendance record during the 2d session of the 84th Congress.

The record includes all rollcall votes and all quorum calls. The description of bills is for the purpose of identification only; no attempt has been made to describe the bills completely or to elaborate upon the issues involved.

The purpose of this report is to collect in one place information which is scattered through thousands of pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I want to be able to provide any interested constituent with a simple compilation of my voting and attendance record.

It will be noted that there were 132 rollcalls and my attendance record was 100 percent.

Voting and attendance record, Representative GERALD R. FORD, JR., 5th District of Michigan, 84th Cong., 2d sess.

131	...do	H. Res. 604. On resolution providing for consideration of H. R. 7850, a bill to authorize construction, operation, and maintenance of Little Wood River reclamation project. (Passed 173 to 168.)	Yes.
132	...do	Quorum call	Present.

Report and Review of the Major Activities of the 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JOHN V. BEAMER

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BEAMER. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent, I include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a report and a review of the major activities of the 84th Congress. It is felt that such a report is due the people of the Fifth Indiana Congressional District.

A review of the 84th Congress necessarily must be brief, even to touch upon the most important topics. The second session started very slowly, but finally, after being prodded as a do-nothing Congress, the Democratic majority in control of this Congress pushed nearly every conceivable type of legislation to the floor.

Due to early inactivity, some good measures were not considered and, due to the rush in the closing weeks, many good measures were lost. At the same time, some unnecessarily bad measures were passed by both the House and the Senate. As a nation, we can be grateful for the bicameral system which made it possible for one body to either defeat or improve certain undesirable legislation.

Two thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight bills and resolutions were passed by the 84th Congress. This is the largest number of any Congress since the 71st Congress—1929–30.

Nineteen thousand and thirty-nine bills and resolutions were submitted. There is a total of 531 Senators and Representatives, which would make an average of 36 such bills and resolutions for each Senator and Representative.

One of the outstanding accomplishments of this administration was the balancing of the budget, which also provided a surplus of nearly $2 billion. This surplus will be available to help reduce the national debt and is the accomplishment of which the administration can be justly proud. However, even if we are able to reduce the national debt $2 billion per year, it will require a long time to bring the debt down to a sum that would not be a deterrent, as it is at the present time, to the general economy.

The appropriations amounted to $52.2 billion in the first session and $59.8 billion in the second session. This was an increase over the Republican 83d Congress. Some people have said that this was one of the most extravagant Congresses of peacetime years.

Remember that the large balance of this year was made possible by the Republican 83d Congress that attempted to practice some economy in appropriations and efficiency in Government agencies. The huge sums appropriated during these two sessions will make it increasingly difficult to secure a balanced budget and a surplus next year.

A highway bill was passed which provides $33 billion to be spent over a 13-year period. This is on a pay-as-you-go basis which means that everybody helps to pay with increased Federal tax on gasoline and auto accessories. Some have referred to this as a huge public-works project, but it is not to be compared with the old WPA program because highways are needed for an expanding economy and for safety measures.

A postal-rate increase was passed by the House. Nearly four decades had passed since changes had been made in certain postage rates. All operating costs of the Post Office Department had increased and, consequently, that agency was operating at a terrific loss each year. However, the Senate failed to act on this bill and, therefore, an annual deficit of nearly half a billion dollars will continue in the Post Office Department.

Natural resources presented the recurring question of public versus private power. By a small margin the House passed the Hells Canyon public-power project, but the Senate defeated it. The Senate action reaffirmed the action of the 83d Congress which saves the taxpayers millions of dollars and, in addition, will produce nearly $10 million in tax revenue each year.

A proposal to spend $440 million for federally owned atomic reactors was passed by the Senate but defeated by the House. This action further confirmed the principles of private ownership instead of more creeping socialism.

The Arkansas-Fryingpan reclamation project in Colorado was defeated.

The Natural Gas Act was passed by both Houses but vetoed by the President. The purpose of this law was to establish State instead of Federal regulation of natural gas. The net result would have been more and cheaper natural gas for the consumers.

Increased rates were predicted if this bill failed. Already $923,000 boost has been requested for a portion of southern Indiana. In addition, it is predicted that rates will continue to increase if Federal control is pressed upon the producers of natural gas. Indiana, especially, was greatly benefited when it received an increased supply of natural gas several years ago. As a result of this increased supply of natural gas, the quality of the gas for the consumer was improved and the rates were lowered. Indiana consumers of natural gas would benefit very materially if the provisions of the Natural Gas Act had been permitted to become law. Of course, the President's veto was not based on the fact that the principle itself was in question, but rather that certain lobbying tactics were deplored by the President.

Federal aid to education was presented in the form of Federal aid for school construction. This proposal was defeated in the House of Representatives. Some observers credited the inclusion of the segregation issue as a cause of the defeat of this measure. Actually, most of the Congressmen were opposed to the principle of Federal aid to education, and it is felt that the bill would have been defeated even if the Powell segregation amendment had not been offered. The desire to retain public schools instead of Government schools remains predominant especially in view of the many letters that were received from the fifth district in opposition to Federal aid to education.

Civil rights was one of the big debates of both sessions. The bill that was proposed really was the recommendation of the administration and received bipartisan support. It would have set up a commission to review questions and problems of segregation. Actually, it was an implementation of the rights guaranteed in the 13th, 14th, and 15th amendments. This bill passed the House of Representatives but no action was taken in the Senate.

Foreign aid was another issue that is a constantly recurring problem. There are many of us who have had the opportunity of witnessing the work of several of the foreign-aid programs with the result that many people begin to wonder whether or not the huge sums of money being spent for foreign aid really are producing the desired results. The foreign aid again was increased to a total of $3.8 billion. Many billions of dollars also remain unexpended for this purpose.

The foreign policy was implemented by certain types of legislation, but in general it still retains peace and a recognized leadership in international understanding and determination for national sovereignty.

Defense appropriations totaled $66½ billion, plus $5 billion more for atomic-energy development. This is the largest in peacetime.

In keeping with further expansion of the military services the number of Army officers will be increased from 30,600 to 49,500 and the Air Force officers from 27,500 to 69,425.

Farm bill—the first one was vetoed because the 90-percent high parity was included. This system was the one previously used that had brought only lower prices to farmers, higher costs to consumers and increased taxes to all.

The second farm bill, though delayed nearly 4 months, was a reasonable compromise. Its principal feature is a soil bank providing $1.2 billion for conservation purposes of removing certain crops presently in surplus from production.

Health bills: Reinsurance was defeated in the first session. A bill to provide funds for medical research was passed and the polio vaccine program was continued for 1 more year.

Social-security contributions were increased and benefits were broadened. Two new features—totally disabled may draw benefits at 50 years of age, and widows and working women now can get pensions at 62 instead of 65 years of age.

Minimum wage was increased to $1 per hour.

Veterans will be receiving increased pensions and, with limitations, will have age 50 considered for total disability, service connected.

I also wish to comment briefly on certain bills that I submitted. One bill that would have made the provisions of the Hatch Act—participation by Federal employees in political activities—inapplicable to State employees, passed the House unanimously but was not considered by the Senate committee. This is a very worthwhile measure for those who believe that all power should not be concentrated in the Federal Government. The provisions of the Hatch Act were to apply only to Federal employees and my bill would have corrected some of the recent applications of this measure to State employees.

I also introduced a bill that would validate the sea duty pay which was promised to the men who served in the Navy on the Great Lakes and on the steamship Sequoia during World War II. This bill was passed by both Houses and has been signed into law by the President.

I also introduced another bill to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate the interstate transportation of migratory farm labor. Senator MAGNUSON introduced a similar bill in the Senate. Each bill passed its respective House and also has been signed into law as one of the labor reform proposals of the administration.

I also introduced legislation that would not permit the Federal Communications Commission to discriminate against newspapers or other organizations engaged in the gathering and dissemination of news in the allocation of television channels and radio wavelengths. This bill had hearings in the House, but no action was taken. It is a field that should be explored and studied.

In the field of agriculture, I introduced one bill that would have set up a soil-bank program and another that would exempt the farmers from paying the tax on gasoline used for purely agricultural purposes. Similar bills were passed and enacted into law by this Congress.

I also introduced a bill to provide for agricultural research in the marketing and additional uses of agriculture products. This seems to be a very important requirement today, because agriculture is faced with an overproduction problem. It seems much wiser to increase the consumption of agricultural products than to reduce their production.

It has been my privilege to serve on the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. Our subcommittee made extensive studies in the field of operations of the Securities and Exchange Commission and also in the field of war claims. These war claims present a very important problem that must be settled.

Recently I also was appointed to serve on the Traffic Safety Subcommittee. This committee is charged with the study of the many traffic accidents that are occurring on our Nation's highways. The Nation was shocked recently when 128 passengers were killed in an airplane crash over the Grand Canyon. However, 115 people are killed every day in automobile accidents. Thus it is felt that this committee is charged with a grave responsibility of making some studies in the hope that recommendations may be made to decrease this terrific toll of lives.

As mentioned in the first part of my comments, 2,878 bills and resolutions were passed by this 84th Congress. Thus it is hoped that individuals and groups who may be studying the voting records of any Congressmen will not select any small group of bills—20 or 30—as often is the case, to determine a voting record. Each Representative is charged with the obligation of representing all of the people in his district with a full understanding of the needs and requirements of the entire United States.

The many requests that came through the mail daily to our office were handled promptly by a very efficient staff. I wish to pay tribute to the staff members and all others who cooperated in making it possible to render a service to the people of the Fifth District.

Agreements Reached in Organizational Meetings of Subcommittee on Customs, Tariffs, and Reciprocal Trade Agreements of the Committee on Ways and Means

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HALE BOGGS
OF LOUISIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Customs, Tariffs, and Reciprocal Trade Agreements of the Committee on Ways and Means, I would like to report to the House membership that the subcommittee held a series of organizational meetings prior to the adjournment of the 84th Congress and reached preliminary agreement with respect to subcommittee plans. For the information of my colleagues and others interested persons, I would like to insert in the RECORD at this point a press release announcing agreement reached in the subcommittee's organizational meetings:

HON. HALE BOGGS, DEMOCRAT, LOUISIANA, CHAIRMAN OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON CUSTOMS, TARIFFS, AND RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS, ANNOUNCES AGREEMENT REACHED IN SUBCOMMITTEE'S ORGANIZATIONAL MEETINGS

The Honorable HALE BOGGS, Democrat, Louisiana, chairman of the Subcommittee on Customs, Tariffs, and Reciprocal Trade Agreements, of the Committee on Ways and Means, today announced that prior to the adjournment of the 84th Congress the membership of the subcommittee had held a series of organizational meetings and had reached preliminary agreement with respect to subcommittee plans. The subcommittee has reached agreement on the subcommittee's activity during the period from the adjournment of the 2d session to the convening of the 85th Congress.

It is expected that staff study will occupy a substantial portion of the subcommittee's activity during the adjournment period. This study will include detailed consideration of specific aspects of foreign trade matters. In addition to the public hearings by the subcommittee described below, the views of interested organizations and individuals will be solicited in regard to various aspects of the subject matter coming within the jurisdiction of the subcommittee.

The subcommittee has tentatively agreed to conduct 2 weeks of public hearings during the month of September in Washington, D. C., and 2 weeks of public hearings beginning in late November at selected locations abroad. The details of these hearings are yet to be developed and they will be announced as they are determined.

In the short-range study scheduled to take place during the present adjournment period, the subcommittee and its staff will endeavor to investigate and study various aspects of our customs, tariff, and trade agreement laws and the administration of the agreements entered into thereunder as they relate to particular industries. Special emphasis will be placed during the inquiry on the relationship and effect of these matters on the foreign economic policy of the United States and their effect upon domestic producers and employment.

The subcommittee will select for study and review typical cases involving efforts of domestic industries to secure relief from imports through administrative and statutory procedures available to a domestic industry. This study will cover all aspects of these relief provisions, including their operation, adequacy, and effectiveness, the factual situations existing in the selected industries as to employment, production, and the impact of imports, the foreign trade and foreign economic policy implications involved, the relationship of the particular industry to our overall national economy, including trends and consumption of the items produced, the role of domestic production, the role of imports, and the role of the items in world trade.

Chairman BOGGS stressed the fact that this review and study will be limited to typical cases which will result in the development of information by the subcommittee which would be of general applicability. In this connection the chairman announced that such staff studies will be directed to the development of objective and factual information for subcommittee consideration.

Staff studies along these lines will proceed immediately. The subcommittee will announce at a later date the specific areas of inquiry and its further agenda.

The subcommittee has directed that the annual report of the Tariff Commission be evaluated by the staff to determine its adequacy for the purpose of informing Congress and interested persons with respect to tariff matters. In announcing the subcommittee hearing schedule, Chairman BOGGS stated that if the time of the membership permits additional hearings may be scheduled in October.

Persons having suggestions for improving our customs and tariff laws and comments with respect to specific aspects of the operation of these laws are invited to submit their written views to the clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means, room 1102, New House Office Building, Washington, D. C. Such expression of views will be given careful staff study and will be reviewed by the subcommittee.

Requests to be heard before the subcommittee in public hearings should be held in abeyance until a specific hearing announcement is made.

The members of the subcommittee are: HALE BOGGS, Louisiana, chairman; CECIL R. KING, California; BURR P. HARRISON, Virginia; EUGENE J. MCCARTHY, Minnesota; THADDEUS M. MACHROWICZ, Michigan; DANIEL A. REED, New York; JOHN W. BYRNES, Wisconsin; ANTONI N. SADLAK, Connecticut; THOMAS B. CURTIS, Missouri; ex officio, the Honorable JERE COOPER, chairman, Committee on Ways and Means.

Tribute to Joseph F. O'Hern, Manager, Veterans' Administration Regional Office, Newark, N. J.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. T. JAMES TUMULTY
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. TUMULTY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I desire to pay tribute to a public servant who is faithful, conscientious, capable, and personable. He is Joseph F. O'Hern, manager of the Veterans' Administration's regional office, Newark, N. J. Too often in life, we pause to complain rather than give praise where praise is due.

Since I have been elected to Congress, I have come to learn what a trying job it must be to be a Regional Manager of the Veterans' Administration. I know I have called on Joseph O'Hern an infinite number of times to help my constituents. I have called Mr. O'Hern morning, noon, and night, and have always found a courteous reply and ready response to be of assistance.

I felt it my duty to make these remarks so that his faithful service might be brought to the attention of the Congress and be recorded on the records of Congress. His superiors should be proud of Joseph O'Hern. I know I am grateful to him and so are the constituents of the 14th District, whom he has served so well.

I think he is typical of many faithful Veterans' Administration employees and so that they may not feel that their work goes unsung, these words of praise stand as a tribute to them and their excellent performance.

Congressman Young Aids Nevada Workingman

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLIFTON (CLIFF) YOUNG
OF NEVADA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, the American worker is better off in every way today than at any other time in history. His wages are at record levels; his purchasing power is at an alltime high.

The working men and women of Nevada have shared in this record prosperity which is made even more of a blessing because it is accompanied by peace.

As a strong supporter of the sound and forward-looking policies of President Eisenhower which have produced this peace and plenty, I am proud to have played a part in these achievements:

Record employment: The 62.9 million men and women at work in January of this year were the greatest number of Americans ever employed in that month and represented an increase of 2.7 million over January a year ago and 1.9 million more than the previous record January in 1953.

Unemployment: The past 3 years under President Eisenhower averaged less unemployment than in the last term of his predecessor, despite nearly a three million increase in civil labor force and despite the fact 2½ of the years 1948 to 1952 were war years.

Wages: Both hourly and weekly wages are at all-time record highs—averaging nearly 13 per cent higher in peacetime 1955 than in wartime 1952.

Prices: The 12-cent loss in buying power—nearly one-eighth of each wage dollar—from inflation in the years 1950, 1951, and 1952 has been cut to less than three-fourths of 1 cent in President Eisenhower's first 3 years.

I have supported the sound fiscal policies and the faith in basic American principles which made these achievements possible.

As Nevada's Congressman, I am also proud of the legislative achievements improving the lot of all of us who work for a living.

Social security: Because the Eisenhower administration has extended social security to 10 million additional workers and liberalized benefits for 8,100,000, 9 out of 10 workers and their families are now protected against loss of income due to old age or death. Benefits have been increased substantially. Retired persons may earn more income on their own and still draw social security benefits.

Unemployment insurance: Four million additional workers have been covered by unemployment insurance.

Minimum wage: The minimum wage was raised to $1, effective March 1, 1956, directly increasing the pay envelopes of over two million workers and indirectly benefiting millions more by raising the general wage level.

Vocational rehabilitation: This humanitarian program has been improved and expanded to benefit additional hundreds of thousands of handicapped workers.

Federal workers: Armed Forces and Federal civilian workers received pay raises and insurance benefits.

Railroad retirement: These benefits were increased and tax provisions changed to aid retired people.

Nevada working men and women have shared in this nationwide prosperity. However, as your Congressman, I have worked to see that our own State is properly developed so that we will continue to hold our high position in terms of per capita income and general well-being. Here are a few accomplishments:

Sponsored the Henderson bill and other efforts to bring industry to Nevada.

Supported the new highway bill, which will bring millions of dollars to our State, thousands of new jobs, improved tourist business, opportunities for new enterprise.

Authored the Washoe project bill, which will aid the development of western Nevada and bring many new jobs to that area.

Fought for the Nevada tungsten industry to protect the jobs of hundreds of Nevada working people.

Stopped the Keating bill, which would have closed down one of Nevada's biggest industries and left thousands unemployed.

Have seen to it that the Nevada workingman in southern Nevada has an opportunity to acquire a small tract.

Supported the tax-cut bill which reduced the taxes of wage earners by $4.7 billion—and which represented a savings of $200 a year for the average Nevada taxpaying family of four.

Reply by Hon. Wayne Morse to Report Presented by Hon. H. Alexander Smith Defending the National Labor Relations Board

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WAYNE MORSE
OF OREGON
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD my reply to the report presented by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] in defense of the National Labor Relations Board.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPLY OF SENATOR WAYNE MORSE TO REPORT PRESENTED BY SENATOR SMITH OF NEW JERSEY DEFENDING THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

On July 9, 1956, the senior Senator from New Jersey, ranking Republican member of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare [Mr. SMITH], presented to the Senate a report prepared at the direction of himself and the senior Senator from California, the minority leader [Mr. KNOWLAND], purporting to defend the policies and conduct of the present administration of the National Labor Relations Act. The report embodies, among other exhibits, letters from Chairman Leedom and General Counsel Kammholz of the Board, addressed to the senior Senator from Alabama, chairman of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare [Mr. HILL], likewise purporting to defend the present administration. That report and these letters purport to show that the documented charges which I made in my speech on the floor of the Senate on March 23, 1956, "are not supported by the facts." In so doing, they accuse me of bias and prejudice against management and in favor of labor unions, conveniently ignoring the fact that I supported many of the Taft-Hartley Act's provisions, including two of the most important changes which imposed restrictions on labor unions and created new rights for employers—the provisions prohibiting strikes for recognition at a time when the employer was bound to deal with a rival, certified union, and the provision outlawing jurisdictional strikes. They accuse me of misapprehending "the intent of Congress and the meaning of the statute." And they accuse me of inconsistency in calling for a congressional investigation of the Board today, while I opposed a congressional investigation of the Board in 1949.

In evaluating these personal attacks upon me, as in evaluating all of the material submitted, it is indispensable to recall the precise accusation that I made against the present administration. For only in the light of the exact charge, and the evidence which I adduced to support it, does it appear that the entire defense is compounded of innumerable fallacies, distortions, and outright misrepresentations skillfully jumbled to becloud the issue and hide the relevant facts. When the fog is pierced by analysis, the defenses themselves reveal admissions of the charge.

I. POLICY OF THE PRESENT ADMINISTRATION

In my speech on March 23, I said that the Eisenhower administration wanted the American public to believe that it was friendly to labor unions; that prior to his election the President had admitted that the Taft-Hartley Act, as it then stood, went too far in the direction of permitting employers to throttle, destroy, and defeat labor organizations; and that it would be the policy of his administration to reduce rather than to multiply the shackles which the Taft-Hartley Act had placed on employee self-organization and effective collective bargaining.

Of course, the Eisenhower administration would not willingly relinquish the political advantage which it gains from such a public evaluation of its aims and objectives. It has, indeed, gone to some lengths to maintain the illusion. Secretary of Labor Mitchell, for example, was permitted to advocate publicly that section 14 (b) should be repealed. That is the notorious and illogical provision which gives precedence over the Taft-Hartley Act to State laws which contain antiunion security provisions more restrictive than those of the Federal Act, but, at the same time, outlaws State laws which contain less restrictive provisions. And, as the report proclaims, the President did, in 1954, submit a proposal to delete the prohibition against treating replaced economic strikers as employees eligible to vote in an election to determine the bargaining representative of the struck plant, and to eliminate the mandatory injunction provision.

At the same time, however, the administration took steps to assure that none of these developments, favorable to unions, would occur. The President immediately disassociated himself from Secretary Mitchell's views on section 14 (b). And the bill which the administration introduced for the avowed purpose of effectuating the President's recommendation to eliminate the union-busting provisions from the Taft-Hartley Act was loaded down with other provisions, the cumulative effect of which, if enacted, would have been to jeopardize and threaten the interests of organized working men and women to an even greater extent than those provisions in the present law. That tactic was designed to assure that just what did happen would happen, namely, that the bill would be recommitted by "a solid, defectionless, party-line vote of the Democratic Members of the Senate." The purpose of the maneuver was obvious then as it is obvious now. The Democrats in the Senate could be blamed, as the report now seeks to place blame upon them, for frustrating the President's recommendation to remove union-busting provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, and the administration could be praised for attempting to keep its promise to remove these provisions. The American people, it was hoped, could be misled into believing that the administration was not hostile to organized labor.

The report is correct in saying that the "question * * * concerns the attitude of the Eisenhower administration." But the record shows that the guise in which the administration would like to appear to the public is a disguise. The administration's real attitude is shown by its failure to have submitted a simple bill to eliminate the provisions which the Republicans, for public consumption, admit are union busting. Such a bill could have been enacted into law if the President would work for Republican votes to add to the majority of Democratic votes in favor of such a measure.

But the hypocrisy stands most clearly revealed, as I demonstrated in my speech, by what the Republicans have done to the National Labor Relations Act through administration. Taft-Hartley, as every Senator who was a Member of this body when it was debated and passed will recall, was enacted only after many retreats and compromises by the rightwing proponents of straitjacketing labor unions. As a result, the act did not go as far in an antilabor direction as the NAM and other reactionary employer groups wanted to go. Almost from the beginning, these groups clamored to accomplish through administration what they had been unable to accomplish in the 80th Congress through legislation. Robert N. Denham, the Republican General Counsel of the Board, constantly attacked the Board for failing to construe the act as if the Hartley bill, rather than the conference bill, had been enacted. To coerce the Board to amend the statute under the guise of construction was the object of the investigation of the Board proposed in 1949.

Of course, many Senators, I among them, opposed this blatant attempt to destroy the Board's integrity; to dictate to the Board the manner in which the Board should exercise its discretion in these areas in which the act vests it with discretion; to compel the Board members, for fear of incurring the displeasure of powerful congressional groups, to construe the statute not judicially, but so as to favor employer interests hostile to labor unions. Investigation of the Board in 1949 was not defeated because Senators deemed it beyond the realm of possibility that an administrative agency could deliberately subvert the legislative process by embarking on a large-scale program of amending the statute under the guise of interpretation. Nor was it defeated on the ground that if such a development occurred Congress should close its eyes and do nothing about it.

Investigation was defeated because a majority of the committee recognized that the charges of misconstruction of the statute which had been leveled at the Board had no more substance than the soup of which Lincoln spoke as having been concocted from the shadow of a chicken that had starved to death. Investigation was defeated because a majority realized that it was not the Board's interpretation, but the interpretations which the proponents of the investigation would have foisted upon the Board that would have perverted the statute and defeated Congress' purposes. It was defeated because a majority, including myself, saw that a congressional investigation under these circumstances, and for these purposes, could serve only to intimidate and destroy a sound administration, and could not possibly serve to protect the integrity of the legislative process from administrative abuse. I am proud of having played a part in safeguarding quasi-judicial administration from such a wholly unwarranted attack.

What happened then? The same powerful employer groups and their reactionary allies, among them Joseph C. Wells, Denham's former Associate General Counsel, who has represented employers exclusively in labor relations matters since leaving his office, and whom the report characterizes as a "highly qualified observer," kept up a constant drumfire of criticism of the Board for refusing to transform the statute into the more intensely antilabor weapon which they had tried so hard, but failed, to forge. But, I hastened to add, even they suggested no such sweeping, revolutionary, wholesale change in interpretation as the Eisenhower appointees later accomplished.

The crucial test came when the Republican administration took office early in 1953. At that time the Board was composed of members appointed by the Truman administration, and the General Counsel was a Truman appointee. The most significant rulings of the Board interpreting the provisions which had been added by the Taft-Hartley Act and the changes which Taft-Hartley made in the Wagner Act provisions had met and withstood the challenge of court review. They were firmly embedded in the law. The terms of most of the Board members and the General Counsel would not expire for a considerable period. There was little prospect that, on the merits, any of the rulings of which the reactionary employer groups complained would be altered or reversed by the Board.

What did the administration do? Did it publicly adopt the position of the NAM that Taft-Hartley had been misconstrued by the Board; that it should be interpreted without reference to its language, legislative history, and the objectives of Congress, but only with reference to the result which would bear most strongly against unions? Did it ask Congress to amend the statute to reverse the Board's interpretations which the courts had approved? It did not. And the reason is plain. To have done that, openly and forthrightly, would have sacrificed the political advantage which the administration hoped to retain by masquerading as a friend of labor organizations. Moreover, that plan would never have succeeded. Congress would not have enacted a proposal to amend the Taft-Hartley Act to make it even more antilabor.

The administration chose another course, a course which would give its reactionary employer groups what they wanted, but, at the same time, so obscure the development from the American people that the administration could continue to pose as pro, or at least not anti, labor.

The administration waited until vacancies occurred among the Board's membership and in the Office of the General Counsel and then appointed to these posts, one by one, handpicked exponents of the reactionary employer philosophy, men who could be trusted to write their antilabor prejudices into the law.

I charged that, as part of the administration's actual program to transform the Taft-Hartley Act into a more vicious antilabor instrument, the Eisenhower appointees embarked on a program of wholesale reversals of statutory interpretations which were well established and in many instances court approved; that in every instance in which these members had a real choice between following precedent or discarding it and chose to reverse, the reversal hurt labor and benefited antiunion employers; I proved that in many of these instances the antiunion decision of the Eisenhower Board was irreconcilable with the language and legislative history of the act and that, in so changing the law, these Board members had forsaken their proper quasi-judicial role and usurped the function of Congress. I charged that the Republican appointees had ruthlessly forced out from subordinate positions in Washington and in the field offices men who had devoted virtually their entire careers to the Board's service and who were uniquely qualified by their knowledge, background, and experience to administer the law effectively and impartially as Congress wrote it. I charged that the Republican appointees replaced these men with others whose sole qualification lay in their dedication to the reactionary employer antilabor philosophy of the NAM; that each and every appointee had a promanagement background, and that many did not even possess the requisite experience to qualify for the jobs to which they were appointed under civil-service standards. I charged that the purpose of these appointments was to assure that the law would be administered in the field, in the thousands of cases which never reach formal decision by the Board, not impartially, but with bias and prejudice in favor of employers and against labor unions.

I pointed out in my speech that the consequences of this usurpation of legislative power by the Board, the consequences of this biased and prejudiced administration of an already biased act, have done immense harm to organized and unorganized workers alike. Men and women who sought to improve their lives and living conditions by joining unions have been fired from their jobs and been denied redress. Strikes which would have been won if the law had been fairly applied have been lost. Peaceful picketing, the only effective weapon workingmen have to publicize their grievances, has been illegally enjoined, and the cause of the workers has been doomed. Everywhere, and particularly in the South, the Board has made it more difficult for employees to organize and for unions to help them do it. And the Board is assisting in the perpetuation of the discriminatory wage structure by which one section of the country lures away the industries of another.

These are the charges. What have we been offered in refutation?

II. PERSONNEL

The report states that I gave "the impression that the Labor Board has been under Republican control from the moment the present administration took office in January 1953." The learned Senators who directed that the report be prepared, to say nothing of those who prepared it, may have neglected to read my speech. For in it I said: "By March 1954 the present administration had succeeded in placing a majority of its political appointees on the Board. On March 29, 1955, General Counsel Kammholz took office."

The report alleges that many of my "charges concern events and proceedings which arose prior to the date when it could accurately be said that Republicans held an actual majority of the controlling positions on the Labor Board." The only basis for this assertion is the allegation that the first appointee of President Eisenhower, Mr. Guy Farmer, as Chairman of the Board, was not a Republican. Therefore, it is now argued, the administration may not be held responsible for decisions made by the Board while Farmer was one of the Republican-appointed majority. Under any circumstances it would be absurd for an administration to disclaim responsibility for the actions of its own appointee. In this instance, however, the absurdity is heightened by the fact that the attempt rests entirely on a flimsy technicality. If, as the report claims, Farmer was not a registered Republican at the time he was appointed, it may have been because he was a resident of the District of Columbia and therefore not registered at all. The entire country was aware that he was a strong Eisenhower supporter and in his public speeches Farmer made it plain that he was appointed to bring the Eisenhower philosophy to the administration of the Taft-Hartley Act. See Business Week, July 25, 1953, page 53. The claim of the report that the Republicans did not actually control a majority of positions on the Board as long as Farmer held office is, in fact, refuted by Chairman Leedom's own letter. He says: "The Eisenhower majority dates from March 1954 when Mr. Albert Beeson * * * took office."

Of even greater significance, however, is the fact that except for this frivolous attempt to disclaim responsibility for Farmer, the report does not even challenge my basic assertion that every appointee of this administration to a Board membership and as General Counsel was marked at the time of his appointment as a faithful follower of the proemployer, antilabor line. That charge, proved by the record, now stands admitted.

When we turn to the subordinate positions, we find again an attempt to evade the basic issue by resort to misleading technicalities. The report states that "contrary to the contentions of the Senator from Oregon there were no discharges of career civil-service employees." That assertion contains two patent fallacies. The first is that employees who are threatened with demotion, transfer to lower ranking or undesirable positions, or invited to stay on only until they obtain jobs elsewhere, and who in consequence resign, have not been "discharged." The Board, at least, should know better. Long ago, the Board and the courts discovered that these were favorite tactics of employers who sought on the one hand to rid themselves of union adherents and on the other to escape retribution for doing so by pretending that the employees had not been discharged but had merely resigned. The Board and the courts were not fooled. Resignations so induced they held to be "constructive discharges." See, e. g., East Texas Motor Freight Lines (47 NLRB 1023, 1029, affirmed, 140 F. 2d 404 (CA5)); Marathon Electric Mfg. Corp. (106 NLRB 1171, 1173, 1175, 1199); Bausch & Lomb Optical Co. (107 NLRB 790, affirmed, 217 F. 2d 575 (CA2)). The report does not even purport to deny that these intimidating tactics—the slightly more subtle but otherwise precise equivalent of outright discharge—were used to get rid of able, highly trained employees who had devoted many years to the Board's service and whose only fault lay in their devotion to impartial administration of the statute.

Chairman Leedom's assertion that there have been only six "involuntary terminations in the entire agency" during the Eisenhower Board's administration is based on the same fallacy. The number of separations which are carried on the Board's personnel records as "involuntary terminations" proves nothing, of course, as to the number of professional career employees who resigned because they were faced with either involuntary termination, demotion or degrading transfer. As any experienced administrator knows, a long-time career employee who is told he is to be discharged, or demoted, will, if he possibly can, resign to protect his employment record.

The purpose of thus ignoring the constructive discharges is, of course, to evade the contrast between the record of the Board under prior administrations, in which employees were selected on the basis of merit and experience, without regard to political considerations, and the record of wholesale removal of competent, experienced, career people by the Eisenhower Board. I charged that the Eisenhower Board had removed many competent, qualified, efficient, and nonpolitical employees of the agency for the purpose of facilitating their distortion of the legislative scheme. Not a scintilla of evidence has been offered to rebut that charge. On the record it stands admitted.

The second fallacy is that considerations of experience, merit, and ability should control personnel policy with respect to the NLRB's professional staff only for career civil-service employees and that employees who obtained their positions on merit, who devoted a lifetime to Board service, and who performed their technical duties efficiently and well are not to be considered in that category unless they have competitive civil service or veteran's status. But, as I pointed out in my speech, the professional staff of the Board, whether it has technical civil-service status or not, cannot be treated as fair game even for the spoils system, for its function is to do impartial justice under the law. That they cannot do if their security hangs on political considerations rather than the merits of their performance. More shocking still is the decimation of that staff for the purpose of replacing it with partisans in a field where impartiality between the opposing forces is the sine qua non of fair administration. Not only is there no denial that this is just what the Eisenhower appointees have done; the report blatantly admits it. No contention is made that the removal of Murdock and Feldesman was even remotely related to any consideration of merit; the only defense is that both were permitted to stay on until they had succeeded in securing other desirable employment.

The report claims that "every personnel action taken by the present Board and General Council (sic) was in full compliance with the laws and civil-service regulations." But in the face of the chicanery involved in the shifting of job titles, which I documented in my speech, and the many constructive discharges, both of which the report ignores, the bare undocumented assertion is hardly convincing.

More important, even if civil-service rules and regulations had been followed to the letter, that would be no answer to the basic charge that the persons who were appointed to vacated positions on the professional staff were uniformly inexperienced men of management background, who could be trusted to bring to their jobs an antiunion bias. Neither the report, nor the Leedom, nor the Kammholz letter so much as refers to this charge, which I detailed in my speech, at all. Specifically, neither of the letters refers to the appointments of regional directors in Detroit and St. Louis, or the appointment, as associate general counsel in charge of field operations, of an attorney whose only experience in the labor relations field outside the Board was as an attorney for a division of the United States Steel Corp., and who had less than 4 months with the Board.

Chairman Leedom does say that only 27 new professional people have been hired during this period. It is unclear whether this includes all persons hired both for the Board's staff and for the staff of the General Counsel. If the figure does include both categories, it should be most interesting to obtain a list of the 27 and a statement of their professional backgrounds. If the professional background of each proved to be similar to the backgrounds of those whose appointments were heralded in Board press releases, there would be reason enough to explain the report's silence.

General Counsel Kammholz does say, and correctly, that the regional and subregional offices of the Board "represent the frontline operation of the agency in its contact with the public. In many important respects each regional director functions as an 'alter ego' of the General Counsel."

The importance of this statement is emphasized when the character of the appointments to these offices is examined. In addition to the instances referred to in my speech, there are now additional examples of the kind of qualifications which are apparently established by the Board and the General Counsel for appointments to regional and subregional offices.

A short time ago, the appointment of an officer in charge of the Indianapolis, Ind., field office was announced. The man appointed to this important office had a total of 1 month's experience with the Labor Board. Prior to this month's experience, he had served as Assistant Legislative Counsel in the Office of the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior for a few months and before that he had served a term as attorney general of South Dakota. I know nothing of the background of this man except for these facts. He may be an entirely acceptable individual. But it is clear that his appointment, like so many others, is the appointment of a man with little or no experience in the field of labor relations over the heads of employees of the Board of long standing who have the experience and qualifications necessary for these important offices.

Even more shocking is the recent appointment of a new regional director for the Board's regional office at Los Angeles, Calif. The man appointed to this important post as an alter ego of the General Counsel does have considerable experience in the labor relations field. He has served as industrial security officer for Consolidated Vultee at San Diego and for North American Aviation at Downey, Calif. He also has worked as assistant director of industrial relations for a large steel corporation and as director of industrial relations for the employers' section of the Printing Industries Association in Los Angeles.

How this experience qualifies a man to supervise the frontline operations of the agency in dealing, in an impartial way, with both labor and management is hard to visualize. The enormity of this kind of appointment can be suggested by speculating as to what would happen if the Board announced that it was appointing as its regional director a man whose career, up to the time of his appointment, had consisted entirely of representation of unions in dealing with employers.

There are additional examples. On March 30, 1956, the General Counsel announced his appointment of Harold A. Boire as Assistant General Counsel in charge of the Washington branch of the Division of Operations, and John D. Stringer to be Chief of the Appeals Section. Their experience would qualify neither one of them for even a top rank and file position with the agency if the requirements stated in job descriptions remained the criteria for qualification.

In attempting to defend these personnel actions, Kammholz adopts the by now familiar device of misstating the charge. The offense charged is not "any changes were made at all." The offense is that the changes were made for political and antiunion reasons; that they were demonstrably not made to increase efficiency; and that the manner in which the changes were made and the lack of qualification of the appointees prove it. Obviously, that charge is not answered by Kammholz' bare assertion that in his "judgment" changes were necessary "to strengthen the agency and to improve performance." The word "judgment" is a convenient term under which to hide. But when it appears, as it does here, that the changes cannot strengthen but can only weaken the agency and that the common characteristic of the changes is that they replace experienced and capable men with management oriented novices, the conclusion that the changes were made for the reasons stated in my speech, and not for legitimate administrative reasons, is irresistible.

III. DISCRIMINATORY CASE HANDLING BY THE GENERAL COUNSEL

I charged in my speech that the new General Counsel had adopted a policy of issuing complaints against unions not merely in cases where the law was doubtful and unsettled, but in cases where there were Board and even court decisions, squarely in point, holding the union conduct at issue lawful. I charged also that the General Counsel's agents in the field were utilizing that policy, and the fact that once a complaint issued against a union in a section 8 (b) (4) case an injunction was immediately applied for by the General Counsel and often granted, to coerce unions to desist from peaceful picketing and other conduct which was lawful under the decided cases.

The report, again misstating the charge, attempts to make it appear that I criticized the General Counsel for adopting a policy of proceeding rather than dismissing in doubtful cases. But the validity of that policy, so abstractly stated, was never in issue. Although the report implies the contrary, the policy of proceeding in doubtful cases was not originated by Kammholz but by his predecessors. The difference lies not in the policy but in its application. And one difference is that formerly complaints were issued in doubtful cases against unions and employers alike; under Kammholz, as I proved in my speech, where charges regarded as doubtful are filed against employers, they are dismissed. When similar doubtful charges are filed against unions, a complaint will be issued.

Although Mr. Kammholz in his letter calls the charge "ridiculous and unfounded," nowhere does he deny that he has repeatedly, as a matter of policy, issued complaints against labor organizations when the only conduct alleged to be illegal was, at the time the complaint issued, lawful under controlling Board and court decisions. There was nothing whatever doubtful about the law in these cases. The law was clear. The only reason for so proceeding was the fact that the General Counsel did not like the law as it then stood; he wanted the Eisenhower Board to change it. Far from being a proper exercise of the General Counsel's powers, that is part of the very program of amending the act under the guise of reinterpretation of which the Republican administration stands accused.

What makes the bias and prejudice even more apparent is the fact that not one case is called to our attention, by the report or by Kammholz, in which a complaint was issued against an employer under similar circumstances, that is, where an applicable outstanding Board decision held the conduct with which the employer was charged legal.

That documented charge of disparate and discriminatory treatment of unions and employers in the issuance of complaints is obviously not met by the report's technique of creating a straw man—a fictitious accusation that a policy of issuing complaints in doubtful cases against both sides is bad—and then knocking it down. Resort to that technique is itself further evidence that the charge which I actually made is valid and irrefutable.

In my speech I also documented the charge that the General Counsel and his staff had engaged in gross discrimination against employees and labor organizations in case handling both in the field and in Washington. The report refers to Kammholz' letter for the "detailed answer to these charges." For complete understanding of these so-called answers, which I discuss below, they should be read in conjunction with the initial discussion of these cases in my speech.

A. Case No. K–42, administrative decision of the General Counsel

Kammholz devotes much of his letter to detailing issues in this case which have no relevance whatever to the charge made, namely, that the General Counsel refused to issue a complaint even though five employees testified without contradiction to conduct by the employer which, if it occurred, was unquestionably sufficient, in and of itself, to justify the issuance of a complaint. Kammholz does not deny that the only contradiction of the employees' testimony was contained in an affidavit from the employer's attorney who was not a witness to the events; nor does he deny that the General Counsel resolved the factual issue against the employees merely on the basis of the attorney's affidavit. He could not do so, for those facts are clearly stated in his own account of the administrative decision. Nothing in the remainder of the intricate situation presented in that case could possibly justify such an unfair and unwarranted resolution of that factual question. In this case Kammholz insists that it is the General Counsel's duty to weigh conflicting evidence in light of all the facts. Yet in the Banta Towing case, to which I next turn, the examiner's report clearly reveals that Mr. Kammholz's investigation must have concerned itself only with those facts which had been supplied to the regional office by the employer, and must have ignored completely all of the actual facts of the case, as witnessed by the employees involved, as well as by the union representatives who were assaulted and shot at.

B. Banta Towing Co.

General Counsel Kammholz says that the regional office's investigation of this case revealed that the captain was held a prisoner in his galley and was forced to barricade himself in the pilothouse by union representatives; that the captain was "intimidated and stripped of his authority." If that is in fact what the field investigation revealed, the investigation must have been even more one-sided and prejudiced than Regional Director Kennedy's decision to issue a complaint against the union and to dismiss the charge against the company. For the statements of the employees who were present, as well as of the union representatives, show that it was the captain involved who instigated the violence by assaulting one of the union representatives with a flashlight; that it was the captain who threatened to get a shotgun from the pilothouse and "shoot the whole shebang"; that the captain was acting like a "wildman" and going "berserk"; that the captain "had a propensity for the use of such dangerous weapons as flashlights, meat cleavers, 15-inch butcher knives, toothpicks, or in other words any weapon he could get his hands on" and that, as the trial examiner found, the only interference by union representatives with the captain's freedom of movement which occurred was dictated by the immediate necessity of protecting themselves against the threats of bodily harm which the captain not merely voiced but repeatedly attempted to and later did effectuate. The fourth paragraph in Mr. Kammholz' treatment of the Banta case warrants close comparison with the facts as set out in my speech and with the evidence as detailed in the trial examiner's report. It is significant that Kammholz does not even suggest that the field examination revealed that the company had transported, in violation of Federal law, armed strikebreakers for the express purpose of shooting the pickets off the barges and that the pickets had come armed with toothpicks because they had been warned that the company would use firearms and other weapons to crush them. Revealing of Mr. Kammholz' own state of mind is his innocuous description of the barrage ordered by Captain Burt: "Some shots were fired from the towboat, with the result that the young union representative was wounded in the arm." One would never know from reading that statement that Captain Burt had deliberately ordered a fusillade of shots fired; that he had deliberately selected this particular union representative as the target at whom fire was to be directed; and that the violence which ensued then and earlier was, as the trial examiner expressly found, the result of the company's plan and design, all motivated by Captain J. W.'s statement, made before any union representative ever came on board any boat, and not denied, that he did not want any "damn union on his boats."

Kammholz' attempt to explain away the regional office's failure to issue a complaint against the company in this case by referring to "limited and peculiar circumstances" answers nothing. The only thing peculiar and unusual about these circumstances is that not since 1938 has an equally flagrant case of the use of weapons of warfare by an employer to throttle and defeat self-organization been spread upon the records of the Board. The viciousness of the unfair labor practices committed here by the company demanded immediate and effective correction through the Board's processes, not excuses by the Regional Director.

Equally unconvincing is Kammholz' attempt to defend issuance of the complaint against the union on the theory that by using force against the property of the company and the person of the captain, it allegedly interfered with the self-organizational rights of the employees. As the trial examiner pointed out, the employees involved were all members of the union before any acts of violence occurred. It was totally and utterly unnecessary for the union to use any violence whatever to induce them to join or to remain members. The entire crew voluntarily went on strike in protest against the company's refusal to deal with their duly chosen bargaining representative. On what conceivable theory could any acts of aggression which the union directed to the company's property have been designed to coerce these employees into doing something which the evidence shows they did entirely voluntarily? Moreover, the result of any investigation should have revealed even to Mr. Kennedy that the only violence which the union directed against the company or its property was designed entirely as a self-defense measure by the individuals involved who were under constant threat of bodily harm from the captain. On what conceivable theory can measures taken in self-defense be equated with unlawful aggression? And is it not startling that in a case where the complaint was issued ostensibly to protect the right of employees, not one single employee should be called by the General Counsel to support it? The reason is, as the trial examiner observed, that the Regional Director issued a complaint against the union in this case not to protect the rights of any employees, but entirely to serve the company's twofold purpose: (1) to deprive its employees of the rights guaranteed to them by section 7 of the act, and (2) "to protect its property in the pursuit of its business" against the economic consequences which the company feared would follow from unionization. The trial examiner observed that "Board process is available for neither of these purposes." Indeed, to use Board process as Kennedy did, for these purposes, is to subvert not only the processes of the Board but the act itself.

C. Coca-Cola

In his discussion of this case, as elsewhere, Kammholz seeks to evade the charge made by discussing different and unrelated matters. A large part of his discussion is devoted to the section 8 (b) (1) (A) and 8 (b) (4) (A) cases against the teamsters which are totally irrelevant to the 8 (b) (4) (C) case which I discussed in my speech. The attempt to drag in the other cases is only designed to create an aura of prejudice against local No. 688 and to prevent consideration on the merits of the Regional Director's malfeasance in issuing a complaint against local No. 688 under section 8 (b) (4) (C).

Kammholz devotes but a paragraph to his discussion of the facts of the section 8 (b) (4) (C) case. First he says that the association was not defunct or dissolved when the strike began on November 9. The only basis for this assertion, however, is the trial examiner's statement that the proceedings in which the association was actually dissolved "were highly irregular and, if the trial examiner were called upon to decide, illegal." But the question at issue is not whether the proceedings, attended by 185 out of 196 association members, all of whom voted to disband the association (R. 189), were irregular or illegal; the issue is whether their action left the association a functioning labor organization. The record shows that after the meeting not one employee claimed to be a member of the association or desired to participate in it (R. 227). Judge Moore held that it was not, and the trial examiner could not even infer to the contrary, since there is not a shred of evidence that the association did or could have functioned after the dissolution meeting. It had no members, no supporters, no flesh, no blood. Indeed, as the attorney for the association told the Board, the association did not even want to appear on the ballot in an election that might be ordered. It did not have even a potential future existence.

Moreover, Kammholz ignores entirely the fact that before local No. 688 struck the contract between Coca-Cola and the association had expired; that, admittedly, there was at that time an existing question concerning representation; and that the company was not in fact bargaining with the association and was under no legal obligation of any kind to do so.

These facts were plainly stated in my speech to be the reasons for my conclusion that the Regional Director acted arbitrarily, unlawfully, and contrary to the terms and policy of the act and of the legislative history in issuing an 8 (b) (4) (C) complaint in this case. Mr. Kammholz now answers that the Board in Lewis Food Company (115 NLRB No. 136), decided March 22, 1956, held that an outstanding certification may support a finding that a rival union's strike for recognition violates section 8 (b) (4) (C), even though the certification is more than 1 year old. But Mr. Kammholz neglects to state that the Board's decision in the Lewis case shows on its face that the only basis for the majority's conclusion was that the certified union had a contract with the employer which was still in effect at the time the rival union struck and that, according to the Board, the employer was under a legal obligation to continue to recognize the incumbent contracting union pursuant to that contract until it expired. That decision may be right or wrong, but certainly it has nothing to do with the Coca-Cola case, where the contract between the company and the association had expired a week before local 688 called its strike.

D. Missouri Transit Co.

Kammholz attempts to explain away the delay in issuance of a complaint against the employer in this case on the ground that during the first 4 months after the complaint was filed his predecessor was in office and that a 3-month period elapsed thereafter before he was appointed. He implies that the case was thereafter expeditiously handled, that additional investigation was required and that after that investigation was completed the complaint promptly issued. But no amount of explanation can justify the delay between March 29, 1955, and December 23, 1955, when the complaint was actually issued, a period of 9 months from the time General Counsel Kammholz took office. No matter how complex the legal and factual issues, it should not take 9 months to decide that there is sufficient evidence to warrant issuance of a complaint, particularly where the violations are as flagrant as they were in that case. Comparison of the speed with which complaints are issued against unions in cases where the legal and factual issues are equally complex would show that during General Counsel Kammholz' tenure the lapse between filing a charge and issuance of complaint against a union has generally been countable in weeks, not months.

E. Volney Felt Mills, division of Lloyd A. Fry Roofing Co.

I charged in my speech that a Board field examiner had induced the union to withdraw its lawful picket line by threatening to issue a complaint and to obtain an injunction against the union on the employer's charges. Kammholz replies that I received "jumbled and inaccurate report" and that the field examiner did not suggest that the union should withdraw its picket line. But Kammholz does not deny that the field examiner predicted that a complaint would issue and an injunction be applied for against the union on the employer's charges, even though the union's picketing was lawful under the Board precedents as they then stood. He does not deny that the field examiner pointed out that only if the employer withdrew his charges could the union avoid subjecting itself to the burdensome litigation and heavy costs which issuance of a complaint against it would entail. And he does not deny that the employer would withdraw the charge only if the union agreed to cease its lawful picketing. These are the facts as testified to by Mr. William Englander, counsel for the union, who personally participated in the case. His affidavit is attached hereto as exhibit A. Mr. Kammholz' vague generalities—the "conversation covered a wide range of discussion concerning various Board and court precedents"—cannot obscure the fact that by threatening to undertake proceedings against the union, the Board succeeded when the employer had failed in forcing the union to desist from a lawful course of conduct.

F. United Steel Workers of America, CIO (Metal Fabricators and Finishers, Inc.)

I charged in my speech that the handling of this case by the regional office was an example of sheer harassment and vindictiveness toward unions. Kammholz does not deny that the facts are as I stated them, except in one particular. He says that the union "had persistently declined to enter into a formal settlement agreement * * * and reiterated its refusal to do so before the trial examiner at the hearing." This is incorrect. The union was willing to agree to a Board order against it. Indeed, it did not defend in the formal proceeeding before the trial examiner and it did not file any objection to his intermediate report or to the proposed Board order which he recommended.

There is another inaccuracy in Mr. Kammholz' reply. He attempts to justify the Regional Director's filing of exceptions to the trial examiner's report as an effort to preclude the establishment of erroneous legal precedents. The filing of exceptions here cannot be explained on any such basis. The trial examiner did not hold in that case that any of the conduct of the union which had been charged to violate the act did not constitute a violation. He merely refused to pass on some of it on the ground that the evidence was cumulative. Certainly, as the Board later confirmed by adopting his report, that disposition could not conceivably have been thought to establish any erroneous legal precedent. The filing of exceptions by the regional office accomplished nothing but what I charged in my speech it accomplished, namely, harassment of the union.

But even if Mr. Kammholz were right instead of wrong on both counts, his replies would not touch the heart of the matter. The plain and uncontroverted fact is that the local organization in that case had ceased to exist. The strike was lost, all of the strikers had lost their jobs, and the union agreed not to attempt in any way to represent the employees during the rest of the certification year. The employer was satisfied. The employee who had filed the charges was satisfied. Everyone was satisfied except the Regional Director, who insisted on using the limited available Board personnel to beat a dead horse.

General Counsel Kammholz attempts to justify this by citing a case from the same regional office involving violence by an employer in which a formal settlement was insisted upon. But even if it is assumed that in that case the charging parties desired to withdraw their charges and the union was satisfied with an informal settlement, still the cases are not at all parallel. The essence of the complaint against the Regional Director in the Metal Fabricators case is that he insisted in going ahead with a proceeding which would lead only to a formal order directing the union not to coerce the employees of this particular company, when the union not only agreed that it would no longer engage in such illegal activities, but also had agreed that it would not represent the employees at all, and, hence, would have no relationships either with the employees or the employer which would give the Board's order any meaning. The General Counsel's action in insisting on proceeding against the union under those circumstances would be paralleled in a case in which he insisted on proceeding against the company even though the company had gone out of business. If General Counsel Kammholz can find a case in which an employer has ceased business entirely and agreed that he will not go back into business for at least a year and in which his Regional Director has nevertheless insisted on continuing a formal proceeding against the employer, even though the employer has also agreed to post notices or take any action requested, then he can say that the Metal Fabricators case does not show vindictiveness and harassment of unions.

The report criticizes me for suggesting that the many instances of unfairness in case handling which I documented in my speech are only illustrative and that there may be many, many others which only an investigation could uncover. The criticism implies that I have been able to review all of the cases which have been handled by the General Counsel administratively in Washington, and all of the cases which were handled in the regional offices, and that unfairness was found only in the cases which I discussed. That is not true, as I specifically stated in my speech. No single Senator, indeed, no one man, could conduct a complete investigation of the National Labor Relations Board. Indeed, it would be impossible to conduct an adequate investigation of the General Counsel's office at all without subpena powers which were not available to me, for, as I stated in my speech, the facts are buried in the secret files of the General Counsel and the regional offices. The cases I discussed were only those which were brought to my attention, fortunately, by parties who chose to seek redress in this manner. That there were enough instances to reveal a pattern of bias and prejudice in favor of management and against unions suffices alone to prove that they cannot be the only ones who have well-founded grievances. Obviously only an investigation can bring them all to light.

Before leaving the subject of the General Counsel's administration of his office mention should be made of Mr. Kammholz' denial of my charge that he has spent an excessive amount of time away from his desk. Mr. Kammholz says that the report that he spends less than 50 percent of his time at his desk is grossly exaggerated, but he does not make any effort to tell us just how much time he has spent at his desk since taking office. These are facts peculiarly within Mr. Kammholz' knowledge, and the facts, if he supplied them, would be far more persuasive, one way or the other, than his conclusionary assertion. We may infer, I think, from Mr. Kammholz' failure to supply this evidence, that the facts would support, not refute, my position. Second, Mr. Kammholz suggests that it is part of his business to visit each one of the Board's 21 regional offices and spend time there getting to know firsthand something about these offices and the people who run them. We need not quarrel with this as a legitimate view of one aspect of the General Counsel's functions, but the question remains whether one who is appointed to a job as important as General Counsel of the Board at a time when that position had been vacant for 3 months and when the backlog of decisions which only the General Counsel is authorized by law to make had inevitably grown to overwhelming proportions, could afford to indulge in the luxury of such field trips before disposing of the backlog.

Far from being disposed of, shortly after Mr. Kammholz' appointment, the backlog of cases in the Appeals Section—cases in which unions, principally, appealed from refusals by Regional Directors to issue complaints on charges which they filed against employers—grew progressively larger. I am advised that by April 1956, over 100 such cases were pending and awaiting adjudication by the General Counsel. One may well ask whether the General Counsel's gathering of first-hand knowledge of the personnel of the regional offices, information which is hardly indispensable to the proper performance of his statutory task, may be regarded as taking precedence over performance of his statutory duty to determine expeditiously whether or not complaints should issue on charges which have been filed with the Board.

But this entire defense, again, misses the point. I did not charge Mr. Kammholz with dereliction of duty because he visited some or many of the Board's field offices in an effort to acquaint himself with the personnel and operations. I charged that he was abusing his office by spending an inordinate amount of time in traveling for the purpose of speech making to employer groups. Ignoring the fact that his audiences have not been the public, for whose benefit the statute was enacted, but a small segment of that public, namely, some employers, Mr. Kammholz' only answer is that he considers it part of the General Counsel's job to spend "some time and effort in acquainting the public * * * with the general operation of the agency." I suggest that Kammholz would do well to read the statute again, and particularly section 3 (d), which establishes and defines the duties of the office of General Counsel of the Board. If Congress vested the General Counsel with the duty of acting as a public information officer, I have yet to discover the language in the act by which it did so. The Board has a division of information and it has been my impression that such information concerning the agency as the public requires could be and should be supplied by it.

IV. AMENDMENT OF THE STATUTE BY DECISIONS OF THE EISENHOWER BOARD

I charged in my speech that the Eisenhower Board, while ostensibly exercising quasi-judicial power, is actually legislating. The charge is that the Eisenhower appointees regard it as their mission to overhaul the interpretations of the act which had been made by the Board since 1947. I charged that the Eisenhower Board members are actuated in making these changes in law and policy by bias and prejudice against labor organizations and in favor of management. I documented my charges by showing that in 32 major[1] precedent-setting cases, the Eisenhower Board made major changes in statutory interpretation or administrative policy, which, I showed, could not be justified by the language, the legislative history, or the objectives of the statute. And I demonstrated that in each case the change operated to the disadvantage of labor unions and to the advantage of antilabor employers.

These charges have been further validated, since my speech was made, by decisions of the courts which have reviewed the Board's decisions in the cases I discussed. In my speech, I treated at length the Board's decision in the BVD case, pointing out the disastrous impact upon the statutory rights of employees which would result from the rule of law which the Eisenhower Board innovated in that case. On May 3, 1956, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia reversed the Board, for reasons virtually identical with those which I cited. Ladies Garment Workers Union v. NLRB (38 LRRM 2061). In my speech, I attacked as unconscionable the Board's refusal in the Modern Linen case, by resorting to its restrictive jurisdictional policy standards, to protect against reprisal an employee who had been discharged for testifying under subpena at a prior Board proceeding. On June 7, 1956, the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit reversed the Board's decision, finding that the Board had acted "arbitrarily and capriciously" and that its result was "unjust and intolerable." Pedersen v. NLRB (30 CCH Labor Cases 70025).

Subsequent to my speech, the Supreme Court acted on the remaining cases in which the Board had asked the Court to review the decisions of the courts of appeals condemning the Board's attempt to expand the prohibitory sweep of the secondary boycott provisions of the act. As in the Board's earlier petitions which I cited, the Supreme Court denied review. NLRB v. Sales Drivers and NLRB v. Business Machines, etc. (certiorari denied, June 4, 1956).[2]

It is of the utmost significance that although the report was issued after these judicial developments, which so clearly confirm my charges, had occurred, the report is completely silent about them.

That silence is characteristic of all of the replies, in that none go to the meat of the issue.

My charges could be refuted only by demonstrating that the decisional and policy changes which I attacked are rooted in the language and policy of the statute, not merely in the personal prejudices and economic and political predilections of the new appointees. This the replies fail to do.

A. Evasion of the charge—the numbers game

The report says that Chairman Leedom's letter to Senator HILL contains the "detailed answer to these charges." But the plain fact is that the letter contains not the semblance of an answer in these terms. Instead of discussing the cases, Leedom attempts only to minimize their impact and importance. This he does by resorting to a peculiar kind of numbers game. This is the way the game is played.

First, Chairman Leedom counts the number of leading cases discussed in my speech. Then he excludes from them all cases in which one or more of the two remaining Truman appointees on the Board concurred. This leaves only nine cases. Then he says that the Board, in this period, decided almost 5,000 cases of all sorts. And then he concludes that the area of "purposeful distortion" (Leedom's words) covers only two-tenths of 1 percent of the whole area of Board decision.

The fallacies of this numbers game are apparent to every informed observer of this field. Indeed, they have already been exposed by at least one such observer. On April 17, 1956, Bernard Dunau, formerly an attorney on the litigation staff of the Board, and now in private practice in Washington, addressed a letter to the New York Times in which he revealed the Leedom reply as a complete sham. I quote his letter in full:

"In a speech before the Senate on March 23, 1956, Senator WAYNE MORSE accused the

[1] Chairman Leedom did discover one obvious mechanical error in my speech; but the use he made of it is characteristic of his entire reply. In discussing the Board's extension of its preexisting jurisdictional policies to reject cases involving industrial properties, I inadvertently included the citation of the New York Stock Exchange case (decided in 1944, 58 NLRB 911). Mr. Leedom says that I used this case to prove that the Eisenhower Board had distorted the law. My attack was based on the action of the Eisenhower Board in the East Newark Realty Corp. case and the McKinney Avenue Realty Co. case. The text of the speech does not refer to or discuss the New York Stock Exchange case but only the extension of the rule which was accomplished by the Eisenhower Board. Aside from the date of the New York Stock Exchange decision, any intelligent reading of my speech could not possibly have failed to reveal that I was not using that case to attack the new Board, because in the New York Stock Exchange case, the old Board asserted jurisdiction over the office building operator. In their dissenting opinions in the East Newark case, Members Murdock and Peterson refer to New York Stock Exchange as a case which provides a "graphic illustration of the absurdity" of the new majority's "office building standard." Leedom's reply is a facetious attempt to discredit the charge actually made by drawing from a mere mechanical error a patently false inference.

[2] In fairness it should be noted that the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia has upheld the Board in one of the cases I criticized. Amalgamated Meat Cutters v. NLRB and Swift & Co. (decided June 22, 1956, 38 LRRM 2289); petition for rehearing has been filed and is now pending.

National Labor Relations Board, as reconstituted and dominated by a majority appointed by the Republican administration, of anti-union bias in its decisions. Three weeks later, in a letter to Senator LISTER HILL, chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, NLRB Chairman Boyd Leedom sought to answer this charge by arguing in part that, of the cases criticized by Senator MORSE, 'only nine represent a strict division between Eisenhower and Truman appointees. These 9 comprise less than two-tenths of 1 percent of the whole body of 4,615 decisions in contested cases rendered during a period that approximates that of the Eisenhower majority, fiscal years 1954, 1955 and the first of 1956. Admittedly, two-tenths of 1 percent is a rather small area for purposeful distortion of congressional intent.'

"This attempt at statistical refutation echoes previous efforts of the Eisenhower appointees to the NLRB to find refuge in numbers. In the Georgetown Law Journal for March 1955, Guy Farmer, former NLRB Chairman, wrote that 'The Board has been unanimous in about 95 percent of its cases.' In a speech made on October 19, 1955, Philip Ray Rodgers, NLRB member and then its acting chairman, stated that of the total contested cases '94 percent * * * have been decided by a unanimous vote of the Board,' and in less than 1 percent 'has the vote of the Board been divided along so-called political or philosophical lines.'

"There is a surface plausibility in the argument but its fallacy is easily exposed. It ignores important quantitative and qualitative distinctions which, when taken into account, materially change the picture.

"1. First of all, the basis for comparison which the Eisenhower appointees take is all contested cases without differentiation as to type, difficulty, or problem. This is like attempting to show that the percentage of deaths from cancer despite surgery is small by including among the survivors those patients who were operated upon for appendicitis.

"For example, the cases decided by the Board may be divided into unfair labor practice cases and representation cases. Representation cases, which are by far the most numerous, present primarily two main questions: (1) whether the time is appropriate for conducting an election to determine whether or not a majority of employees desire to be represented by a union, and (2) what classes of employees should be grouped together in a single unit for the purpose of collective bargaining. The kind of specific issue which is likely to arise in a representation case is not unfairly illustrated by the earth-shaking question whether a receiving clerk is appropriately included in a unit of warehouse employees and truckdrivers. Yet the Eisenhower appointees include this sort of case as part of their showing that significant unanimity of opinion exists among all NLRB members.

"The distortion which results from this indiscriminate lumping together is patent. In the fiscal year 1954, the NLRB decided 1,837 contested representation cases and 258 contested unfair labor practice cases. To show unanimity of opinion the Eisenhower appointees would include all 2,095 cases in their basis of comparison. Yet in all likelihood 90 percent of the representation cases, about 1,653, presented no issues capable of provoking a significant difference of opinion. When these 1,653 cases are culled out, 184 contested representation cases are left which might conceivably be included in the basis of comparison, a very different thing.

"2. To arrive at a valid basis for comparison it is accordingly necessary to evaluate the cases and to eliminate those which do not present division-provoking questions. But that is not the whole story even quantitatively.

"The Board members ordinarily (and quite properly) follow the practice that, once a majority has decided an issue, those in dissent thereafter follow the ruling, at least until a new majority can be mustered to overturn it. For example, after an Eisenhower-appointed majority of three decided not to assert jurisdiction over a radio station with less than an annual gross income of $200,000, any subsequent case involving this issue would be decided unanimously. But the unanimity flows, not from agreement upon the jurisdictional policy, but from the practice of adhering to a previous determination of the issue. Yet the Eisenhower appointees include in their basis of comparison all such cases as among those in which there is no 3–2 division along political lines.

"3. The fundamental fallacy in the statistical justification advanced by the Eisenhower appointees is, however, not quantitative. It is qualitative. A half-dozen rulings on subjects of pivotal importance can change the character of the regulatory scheme even as a hundred others are left undisturbed. It takes only one bullet to kill or maim.

"Furthermore, the influence of pivotal rulings is not confined to the subjects to which immediately addressed. They set a tone which subtly, but inevitably and significantly, guides the host of NLRB employees, investigator, attorney and trail examiner, in the everyday performance of the agency's work. Investigative zeal is dulled, or its direction changed, as the mood of the agency heads is gauged. These consequences may not be capable of statistical demonstration, but they nonetheless exist, as everyone familiar with institutional activity knows.

"Even among the agency heads themselves a like influence exists. There is a limit to effective dissent. There is also the need to get along which not infrequently will silence a dissenter. These intangible pressures bring about concurrence in decisions which in a different climate of opinion would not command assent. And the climate of opinion is of course formed by the Eisenhower majority which dominates the NLRB.

"It is apparent, therefore, that the statistics vouchsafed us by the Eisenhower appointees cannot truly tell us what they have wrought. Guy Farmer, the first of the Eisenhower-appointed NLRB Chairmen, in an address to the Industrial Relations Institute of the University of Wisconsin on July 20, 1955, stated that: 'It is true, of course, that a host of matters that once troubled the Board have now become settled doctrine; the Board and the courts have put to rest many of the problems that formerly beset this field. But a surprisingly large number of areas remain in which the law has not jelled; or, having once appeared to be settled, has dissolved again into a sort of twilight zone.' We can best ascertain what the Eisenhower appointees are doing by looking qualitatively into their performance in settling what is still unsettled and in unsettling what had been settled.

"In his letter to Senator HILL, NLRB Chairman Leedom heavily discounts the charges leveled by Senator MORSE on the ground that they are based upon an analysis by an attorney representing unions (a species of name calling which perhaps itself discloses the bias it professes to deny). I hasten to add, therefore, that management no less than labor is not entirely happy with the statistics of the Eisenhower appointees. In a radio broadcast of the Georgetown University forum on September 4, 1955, Mr. Benjamin Miller, director, Industrial Relations, American Trucking Association, observed that, 'Farmer says 95 percent were unanimous. But my question is, What about that 5 percent? They seem to be the precedent cases at least vital to both' management and labor. Of course, since management as well as labor has its bias, NLRB Chairman Leedom may see fit to disregard the views of both as untrustworthy. This would leave the field to the academicians as presumably the only ones free of bias and hence free to criticize. It may therefore be appropriate to mention the views expressed by Prof. Willard Wirtz in his address on August 22, 1955, to the section of Labor Relations law of the American Bar Association: 'These 2 years have seen phenomenal changes wrought in the interpretation and application of the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947 by a new National Labor Relations Board majority appointed by a new administration. * * * Yet what has happened remains, by any fair appraisal, a veritable revolution in the interpretation of the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947 and one in which the new members of the National Labor Relations Board have acted primarily on their own responsibility.'

"Phenomenal changes have been wrought; statistics do not belie their existence; the Eisenhower appointees ought at least to face up to them rather than to pretend that nothing has happened."

There we have it. The entire defense is a skillfully woven concoction of false premises, false accusations, false inferences, and false conclusions designed to prove that the revolution in Board policy which the Eisenhower appointees have accomplished did not occur at all. Congress and the American people, I am convinced, will not be fooled.

B. The myth of prounion charges by the Eisenhower Board

Chairman Leedom also alleges in his letter, and the report repeats his charge, that the basis of my attack is unsound because the cases I selected do not fairly reflect the trend of the Eisenhower Board's decisions. He says "there are many other important decisions issued during the past 3 years in which the Board decided important questions, either not previously considered or previously going the other way, aiding organizational activities by employees and protecting the right of unions." In support of this assertion, Leedom cites 11 cases. Leedom says that if these cases are viewed as a group in isolation from the vast number of other decisions made during the same period, "they might give rise to an inference of favoritism toward unions generally." If these cases sustained the claim made for them they would be significant. But when we examined them, we find that nothing could be further from the truth.

The first three cases cited by Chairman Leedom, Ranco, Seamprufe, and Babcock & Wilcox, all deal with the same factual situation and with the same proposition of law. In all three cases union organizers, who were not employees of the employer involved, attempted to distribute union literature to employees on parking lots adjacent to the plant. The parking lots were maintained by the companies as adjuncts of their business, for the use of their employees. In each case, the plants were located in rural areas, at a distance from any large community; in each, because of the geographical location of the plant, and proximity to a highway, distribution of union literature to the employees could be made effectively only on the parking lots. In each case the employer involved sought to prevent distribution of the union's literature on his parking lot. In NLRB v. LeTourneau Company of Georgia (324 U. S. 793) the Supreme Court had held that in circumstances such as these the right of the employees to receive union literature, which the act guarantees, outweighs the bare property right of the employer to exercise "absolute dominion" over activity which occurs on his property. The Court held that dissemination of the literature on the parking lots must be permitted to effectuate the statutory rights of the employees. The only difference between LeTourneau and the three cases cited by Leedom is that in LeTourneau employees were handing out the union literature whereas in these cases a nonemployee organizer was doing so. But the applicability of LeTourneau to nonemployees was not challenged for the first time in the three cases cited.

In Caldwell Furniture Co. (97 NLRB 1501), decided February 5, 1952, the old Board held that the LeTourneau rule prevented an employer from barring distribution of union literature on parking lots under such geographic circumstances when distribution was attempted by nonemployee organizers just as when it was attempted by employes. The Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit enforced the Board's order in that case (199 F. 2d 267). See also Remington Rand (103 NLRB 152), decided by the old Board.

Thus, when the three cases cited by Chairman Leedom came before the Board there was already well-established precedent, and, indeed, a judicial decision, dictating the result which was reached. What is interesting about it is that even under these circumstances, although the law seemed clearly settled on the basis of decisions of the Supreme Court and the fourth circuit, one of the Eisenhower appointees, Beeson, dissented and voted to hold that the employer was free to bar distribution of union literature by nonemployees on plant parking lots. (Ranco, Inc. (109 NLRB 998, 1001–1002).) The Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, on reviewing this case, sustained the majority's decision, holding that the Supreme Court's decision in LeTourneau was applicable and, of course, controlling.

It remains to add that 2 other circuits, reviewing the 2 other cases cited by Leedom, held that LeTourneau was not decisive where nonemployee organizers were involved. Certiorari was granted in all three cases to resolve the conflict. In the oral argument before the Supreme Court of the United States on these cases, as reported in Law Week (24 L. W. 3201–3202), the Board's Assistant General Counsel told the Court that in view of the rationale of the Supreme Court's decision in the LeTourneau case—that parking lots under these circumstances were appropriate places for employees to receive union literature and that protection of their right to receive literature was necessary to effectuate the statutory guaranty of self-organization—the Board regarded these cases as in no material respect different from the LeTourneau case itself.

Having told the Supreme Court of the United States that its decisions in these cases marked no change in policy, and that the Board indeed regarded itself bound to decide them the way it did by the Supreme Court's own prior decision, there seems something less than candor in Chairman Leedom's attempt now to describe these cases as ones "in which the Board decided important questions either not previously considered or previously going the other way, aiding organizational activities by employers and protecting the rights of unions." The truth is, as we have seen, that the precise question involved in these cases had been previously considered and decided, not only by the Board but by at least one court of appeals, and that the Eisenhower Board made no change in policy at all in deciding the cases as it did.[3]

The next case cited by Leedom is Richfield Oil Corp. (110 NLRB 356), in which the Board held that the statutory obligation imposed on employers by section 8 (a) (5) of the act to bargain collectively about all matters affecting wages, hours, and working conditions comprehends the duty to bargain collectively upon request about employee participation in stock purchase plans established by the employer as an incident to the employment relation. Although the application of the duty to bargain to such stock purchase plans was challenged for the first time in this case, the scope of the duty to bargain and the legal principles which govern it had been so well settled in prior decisions of the Board and the courts, that, as the majority opinion showed, the employer's attempt to distinguish between stock purchase plans and other types of plans for employee remuneration, which were concededly covered, was little short of frivolous. Yet here again, although the controlling legal principles were absolutely clear, Eisenhower-appointee Beeson, asserting a broad power to legislate to achieve results which conform with his particular conception of the welfare of business, dissented (110 NLRB 356, at 370). Needless to say, the majority decision was enforced by the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in an opinion by Judge Danaher (37 LRRM 2327). The company petitioned for certiorari in this case, and the Government filed a brief in opposition. In that brief the Solicitor General and the General Counsel of the Board told the Supreme Court that, because of the established precedents concerning the scope of the subject matter of collective bargaining, the decision of the Board and of the Court of Appeals in the Richfield case was so "clearly correct as to obviate any need for further review." Certainly such a decision cannot be used as evidence that the Eisenhower Board is exercising its discretionary authority to expand the rights of employees and labor organizations, or that it is without antilabor bias. It proves, at most, that some Eisenhower appointees, in some cases, recognize that judicial restraints prevent them from accomplishing a total and complete reversal of whatever benefits and advantages employees and unions continue to enjoy under the law.

It should be noted in passing, however, that other high officials of the Eisenhower administration, reflecting the reactionary Republicans' determination to emasculate labor's rights under the act, recognize no limit whatever. In this very Richfield case Secretary of Commerce Sinclair Weeks, as reported in the Labor Relations Reporter (37 LRR 455–456), wrote a letter to the Solicitor General requesting that the Justice Department consent to the petition for certiorari filed by the company, even though the Board admitted that no substantial issue warranting review of the decision against the company was presented. The Solicitor General did not accede to this unlawyerlike position. He did, however, note the Secretary's intervention in the Government's brief in opposition. This attempt by the Republican administration, through its Department of Commerce, to influence even Board litigation policy in the Supreme Court, shows the lengths to which the Eisenhower administration is prepared to go to serve the interests of management at the expense of the rights guaranteed to labor under the law as enacted by Congress.

Boston Herald-Travelers Corp. (110 NLRB 2097) and Whitin Machine Works (108 NLRB 1537) (misspelled in Leedom's letter) deal with a single issue, the duty of an employer to supply to a labor organization with which it is bargaining collectively information regarding wages and wage rates of employees which is in the employer's possession and which is necessary to enable the union to bargain intelligently on these subjects. The Whitin case was discussed in Ratner's article, which I reproduced as an appendix to my speech, in the following terms:

"It is true that in Whitin Machine Works the Board phrased the duty of the employer to supply to the union information pertinent to collective bargaining in somewhat broader terms than had earlier Board cases. And in so doing the Board reversed at least one decision in which the duty had been subjected to restrictive qualifications. But the duty itself had been held to flow from the statute in an unbroken line of court decisions handed down before Whitin. The rationale for enforcement of the Board order in those cases implied at least that the duty was as broad as Whitin's subsequent statement of it. The alacrity with which the courts of appeals have enforced Whitin, and subsequent decisions based upon the test therein enunciated, add weight to the view that, to the extent Whitin marked a change in Board policy, it was a change dictated not so much by the individual opinions of the Board members as by the dictates of judicial authority."

It remains to add that despite the overwhelming weight of judicial authority, precisely in point, which was deemed controlling by the majority in the Whitin case, Eisenhower-appointee Beeson dissented even from that decision (108 NLRB at 1542). And it should also be noted that in a subsequent decision, rendered after Beeson was no longer a member, Chairman Farmer and Eisenhower-appointee Rogers dissented in an opinion which, if joined in by but one more member, would have reversed completely the law on the employer's duty to supply pertinent wage data; law established by an enormous body of Board and court decisions to which the Board had only a short time earlier bowed. (Taylor Forge & Pipe Works (113 NLRB No. 65).)

Truitt Mfg. Co. (110 NLRB 856), also cited by Chairman Leedom, is another case dealing with the employers' duty to supply information. The issue was whether an employer who, in collective bargaining negotiations, claimed that he was financially unable to meet the union's wage demands was bound by the good-faith requirement in section 8 (a) (5) of the act to permit the union to examine the evidence from which the employer drew his conclusion as to inability to pay. To hold that the employer need not permit examination of the evidence would mean that he could stifle bargaining completely merely by asserting inability to pay; by precluding the union from determining whether he was taking that position in good faith, the employer could prevent the union from deciding intelligently what position to take in the light of the company's actual financial condition. But, again, this issue did not arise for the first time in Truitt. It actually arose and was decided by the old Board in 1951, in Jacobs Mfg. Co. (94 NLRB 1212, 1221–1222). That case was reviewed by the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, and the Board's view of the employers' legal duty under the act to supply such information in such circumstances was sustained. (NLRB v. Jacobs Mfg. Co. (196 F. 2d 680).) Manifestly, contrary to Leedom's assertion, Truitt is not a case in which the Board decided an important question "either not previously considered or previously going the other way."

Nor is Borg-Warner (113 NLRB 120), also cited by Chairman Leedom, such a case. The issue there was whether the employer violated section 8 (a) (5) by refusing to sign a contract with the union unless the union agreed in the contract that it would not call a strike without taking a strike vote among the employees in the bargaining unit and securing majority approval. This very question had been decided unanimously by the old Board on August 26, 1953, in Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co. (106 NLRB 939), in which it was held that the internal procedure pursuant to which the union determined whether or not to call a strike was not a matter affecting "wages, hours, or working conditions" but rather an internal union and employee affair which the employer could not insist upon controlling as a condition precedent to performance of his duty to bargain collectively. The Board's decision in Allis-Chalmers was set aside by the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit on the authority of NLRB v. American National Ins. Co. (343 U. S.

[3] It should be noted that the Supreme Court held that the employer was free to prohibit distribution of literature at his parking lot by outside organizers. This reversal is, of course, not relevant to the point I am discussing.

395), which, however, did not involve any attempt by the employer to control internal union affairs as a condition to bargaining, but related only to the employers' insistence on maintaining unilateral control over certain conditions of employment. It was in this posture that the issue decided in Allis-Chalmers was presented to the Eisenhower Board in Borg-Warner. Two of the Eisenhower appointees, Farmer and Leedom, voted to reverse the Board's decision in Allis-Chalmers and to accept the sweeping extension of the American National doctrine which had been suggested by the seventh circuit. Only one, Rogers, voted with Murdock and Peterson to follow the Board's prior decision. If the choice had been left to the Eisenhower appointees alone the case would have been decided differently by vote of 2 to 1. And yet a reading of the opinions in the Borg-Warner case clearly shows that to follow the seventh circuit's view would read the statutory requirement of collective bargaining about terms and conditions of employment out of the act completely. On that view employers would be free unilaterally to impose conditions upon the performance of their own duty to bargain so onerous and demeaning to unions as to preclude their acceptance, thereby frustrating union resort to the bargaining process. The stand of the Eisenhower members on this issue can hardly be said to reflect a proclivity to expand "the rights of unions."

Leedom's attempt to credit the Eisenhower Board with the decision in the Regal Shoe case (106 NLRB 1078) suggests that his three-page letter was prepared with far less care than my speech. The truth is that the decision was issued by the old Board, before the Eisenhower appointees became a majority, and that only one Eisenhower appointee, Farmer, even participated in it. Moreover, the decision itself was dictated, as the opinion of the Board points out, by the holding of the Supreme Court in the Rockaway News case (345 U. S. 71), decided shortly before, in which the Court made it clear that the Board may not deny all effect to a contract merely because a hypertechnical reading of one clause might disclose a flaw which could conceivably, in other circumstances, give rise to a charge that that provision of the contract was illegal.

Chairman Leedom's attempt to claim for the Eisenhower appointees credit for the decision in Boeing Airplane Co. (110 NLRB 147) is likewise at odds with the facts. In that case, 2 of the 3 Eisenhower appointees voted to hold the union activity there involved unprotected by section 7; only one, Farmer, joined Members Murdock and Peterson in holding it protected. The view expressed in dissent by the majority of the Eisenhower appointees involved, in the words of the majority opinion, "an unwarranted extension of the doctrine in the cases on which they rely, and an unwarranted intrusion on the rights of employees as guaranteed in section 7 of the act" (110 NLRB at 151). The issue in that case, in brief, was whether an employer could lawfully discharge an employee for participating in a union-sponsored plan to secure better paying jobs elsewhere for employees of the company who were dissatisfied with the wages which the company offered where there was in effect a "gentlemen's agreement" that no employer in the industry would offer a job to one employed by a competing employer without the prior consent of such employer. The two Eisenhower appointees who dissented thought that since the success of the union's plan might result in loss of employees by the company through resignations, the potential injury to the company should result in holding unprotected the union's efforts so to assist its members and to strengthen its hand in collective bargaining. The majority recognized that to adopt this approach would result in having "decisions concerning the rights of employers and employees under the act * * * controlled by subjective feelings, rather than objective facts." They felt compelled to reject this novel and dangerous approach and to rely instead on the vast body of precedent which established that where, as here, concerted activities are undertaken for the mutual aid and protection of employees, and in the interests of collective bargaining, the protection of section 7 is not to be denied merely because the activities are novel, or because they may result in injury to the employer's business (110 NLRB 149–150). The majority decision is thus no unprecedented extension of the rights of employees under section 7; it merely rejects an attempt to restrict the preexisting scope of the act's protection. Moreover, as we have seen, the Eisenhower appointees cannot claim credit even for that.

Last is Peerless Plywood Co. (107 NLRB 427) in which the Eisenhower Board adopted the artificial rule, of questionable efficacy, that neither an employer nor a labor organization may address massed assemblies of employees on company time and property within the 24 hours immediately preceding an election. On the face of it the rule is as restrictive of union preelection activity as of employer preelection activity, and indeed, it has been applied to set aside an election in which a union broadcast to employees during working hours from a sound truck on the street outside the plant gates within the 24-hour period (Repeal Brass Manufacturing Co. (110 NLRB)).

In explaining the reasons for the rule the Board said in Peerless that a campaign speech to employees made during working hours in the plant within the 24-hour period "tends to create a mass psychology which overrides arguments made through other campaign media and gives an unfair advantage to the party, whether employer or union, who in this manner obtains the last word." Whether this reasoning is right or wrong is debatable. But it shows too clearly for argument that the rule was not adopted, as Chairman Leedom now claims, for the purpose of "aiding organizational activities by employees" or "protecting the rights of unions." Its sole avowed purpose is to safeguard employees against last-minute influences, whether pro or antiunion, of one particular type, exerted by unions and employers alike. And when that policy is related to the Board's decision in the Livingston Shirt case (107 NLRB 400) and the Nu Tone case (112 NLRB No. 143), discussed at length in my speech, even Peerless may be considered part of a pattern of retrogression from previously well established union rights and privileges.

It has thus been demonstrated that not a single 1 of the 11 cases cited by Chairman Leedom as examples of important decisions which, if read alone, might give rise to an inference of favoritism towards unions by the Eisenhower Board can conceivably be thought to sustain any such claim. The fact that only these 11 decisions could even be cited as instances of prounionism by the Eisenhower Board is itself the most eloquent testimonial to the accuracy of my charge that each and every one of the many major policy changes accomplished by the Eisenhower appointees has restricted the rights of labor and increased the rights and immunities of management. Far from proving, as Leedom claims, that my selection of cases "creates a false impression," examination of Leedom's cases serves only to confirm that the conclusions which I drew are eminently sound.

C. The pretense that the Eisenhower Board did not really change the law

The report attempts to show that in two areas where I demonstrated that the Eisenhower Board had made flagrant changes—jurisdictional policy and secondary boycotts—they made no changes at all but merely followed precedents established by the old Board. Let's take a look.

1. Jurisdictional Policy

I charged that the reasons the Eisenhower Board sharply curtailed the area in which it would assert jurisdiction was to give effect to its view that there should be less Federal regulation of labor disputes. It sought to override the policy of Congress—to regulate labor disputes to the fullest reaches of the commerce power—by its own contrary policy—to return to the States the handling of disputes which the Board regards as local. It goes without saying that the Board has no power to displace Congress' policy with its own. It is, therefore, not strange that my charge that this is what the Eisenhower Board has done is met with complete silence. There is not even a denial that desire to pave the way for State rather than Federal regulation is at the root of the Eisenhower Board's jurisdictional policy; and that is the heart of my charge.

The report defends the Eisenhower Board's wholesale declination of jurisdiction by the policy of previous Boards not to assert jurisdiction in the building and construction industry and the hotel field. Declination of jurisdiction in the building and construction industry stopped when Taft-Hartley was enacted. It was abandoned by the old Board in obedience to the 80th Congress' obvious desire to have its regulation apply in that field. Continuing declination of jurisdiction in the hotel field conforms with the apparent intent of the 80th Congress, as revealed in the legislative history of the Taft-Hartley Act. In each of these instances there has been obedience to Congress. My whole point is that the jurisdictional standards which the Eisenhower Board initiated in July 1954, and for which it alone is responsible, are based on rejection of Congress' policy. Where is the answer to that charge?

The report defends on the ground that there has been no judicial disapproval of the power of the Board to decline jurisdiction and only one instance of judicial disapproval of a particular exercise of that power. Passing the report's neglect to mention the second circuit's very recent condemnation of the "unjust and intolerable" application of its jurisdictional policy, the report is comparing apples and oranges. Of course, the Board has power to decline jurisdiction when the reason for it is to lighten the caseload to a volume that can be handled by the money and manpower available to the Board. It is on that basis only that the courts have approved the Board's declination of jurisdiction. But budgetary and manpower considerations are not at the basis of the Eisenhower Board's jurisdictional policy. Nevertheless, I anticipated in my charge that it may well be that "the Board can escape judicial condemnation of its conduct, for the scope of judicial review in this area of case handling is narrow indeed, and the courts are loath to interfere where declination of jurisdiction can, however dishonestly, be said to flow from budgetary considerations." That is the very reason I call for an investigation by Congress. Limitations inherent in judicial review are one of the important reasons for congressional intercession.

Lastly, the report defends against my criticism of the jurisdictional standards adopted by the Eisenhower Board in secondary boycott situations, as exemplified by the McAllister Transfer case (110 NLRB 1769), by arguing that the standards were compelled by the decision of the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in Joliet Contractors Association v. NLRB (193 F. 2d 833). I do not believe that it has previously occurred to anyone that there was a compelling connection between the two and a reading of the two cases fails to disclose any. What is significant is that the secondary boycott situation—where the prohibition is applied against unions—is the one area in which the Eisenhower Board, instead of curtailing, expanded its assertion of jurisdiction.

2. Secondary Boycotts

The heart of the report's defense against my charge that the Eisenhower Board has interpreted the secondary boycott prohibitions of the Taft-Hartley Act to impair lawful primary picketing is that the Eisenhower Board has applied the same legal standards as its predecessor, and that it has been upset by the courts only as to matters of judgment in the application of those standards. Precisely the opposite is true.

To make it appear that the Eisenhower Board merely followed precedent the report describes the old Board's decision in the Schultz case as holding that a union could lawfully follow a struck employer's truck to its destination and picket the truck there only if there was no other place at which the union could bring economic pressure to bear on the primary employer. That is an out and out misrepresentation. Schultz did not treat the unavailability of picketing elsewhere as a condition precedent to allowing the union to picket the primary employee's truck at its destination; it merely referred to the unavailability in that case as further support for its ruling that picketing the primary employer at a secondary employee's premises is not illegal. Moore Drydock, which followed Schultz, and which formalized its doctrine, did not even mention the availability of another situs for picketing as a fact or limiting the union's right to picket the primary employer at a secondary situs.

The fact is, as I stated in my speech, that that limitation was innovated by the Eisenhower Board in the Washington Coca-Cola case, in which, however, the decision was defended and sustained on other grounds. The first case in which the new limitation became critical was Sales Drivers v. NLRB (37 LRRM 2166), and in that case the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia specifically found that the new Board had changed the prior rule by imposing a new limitation and ruled that the limitation was illegal and beyond the Board's power to impose. Every other court of appeals which has passed on this issue has come to the same conclusion. District Judge Wyzanski recently observed in an injunction case that the Board's new position was a "Procrustean rule" reflecting "some development from a rather broad permission to permit picketing at places of business other than the primary employer's, to narrower views more characteristic of a later administration" (Alpert v. Steel Workers (38 LRRM 2193)). The Eisenhower Board's attribution of this rule to predecessor boards is but another instance of its disingenuous refusal to stand up in defense of its own creation.

Similarly disingenuous is the report's attempts to refute my charge that the Eisenhower Board has substituted "a conclusive presumption of union guilt for the necessity of proving by evidence that the union's object is one which section 8 (b) (4) (A) outlaws." The refutation takes the form of quoting from a predecessor Board's decision that "Plainly the object of all picketing at all times is to influence persons to withhold their business or services from the struck employer. In this respect there is no distinction between lawful primary picketing and unlawful secondary picketing proscribed by section 8 (b) (4) (A)." The report deliberately seeks to confuse the finding of the predecessor Board that all picketing has as its object to dissuade persons from continuing to do business with the picketed employer, with the establishment by the Eisenhower Board of a conclusive presumption that inducement of employees of neutral employers to withhold services from the struck employer is designed to compel the neutral employer to cease doing business with the primary employer by illegal strike action.

There seems to be no end to the capacity of the draftsmen of the report to turn things upside down in order to prove that the Eisenhower Board is not standing on its head. Recognition by the predecessor Board that all picketing was designed to effect a discontinuance of business dealing led it to the conclusion that other criteria had to be relied upon to differentiate primary from secondary picketing. Observance of the same phenomenon by the Eisenhower Board leads it to reject the relevance of those other criteria which the predecessor Board thought crucial. When the two Boards thus derive precisely opposite conclusions from the same datum, it is a little difficult to believe that, as the report would have it, they are acting in the same way.

The plain fact is that the courts have differed with the Board insofar as the Eisenhower Board has attempted to innovate new and more restrictive rules of law in secondary boycott cases; not in the mere application of the old standards. The attempt of the report to prove the contrary by claiming that the second circuit upset the Board in one case (NLRB v. Electrical Workers (37 LRRM 2219)) but upheld it in another "on substantially the same facts" (NLRB v. Associated Musicians (226 F. 2d 900)), reveals more audacity than accuracy. The cases were not the same but entirely different, as the second circuit explained in its opinions, and the Supreme Court denied review in both cases.

Finally, the attempt of the report to explain away the conflict between the two Swift decisions on the ground that they involved different categories of workers is about as persuasive as attempting to distinguish two cases on the ground that in one the plaintiff was rich and in the other he was poor. The point is that in one case, where the result hurt unions, the Board held that buying was a management function and that employees who perform it are acting as agents of the employer, not as employees within the meaning of the act. In the other case, when consistency would have required dismissal of a charge against the union, the Board treated the buying function not as an employer but as an employee duty. No amount of quibbling can hide the inconsistency.

3. The Eisenhower Board Goes Far Beyond Judicial Decisions

The report states that the Eisenhower Board is now applying the law in accordance with judicial decision, and this statement is supported by reference to administrative abandonment of the per se interrogation theory and the Bonwit-Teller rule. The report thus sets up a strawman with which I am presumably supposed to take issue. But the merest perusal of Mr. Ratner's article, which I appended as an exhibit to my speech, shows clearly that I did not criticize the Eisenhower Board for discontinuing the per se interrogation theory and the broad Bonwit-Teller rule. Instead I recognized that these actions were justified by the state of judicial precedent. My basic criticism of the Eisenhower Board's actions in the free-speech area remain unanswered. Judicial reversal of the per se interrogation rule did not require or even suggest that the Eisenhower Board embrace, as it did, a view of employer persuasion that permits all sorts of coercive and threatening statements so long as the employer is clever enough to veil his remarks in innuendo rather than to be blunt. Nor did judicial reversal of the broad Bonwit-Teller rule require or even suggest that the Eisenhower Board countenance, as it did, an employer's prohibition of the distribution of prounion literature in the plant while at the same time himself distributing antiunion literature on the same premises. Where is the answer to the charge I did make?

4. Personal Products Case

The report attaches as exhibit 3 a letter addressed to me by Mr. John T. Van Aken, attorney for the Personal Products Co., in which he claims that my treatment of that case was based on an "inadequate analysis of the facts and the law." In my speech I said that the Personal Products case was "another flagrant example of the Eisenhower Board's attempt to rewrite the law to impose on unions new legal duties." That is exactly what it is, as the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia confirmed when it reversed the Board's decision. Nothing in Mr. Van Aken's letter, or in his brief to the Supreme Court as amicus curiae, to which he refers, shows the contrary. The language of the statute, and the Supreme Court's decision in the Automobile Workers case which I quoted in my speech both show that the act does not treat slowdowns as a violation of any provision of the act and that it does not allow the Board to order a union to cease and desist from engaging in a slowdown. No Board decision, before Personal Products, held that it did. In Phelps-Dodge, on which Mr. Van Aken says the Board "based" its Personal Products decision, the slowdown was held merely nonprotected by section 7; the employer was relieved of his duty to bargain with a union while it engaged in a slowdown; the slowdown was not held illegal.

The other matters mentioned in Mr. Van Aken's letter warrant only brief comment. For example, attacking my treatment of the position which the company took in collective bargaining, he quotes me as saying that the company "refused to offer any wage increase at all." Although that purports to be a direct quotation, comparison with my speech will show that it omits a critical word, "general," which appeared immediately before the words "wage increase." What I actually said was that the company "refused to offer any general wage increase at all." Mr. Van Aken does not deny that the statement I actually made is true and he cannot do so, for the record in the case proves it. That the company offered to increase a few individual rates and grant a few fringe benefits does not change the basic picture.

Mr. Van Aken says that the location of the plant in a private industrial district could not have affected the union's right to picket and therefore could not have been influential in inducing the union not to call a full-fledged strike. To prove his point, he refers to a strike which the union called almost a year after the slowdown in the course of which the union did engage in picketing which the company did not seek to enjoin. The point is, however, that before the slowdown occurred the union did not know whether the company would attempt to invoke its property rights to interfere with peaceful picketing. The company, indeed, explicitly refused to assure the union that it would not use its ownership of the property as an excuse to enjoin peaceful picketing. The facts are not changed by Mr. Van Aken's post hoc argument.

D. The false accusation that I am biased and prejudiced

Both the report and Chairman Leedom's letter charge me with bias and prejudice in favor of labor unions and against antiunion employers. This prejudice, they say, invalidates my charges, even though I documented them in every case with cold, hard facts. The evidence which is offered, however, not only fails to support the allegation that I am biased; it provides additional proof that the Board and its defenders are guilty of the very bias and prejudice which they have demonstrated in their administration of the act.

Both Chairman Leedom and the report charge me with bias for failing to mention in my discussion of the Swift case, that the Board, at the union's request, asked the Federal court to issue an injunction to prevent enforcement of an illegal State court injunction which the company had obtained to prevent the union from peacefully picketing the plant. The report goes so far as to assert that the Board's action in seeking this injunction "demonstrates the Board's fairness and impartiality." Let us see.

In the first place, Mr. Leedom admits that the Board's application for an injunction against Swift was a "collateral action," and not part of the Swift case which I discussed.

The Board's action in bringing that "collateral" injunction suit against Swift & Co. was held to be irrelevant in the Swift case by the Board itself. As a matter of fact, the Board insisted, over the respondent union's strong objection, that its application for injunctive relief against Swift & Co. should be treated by the Federal court as an entirely separate and distinct proceeding from the proceeding which the General Counsel had brought against local 88 under section 10 (1), even though the section 10 (1) proceeding was then being tried before the same district court, and even though the union action which the General Counsel alleged to violate section 8 (b) (4) (A) was admittedly the direct outgrowth of the company's action in illegally obtaining and keeping in effect a State court injunction which prohibited local 88 from peacefully picketing the Swift plant for organizational purposes. So unrelated did the Board regard these two proceedings to be that in its decision it held that Swift's action in illegally enjoining local 88 from lawful organizational picketing did not even affect the application of the "roving situs" doctrine pursuant to which even under the Eisenhower Board's decisions, the union would have been entitled to bring pressure to bear upon Swift at the retail markets because it was not free to picket at Swift's plant.

Second, when we turn to consideration of the injunction which the Board sought against Swift, it is evident that the Board did not seek that injunction "to relieve the union involved of an improperly burdensome State court injunction." It sought the injunction because, and only because, Swift had previously filed a charge with the Labor Board alleging that the peaceful picketing of its plant by local 88 was an unfair labor practice. The General Counsel of the Board had dismissed that charge on the ground that the legislative history of the act clearly established that Congress did not intend to outlaw peaceful picketing for organizational purposes, but rather intended that that conduct be left free of judicial restraint and interference. When, thereafter, Swift maintained, in effect, its illegal State court injunction the Board felt compelled to seek a Federal injunction against Swift to prevent Swift from thus continuing to flout, undermine, and destroy the authority which Congress vested in the General Counsel to determine whether conduct of this kind should or should not be subjected to restraint. Consistent Board policy and precedent, which the Supreme Court has sustained and approved (see NLRB v. Capital Service, Inc. (347 U. S. 501)), makes it clear that the Board seeks to enjoin enforcement of illegal State court injunctions only where the party who is maintaining the injunction has sought and been denied such relief by the General Counsel on the merits. There is thus nothing in the Board's application for injunctive relief against Swift in that case which can be taken even remotely to suggest that the Board was acting in behalf of the union. It acted, as it was compelled to act, in the interest of preserving its own prestige and authority.

That this is true is shown, moreover, by the Board's insistence during the trial of the two cases before the Federal court on keeping the injunction case and the section 10 (1) proceeding entirely separate and distinct. It opposed, and succeeded in defeating, the union's motion to consolidate the cases. The Board thereby managed to create a situation in which the court could consider the one single interrelated situation which arose out of the union's picketing of Swift, the company's illegal injunction against that picketing, and the union's subsequent inducement of its buyer-members to refrain from purchasing Swift products, as if they were entirely separate and distinct transactions.

The result was that the district court not only ignored the interrelationship between the facts; it ignored, as did the Board, the basic interrelationship between the rights guaranteed unions in sections 7 and 13 of the act and the limitations imposed upon the exercise of those rights by section 8 (b) (4) (A). By this process of compartmentalizing the facts and the law, the district court was able to conclude that the General Counsel should have injunctive relief against the union in the section 10 (1) case, but that the Board should have no relief against Swift & Co. in the collateral case even though it was patent that the State court was entirely without jurisdiction to issue or maintain in effect that injunction against peaceful picketing, and that the injunction unlawfully prevented the union from exercising its statutory rights.

Moreover, it is obvious that nothing in the Board's action in seeking injunctive relief against Swift in a collateral action, on the Board's own theory, affected the rationale of the Board's decision against local No. 88 in the Swift case which I criticized. Mention of the application for injunctive relief was and is wholly unnecessary to complete understanding of each of the issues decided by the Board against the union. Leedom's attempt to make it appear relevant is simply another attempt to becloud and distort the real issues.

Finally, although the report praises the Board for appealing from Judge Moore's adverse decision in the injunction case, it neglects to add that the Board refused to request the Supreme Court to review the eighth circuit's adverse ruling, even though that court's holding that the Board was not empowered to seek such relief was admittedly novel, unprecedented, and tremendously important, not only to the Board and to all labor organizations in the country, but to many agencies of the Federal Government as well. The eighth circuit's result, moreover, as the Board itself alleged, in its brief to that court, appears to be in conflict with the Supreme Court's decision in the Capital Service case. Yet, although the grounds for certiorari were overwhelming, the Board made no attempt to obtain Supreme Court review.

Chairman Leedom also claims that I "departed from the position of an impartial observer and critic" by relying in part upon Mr. Ratner's article. Leedom says that since Mr. Ratner represents unions it seems "a fair assumption that his inclination would be to take the partisan rather than the purely objective viewpoint and would tend to color the total factual picture to favor labor organizations in an issue between unions and management."

Chairman Leedom appears, however, not to have thought through the implications of this attack. If what he is saying is that any attorney who represents either labor or management in labor relations cases is necessarily biased and prejudiced, then he must admit that the appointment of General Counsel Kammholz, whose background, like that of virtually every other Eisenhower administration appointee, was exclusively that of a representative of employers, necessarily foreshadowed biased and prejudiced action and judgments by that token alone. When General Counsel Kammholz was appointed, Senators DOUGLAS and MCNAMARA opposed his appointment on the ground that he lacked the capacity to be fair and impartial in the light of his exclusively proemployer background. (Views of Senators PAUL H. DOUGLAS and PAT MCNAMARA in opposition to the confirmation of Theophil C. Kammholz, 84th Cong., 1st sess.) Mr. Kammholz at the hearings declared that his background in no way impaired his ability to make fair and unbiased decisions respecting the interpretation and application of the law as between labor and management. One of the factors which apparently led the Senate to confirm the Kammholz appointment was the fact that to disqualify attorneys from serving on grounds of bias and prejudice because they represented either employers or unions would eliminate virtually all candidates qualified by experience and training to deal with the issues in this field. Leedom now appears to suggest an even broader attack, namely, that analysis of the Board's decisions is to be discounted as biased and prejudiced whenever it comes from an attorney who represents one side or the other in this field. The result of such an approach would be to insulate the Board from virtually any informed criticism whatever. I can well understand why, in the interest of expediency, Chairman Leedom would desire such a result, but I can hardly believe that anyone will be misled by his self-serving assumption.

If, on the other hand, Chairman Leedom is not making so broad an attack, but is restricting his attempt at disqualification to attorneys who represent unions, as distinguished from attorneys who represent management, then it would appear that his attack reflects a degree of bias and prejudice more patent even than appears from the decisions of the Eisenhower appointees. Thus, on either approach, Mr. Leedom's "assumption" is neither fair nor tenable.

Perhaps Chairman Leedom's misguided attack is attributable to his misconception that what is at stake here is an issue "between unions and management." That, as my speech made perfectly plain, is not the issue at all. The issue is whether the Board is performing the function which Congress vested in it—a quasi-judicial function—or is usurping legislative power under the guise of performing that function; and whether the Board is exercising its quasi-judicial and administrative powers fairly or in a manner actuated by bias, prejudice, personal views, and political considerations. This is no issue between labor and management. Any Board which usurped Congress' legislative functions, as my speech demonstrates the Eisenhower appointees are doing, would be subject to censure whether its results favored management or labor, and whether it was acting in the interest of the Democratic or the Republican Party. It happens that the Eisenhower appointees are abusing their powers in the interest of management and to the detriment of labor, because that happens to be the real policy and program of the administration which appointed them and whose interests they have undertaken to serve. But my criticism is directed primarily at the abuse of constitutional processes and misuse of official position and power whereby the Eisenhower appointees are accomplishing their antilabor purposes; not merely at the victimization of labor which results. In appraising the merits of my analysis, one need not be either prolabor or promanagement; the analysis necessarily stands or falls on its own merits. It is patent that Leedom's attack is a subterfuge designed to evade such analysis on the merits.

Finally the report claims to prove my bias and prejudice by asserting that I implied, falsely it is said, that the act confers "rights on unions." The report says that the act does not confer any rights on unions, but only on employees. That is plainly, and ludicrously, false. If the act confers no rights on unions what did Congress take away from unions which refused to comply with the non-Communist affidavit and financial reporting provisions in sections 9 (f), (g), and (h)? If the act confers no rights on unions how are we to account for the fact that the act prohibits an employer from dealing individually with employees after a majority have chosen a union to represent them, even though the employees themselves want to bargain individually?

Of course the act confers rights on unions. And it does so because Congress recognized, as the Eisenhower Board members and the draftsmen of the report do not, that unions are the very instrumentalities through which employees exercise the collective bargaining rights which the act protects. Unions and their membership are inseparable and must remain so, if the law is to have any vitality. The attempt of the report to separate them reveals where the bias and prejudice really lie.

The report claims that I misapprehended the statute and was guilty of inaccuracy, by failing to note that Taft-Hartley added to section 7 a right of employees to refrain from joining unions. That is wholly inaccurate. The fact is, as I said, that Congress did not change the terms of the affirmative guaranty one jot or tittle. I omitted the guaranty of the negative right because it was wholly irrelevant to the Board's mutilation of the affirmative guaranty, and its irrelevancy is proved by the fact that in not a single one of the section 7 cases which I cited did the Board even offer that amendment as justification for its result. To construe the amendment as the report construes it is to attribute to Congress the intention of granting a right with one breath and taking it away in the next. The truth is that the negative right is designed only to protect employees who do not choose to join unions against both union or employer reprisal. It was not designed to diminish the protection of employees who choose to join unions and engage in concerted activity.

The attempt to utilize this irrelevancy to justify the Board's denial of protection to employees who choose to exercise their right to join and support unions speaks volumes—volumes about the attitude of those who resort to it.

V. THE REPLY ADMITS MY CHARGE THAT THE EISENHOWER BOARD APPOINTEES HAVE WRITTEN THEIR POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC ANTIUNION SENTIMENTS INTO THE LAW

When we have stripped from the replies all of the inaccuracies, misstatements and distortions designed to prove that what has happened did not happen, what remains is an admission of my basic charge. At the close of his letter Chairman Leedom says: "Decisions by all courts and quasi-judicial agencies reflect to a degree the economic and political views of the members. Therefore, some change constantly takes place in the interpretations of the law, not inconsistent with the statutory scheme of continuous change in the personnel comprising the tribunal."

Implicit in this statement is the view that an administration is justified in using its power to appoint the members and General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board to install in those offices men whose political and economic views accord with those of the administration and who will use the powers of their office to effectuate those views rather than the policies of the statute which Congress enacted and which it is their duty faithfully, honestly and impartially to enforce. If this view were sound, of course, what this Board has done would be no offense. And the report appears to subscribe to this view, for it contrasts my sole charge that the Board has a strong antilabor bias with the absence of any accusation of corruption, venality, bribery or any form of criminal abuse of its office, as if bias and prejudice were not enough.

Perhaps Chairman Leedom and the draftsmen of the report do not realize it, but their view is subversive of the most basic and vital principles of our system of Government. I had supposed that everyone understood that ours is a government of laws and not of men; that in that form of government quasi-judicial officers, no less than judges, are bound to respect the law as Congress writes it, and are precluded from substituting their own for Congress' judgment as to what the law should be. I had supposed that at least everyone who made even a pretense of fitness to hold judicial or quasi-judicial office under our Constitution would realize that adherence to these principles required not only that the judge refrain from deliberately injecting his personal, economic, and political predilections into his decisions, but that he make a conscious and deliberate effort to recognize and set aside, in deciding cases, whatever economic and political biases he may have brought with him to office, and which he cannot entirely escape.

Mr. Justice Frankfurter, in a recent collection of papers, Of Law and Men, pages 40–42 (1956), made the point this way: "Judges are men, not disembodied spirits. Of course, a judge is not free from preferences or, if you will, biases." But that is no excuse for the "cynical belief in too many quarters * * * that it is at best a self-delusion for judges to pursue disinterestedness. * * * To assume that a lawyer who becomes a judge takes on the bench merely his views on social or economic questions leaves out of account his rooted notions regarding the scope and limits of a judge's authority. The outlook of a lawyer fit to be a justice regarding the role of a judge cuts across all his personal preferences for this or that social arrangement." It is the duty of a judge to recognize "that he is there not to impose his private views upon society, that he is not to enforce personalized justice * * *."

Chairman Leedom's approach shows that the Eisenhower appointees regard it as their duty not to eschew but to reflect their economic and political views. That is an admission, at minimum, that the Eisenhower appointees do not have that outlook as to the role of Board members which makes them fit to occupy those offices. Mr. Leedom's attempt to justify the writing of their political and economic prejudices into the law by reference to their temporary tenure of their office is nothing less than a cynical attempt by this administration to justify on the basis of 1952 election returns its perversion of Congress' policy by administration. The defense is that since the election gave the administration power to appoint members of the Board, and since Board members are empowered to decide cases, there can be nothing wrong in the usurpation of power by which they decide cases in accordance with their political convictions, not the law.

It is this crucial difference in attitude toward their role as judges, as I said in my initial speech, which differentiates the Eisenhower appointees from the appointees of prior administrations. Until the Eisenhower administration, Board members regarded it as their duty to effectuate Congress' policy, not their own. Those, appointed earlier, who still serve still regard that as their duty. And it is, therefore, not at all surprising that in some of the cases which I criticized, where, as I said, reasonable arguments could be made to sustain a contrary view, one or more of these men voted with the Eisenhower appointees. But these men never voted as a block, and they did not always vote on management's side in crucial policy cases, as they never uniformly voted on labor's side in crucial policy cases prior to 1953. I disassociated them from my attack on the Eisenhower Board because analysis of the critical, revolutionary changes which the Board has made shows that they are all attributable to the Eisenhower appointees; that they did vote uniformly on the critical issues to hurt labor and help antiunion employers; and that the changes taken together show that they were made because of the personal views of the Eisenhower appointees as to what the law should be, not because the law as Congress wrote it compelled these results.

This has nothing to do, as the report would have it, with whether the appointees regard the Taft-Hartley Act as a good law or a bad law. Expecting, and getting, true quasi-judicial performance, the Congress which enacted Taft-Hartley retained as Board members men who had opposed many of the provisions of that act. Congress properly regarded it as irrelevant to sound exercise of the judging function by men of judicial caliber whether they approved or disapproved of the law. Approval of Taft-Hartley, of itself, is no more a disqualication than disapproval. What does disqualify is departure from the judge's role to achieve not the objectives of the law, but the different objectives of its most reactionary sponsors, or for that matter, its opponents.

The Eisenhower appointees stand indicted by their own decisions and policies. Although they seek to evade responsibility under a multitude of guises, their reply carries an admission that they have used their powers of office to accomplish partisan and biased ends. The truly reactionary, antilabor philosophy and program of the administration stands revealed in the abuse of governmental processes to which it resorted to achieve its objectives. Let Congress and the American people judge whether this performance is compatible with the ethics and principles of American Government.

EXHIBIT A

STATE OF NEW YORK,
City of New York,
County of New York, ss:

William H. Englander, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

I am assistant general counsel of the Textile Workers Union of America, AFL–CIO. I supervised the activities of Harry A. Dower, a Pennsylvania attorney the union retained in the court case described below and I represented the union in the Board proceeding described below. Accordingly I have personal knowledge of the events described in this affidavit.

In May of 1955 the Lloyd A. Fry Roofing Co. bought the plant site in Emmaus, Pa., formerly used by the International Felt Co. Prior to its closing, the International Felt Co. had been under contract with this union.

In June of 1955, Lloyd A. Fry hired seven employees, all of whom signed TWUA authorization cards. In June, Pete Umholtz, an international representative of the union, called upon the company to grant the union recognition; the request was denied. Picketing of the company began on June 22. On June 27 the company applied to the Court of Common Pleas of Lehigh County for a preliminary injunction against the union's picketing.

On July 18, 1955, the court, by Judge Henninger, denied the company's application for a preliminary injunction. The court held there was a labor dispute within the meaning of the Pennsylvania Anti-Injunction Act.

Following the court's decision, the company met with union officials on July 25, 1955. We imagined the meeting was for the purpose of negotiating a contract, but we soon learned that the company was solely interested in having a written record of our claim to represent the company's future employees, as well as those currently employed.

With the transcript of that meeting in hand, the company went into court on August 9 and moved again for a preliminary injunction. In addition to holding the phony bargaining session with us, the company also took pains before renewing its motion to advise our members that they were laid off.

By a decision dated November 14, 1955, the court, by Judge Henninger, again denied the company's motion for an injunction. It was held there was nothing illegal in our demand to represent future as well as present employees, and that we had a free speech right to advertise the dispute through picketing.

After the company wrote to six of our strikers that they were on "indeterminate layoff," we filed charges in the fourth regional office of the National Labor Relations Board against the company. We claimed that the company had discriminated against the six employees because of their union activities; also, that the company had unlawfully refused to bargain with us. Our charges were assigned Case No. 4–CA–1319.

On December 5, 1955, the company filed unfair labor practice charges against the union. The charges alleged we demanded that the company hire only union employees; that we demanded an unlawful union-shop agreement; and that we were guilty of committing a secondary boycott in that we had induced the employees of secondary employers not to deal with the company.

On December 20, 1955, I received a call from Bernard Samoff, field examiner in the fourth regional office of the NLRB. He told me he expected that the charges we filed against the company would be dismissed.

On the other hand, he stated that he thought there was a great deal of merit to the charges the company had filed against us. He said he was satisfied that Pete Umholtz, our international representative, had requested business agents of various AFL metal trade unions to instruct their members not to cross our picket lines; that these members, employees of secondary employers hired to do various preparatory construction work at the plant, had respected our picket lines in accordance with instructions given them. He said he thought this set of facts could very well make out a secondary boycott. He added that the potential illegality is further compounded by our demand for an overall production and maintenance unit union-shop contract, at a time when we represented just a few maintenance men. He said that this demand, supported by picketing, is per se illegal.

He added that such a contract, if granted, would not be a bar to an election and also since such contract would be coercive of other employees, it would follow that the demand for such a contract is illegal.

I pointed out to him that even if it were assumed that the unit we requested was inappropriate, I was quite certain there was not a single decided case which held that a demand for an inappropriate unit supported by picketing was an unfair labor practice per se. I also stressed the fact that the type of contract we demanded was simply an initial proposal for bargaining, and that during the course of bargaining we might very well take some other type of contract for some other unit.

Moreover, I told him that I had found a decision which dealt precisely with the facts that he alleged in his assertion that Pete Umholtz requested the business agents of AFL metal trade unions to instruct their members not to cross our picket lines. This case dealt with the identical situation; namely, where the picketing union went to another union and requested the other union to respect the first union's picket lines at the primary premises of the primary employer. The rationale of that decision was that a union may lawfully request, away from the situs of the primary picket line, what it may lawfully request at the primary situs of the picket line: that employees of secondary employers respect the picket line. I was referring to the Interborough News Company (90 NLRB 2135 (1950)).

In reply to my insistence that we had a perfect legal right to continue picketing even if the facts he claimed had been true, he urged me to consider the practical aspects of this situation. He noted that we had our picket line in front of this plant for a long time without any success; he expressed his opinion that the company was not likely to succumb to our picket line; that it would be to our advantage to withdraw the pickets, allow the company to attempt to get the plant going, and when the plant had hired additional employees, a new organizational situation will have been created.

He stated his belief that if we withdrew our charges and our picket line, the company would withdraw its charges. On the other hand, should we fail to see the practicalities of the situation and persist in our picketing, then, apart from any merit in our legal position, we would be faced with legal difficulties far beyond any value that this organizational situation could have for us. He noted that under the act an injunction would issue first, and only later would we have an opportunity to persuade the Board that we had a legal right to picket. He reminded me that there have already been many cases in which the charged party had proved to the Board its innocence of a secondary boycott violation. But all during the period of litigation the injunction remained in effect. He emphasized that fighting a court and a Board case hardly seemed to be merited by the organizational possibilities of the situation.

He also stated that the new General Counsel of the Board has taken the position that in all cases of doubt relating to possible new unfair labor practices, charges were not to be dismissed by regional directors but instead were to be brought to his attention for possible decision in favor of issuing complaints in circumstances that had not theretofore been regarded as unfair labor practices.

I made it clear to him that I had no jurisdiction over any decision regarding the wisdom of withdrawing our picket line at this time; I would be consulted only as to the possible legal consequences in the event we chose to maintain our picket line. I told him Pete Umholtz would have to consult his superiors for a policy decision on withdrawing the picket line.

I learned that Samoff had gone to Pete Umholtz' office that day, along with Bernard X. Alsher, another field examiner from the fourth region of the NLRB.

The next day, December 21, 1955, I received a letter from Pete Umholtz, forwarding to me a copy of the affidavit he signed for Samoff and Alsher the day before. It states in part:

"At no time did any member of the Textile Workers Union, AFL–CIO, or I ever communicate with any officers of the Building Trades Council of Allentown, or any business agent of any of the building trades requesting that our picket line be honored at Volney Felt Mill in Emmaus, Pa."

It is difficult to resist accusing these Board agents of overreaching and attempting entrapment in their interview of Umholtz. Apparently they were not satisfied merely to swear that he did not communicate with any officer of the Building Trades Council; they also had him swear to what he could not possibly know of his own knowledge, namely, that "at no time did any member of the Textile Workers Union ever communicate with any officer of the Building Trades Council."

On December 22, Bernard X. Alsher called me; he stated that he had spoken to Brandschain, the company's attorney, who said that if we withdraw the picket line, the company will withdraw the charges. I asked him whether the company would withdraw the charges with prejudice. I pointed out that once we removed our picket line, the company could complete the repairs required to put the plant into full operation, hire a full complement of employees and get production started. If, after that had taken place, the company thereupon refiled its charges, we certainly would have played the role of fools. Of course, it might be possible at that juncture to put a picket line up again, although that could be very difficult. But by then the horse would have escaped from the barn. I urged that we had a right to insist that the company withdraw its charges with prejudice in the event we chose to enter into any such arrangement.

Alsher told me that he had not and will not tell Brandschain that the regional office either requests or recommends that he withdraw his charges with prejudice. He said that he had not felt it would be proper for a Board agent to make that recommendation.

I told him I was exceedingly surprised at this position. I pointed out that he and Samoff had done a very excellent job in pointing out to us the practicalities of the situation, even to the extent of considering with me the possibility that we had every legal right to picket, while yet urging that Court and Board action against us should deter us from continuing an unprofitable organizational situation. I noted that the same persuasive powers exerted upon the company could very likely result in similar cooperation on that side.

Alsher repeated that as a matter of Board policy he would not urge Brandschain to withdraw his charges with prejudice. I asked him whether the problem of Board policy could be avoided if he relayed to Brandschain our message that we request him to withdraw with prejudice. He said he would do that.

He called back and advised that Brandschain had stated that he would not withdraw with or without prejudice—he would just withdraw, if we withdrew our charges and withdrew our picket line. Alsher told me that he understood this reply of Brandschain's to be negative, i. e., he would not withdraw with prejudice. Alsher suggested the parties work the problem out at a meeting between them.

Responsible union officials conferred concerning the situation. Throughout our assumption was that we had a legal right to picket, even if the facts claimed by the Board agent were true. Nevertheless, the threat of prosecution by the Board, and the expense, time, and trouble it entailed, was considered by us dispositive of the situation. We withdrew our charges and our picket line. On January 9, 1956, we were advised that the company had withdrawn its charges without prejudice.

WILLIAM H. ENGLANDER.

Sworn to before me this 17th day of April 1956.

A Report to the People of Berks County

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. GEORGE M. RHODES

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. RHODES of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in the closing days of the 84th Congress, I feel that it is appropriate to make this preliminary report to my constituents, the people of Berks County, the 14th District of Pennsylvania. I will also issue a final report, summarizing those activities not covered by this preliminary report.

PURPOSE OF THE REPORT

I have always felt strongly that an informed and alert citizenry is one of the most important foundations of our democratic form of government. For this reason I have attempted to report as widely as possible my activities and the work of Congress as a whole. Through these reports, as well as through weekly radio reports, I have tried to keep Berks Countians fully informed on the deliberations of the 84th Congress and to express my own stand on important issues.

REPRESENTING ALL THE PEOPLE

In my years in the House of Representatives I have conscientiously endeavored to represent and serve the needs of all the people of Berks County. In the field of legislation I have always tried to support measures which would truly benefit the greatest number of our people and which would genuinely serve the public interest. Of course, reasonable individuals will differ because of various interpretations placed on some phases of legislation. For this reason, no legislative record could possibly please every one of my constituents in every respect. This is to be expected in a healthy democracy, with its complicated social, economic, and political patterns. I do feel, however, that an elected Representative has the duty to consider carefully all viewpoints presented to him by all constituents, regardless of their political affiliation, personal motivation, or any other consideration. This I have always attempted to do to the best of my ability. All the views and aspects of particular legislative proposals are studied, weighed, and thoroughly considered before my final decision is made on how my vote will be cast. I have consistently voted for what I thought was in the best interests of the people of Berks County and our Nation.

SERVICE TO CONSTITUENTS

It has been my privilege to serve personally the people of my district who have contacted me about particular problems involving some phase of Government. I have tried to give this service promptly, courteously, efficiently, and fairly to all who have sought my help. Of course, it is not always possible to bring about the type of action needed to resolve satisfactorily each problem. However, every possible effort which is legal and reasonable is made in behalf of those seeking my assistance. Such services range from routine requests for Government publications to complicated problems involving veterans benefits, tax problems, social security and railroad retirement cases, immigration problems, Government contracts, and many other types of services to citizens in their relationships with their Government.

ATTENDANCE

My attendance record during the years of service as your Representative in Congress has been near perfect. In this 84th Congress my record was again one of the highest. The few calls I missed were caused by conflicting duties.

READING OFFICE

My office in the Reading Post Office Building is open 6 days a week to receive visits of constituents who desire information, help, or advice. I try to arrange my schedule to spend a maximum number of weekends at my Reading office when I am available to discuss personally particular problems which constituents may have. Whenever humanly possible, I accept invitations to attend various gatherings of community organizations, social, labor, farm and business groups, and other types of organizations. I am always willing to discuss any issue, answer questions, debate, or otherwise explain my views on specific issues before any group.

WASHINGTON VISITS

Again during the 84th Congress, it has been my pleasure to welcome many individuals and groups from Berks County on their visits to the Nation's Capital. Numerous school groups, religious groups, women's organizations, and Boy and Girl Scout groups met with me in the Capitol Building. With the assistance of Mrs. Rhodes, I have tried to help make their visits interesting, educational, and enjoyable. A visit to Washington to see our Government in action is one of the best ways for people to understand and appreciate the priceless heritage of freedom and democracy which we enjoy.

COMMITTEE WORK

During the 84th Congress, I have served on the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee and the House Administration Committee. I also served on numerous subcommittees and was chairman of the Subcommittee on Morals and Ethics in the Government Service. Near the end of the second session I was appointed to fill a vacancy on the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. I have also presented my views on pending legislation to other committees both in the House and the Senate on such subjects as railroad retirement, housing for the aged, distressed-area assistance, veterans' pensions, minimum wages, problems of low-income families, small-business defense contracts, textile-industry problems, postal rates, and arbitration procedures for Federal employees.

LEGISLATION INTRODUCED

Perhaps one of the best guides to the scope and interest of any Member of Congress is the type of legislation which he introduces. During the 84th Congress, I introduced bills designed to reduce the retirement age for social-security benefits, grant tax relief to disabled taxpayers, raise personal income-tax exemptions to $800, provide social-security disability benefits for totally and permanently disabled persons, to liberalize the Civil Service Retirement Act, to establish a Federal Agency for the Handicapped, to improve the Fair Labor Standards Act, to provide increased railroad retirement benefits, to reduce corporation taxes on small businesses, to exempt nonprofit swimming-pool associations from Federal excise tax, to assist aged persons obtain public housing, to limit postal subsidies, and to establish a Bureau of Older Persons.

CONGRESSIONAL DEBATE

I have taken part in important debates on the floor of the House and discussed such issues as social security, railroad retirement, housing for the aged, postal pay, vocational rehabilitation, farm legislation, foreign policy, trade policy, postal rates, and numerous other issues.

CONSERVATIVE COALITION

A coalition of extreme conservative Republicans and Southern Democrats was a dominant force in the 84th Congress. This coalition succeeded in blocking or weakening many important measures which liberal Members of Congress considered essential.

The 84th Congress did, however, enact some significant and important measures which will benefit the vast majority of our people. Other important legislation fell by the wayside after being partially acted upon. Still other meritorious bills received little attention. Over 12,500 separate bills were introduced in the House of Representatives and over 4,500 were offered in the Senate. Of this total, less than 900 were enacted into law. Some of the most important of these new laws enacted in the second session will be discussed briefly in this report.

DEMOCRATIC COOPERATION WITH ADMINISTRATION

Democrats in Congress have maintained a responsible, constructive opposition to the Eisenhower administration, supporting and strengthening administration proposals which we believed in the public interest and opposing those measures which benefit the privileged few at the expense of the welfare of all. I did not approve of resorting to blind and irresponsible opposition simply for political reasons. I voted with or against the administration solely on the merits of the question under consideration.

A summary of the administration's legislative record shows that Democrats supplied the margin of victory for the President on many House rollcalls where his program was successful. Democrats in both House and Senate supported the President's foreign policy legislation to a greater extent that did members of his own party.

LEGISLATIVE RECORD OF THE 84TH CONGRESS

The 84th Congress took some important strides forward but the progress was not what should have been made to meet successfully the challenge of automation, abundance, and surpluses.

The average citizen did not properly share in the prosperity created by increased production, scientific and technical advances.

Those of us who wanted to channel some of this prosperity to aged, retired, disabled and handicapped citizens were in a minority. We wanted to aid these people through the enactment of legislation to expand and improve social security and retirement programs. We urged improved service in Federal regulatory and inspection activities to protect the consumers and the public. In part we were successful. But in numerous cases monopoly restrictions were weakened or removed and had the effect of aiding monopoly interests at the expense of the average citizen. Small business also suffered because of the advantages won by monopoly interests.

Listed below are some of the important proposals acted upon by the 84th Congress:

PENSION AND RETIREMENT LEGISLATION

Social security: One of the most important measures enacted by the 84th Congress makes liberalizing amendments in the social security law. This action was taken despite vigorous opposition of the administration. The new law lowers the retirement age for women to age 62, provides benefits for totally and permanently disabled workers at age 50, continues benefits for physically disabled and mentally retarded children over 18, increases grants for public assistance to the needy aged, blind and disabled, and extends social security coverage to many professional groups. While this measure does not go as far as I personally hoped for, it is a significant step forward in meeting the needs of our senior citizens.

The social security amendments were approved despite objections from President Eisenhower's Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare Marion B. Folsom. It was in the final days of the session that the bill was brought out of the Senate Finance Committee where it had been crippled and delayed by the conservative coalition. Over strong opposition by the Republican leadership and Senator BYRD the Senate restored two important provisions. One was the lowering of the retirement age for women; the other was the disability feature. This key provision was approved by the Senate 47 to 45. Only 6 Republicans voted with the Democratic majority for the amendment. Both Republican Senators from Pennsylvania supported the administration and voted against the amendment.

That was the important decision on this year's social security bill. By a margin of 2 votes this social security fight was won. Benefits will be paid to women retiring at age 62, starting in December. Disability benefits will start July 1, 1957.

I joined with the liberal Democrats in working, voting for, and passing improved social security legislation.

Railroad retirement: Railroad retirement pensions were increased by 10 percent. A bill I introduced and worked for proposed a more liberal increase. It was for a 15-percent raise, which I felt was meritorius and justified because of increased living costs since the last pension increase. However, administration opposition made it a choice between 10 percent or nothing.

Civil-service retirement: The Civil Service Retirement Act was liberalized and improved, thus benefiting the millions of postal and Federal employees. Unfortunately, another bill to increase the annuities of already retired Federal employees was killed in the House after being strongly opposed by the administration.

TAXES

I introduced legislation to increase personal income-tax exemptions from $600 to $800, and voted for a compromise tax relief bill which passed the House in 1955. The bill was strongly opposed by the Eisenhower administration and passage was blocked in the Senate. I feel that the average citizen is entitled to tax relief which was denied him in the 1954 tax bill which gave 91 percent of the savings to corporations and upper-income groups.

PUBLIC WORKS LEGISLATION

Highways: A long-range program to build 41,000 miles of modern, interstate highways was approved. This is one of the most far-reaching actions taken by the Congress, benefiting the motoring public and commercial users of our highways. The new roads will be financed on a pay-as-you-go basis through increased taxes on gasoline, diesel fuel, and tires. I gave my support to this legislation.

Water-pollution control: A program to assist States in research and water-pollution control was enacted. I voted for the proposal which I believe is important in guaranteeing future supplies of water to meet the growing needs of our people.

Economically depressed areas: The 84th Congress took a big step toward the enactment of legislation to provide long-range Federal assistance to sections of our country suffering from chronic unemployment and economic stagnation. Although the House did not act on a depressed areas bill passed by the Senate in the closing days of the Congress, this issue will be a major target in the next Congress. I strongly support this type of program to help people and industry in depressed areas to help themselves in developing new skills, attracting new industry, and diversifying the types of products manufactured.

Flood insurance: The 84th Congress enacted legislation to provide a Federal flood insurance program on an experimental basis. This program was prompted by the disastrous floods in the northeastern part of our country last year and should help to reduce personal property losses in the event of future flood disasters.

HEALTH AND EDUCATION

The 84th Congress made a significant record in enacting programs to provide long-range health and research programs to conquer disease and alleviate suffering among those Americans already stricken by diseases.

Salk polio vaccination program: Originally authorized last year, the program was extended until July 1, 1957, offering protection against crippling polio for many millions of children, young people, and expectant mothers.

Hospital construction, health research: Federal grants were authorized for an expanded hospital construction program, for training programs for nurses and public health personnel, and research and training grants to State mental institutions. Congress also provided for expanded dental research and construction of facilities and research programs into the causes of cancer, heart disease, polio, cerebral palsy, mental illness, arthritis, and other crippling diseases.

School milk program: Increased funds were voted for the school milk program and the program was broadened to include camps, nurseries for underprivileged children, non-profit-child-care centers and agencies.

School construction: The conservative coalition in the House of Representatives blocked passage of the important bill to provide Federal aid in the construction of school classrooms to meet the growing shortages. The bill would have authorized $1.6 billion in Federal funds, to be matched by the States, in the 4-year construction program. Pennsylvania's share of the Federal grants would have been slightly more than $100 million. One main controversy was over an amendment to implement the Supreme Court antisegregation decision. Many of us who supported both the Supreme Court decision and the school construction bill sought to separate the two issues, but when this was not possible, voted for the antisegregation amendment and for the school construction bill itself. Ninety-six Republican Members voted for the antisegregation amendment and then voted to defeat the school construction bill after the amendment was added. This issue will be an important one in the new Congress, as the school shortage continues to grow.

Rural library service: Congress enacted legislation to provide grants to States to expand and develop library service in rural areas of our country. Almost 90 percent of the people in rural areas do not have access to public library facilities. This legislation will bring library service within the reach of most of our citizens.

NATIONAL DEBT

The national debt under the Eisenhower administration has increased by $7 billion during the past 4 years. Finally, in the final year of the administration a balanced budget was achieved. This was done by making sharp cuts in the Armed Forces and by economic curtailment policies of the administration. The cuts in the armed services caused heated debate and warnings that the Nation's security was being imperiled. The curtailment policies which adversely affected small business and employment opportunities also was the subject of bitter debate.

SMALL BUSINESS

The growing problem of small businesses in our country has caused much concern among many Members of Congress. Big defense contracts have gone to giant corporations and monopolies while small businesses are failing at the highest rate since the depression of the 1930's. Profits of big businesses are reaching record levels but many small businesses are operating in the red or making only skimpy profits, insufficient to finance expansion plans.

Small business is the keystone of our free competitive enterprise system. In many sections of our economy they are being squeezed out of existence by monopolistic big business. I supported legislation to aid small business by an "equal opportunity" bill to strengthen the Robinson-Patman Act and sponsored legislation to reduce corporate income tax rates on small businesses.

FARM LEGISLATION

An attempt was made to restore high, rigid price supports to basic farm commodities during the 84th Congress. I voted against rigid supports and in favor of the flexible program, which was favored by the overwhelming majority of the farmers of Berks County. I also favored the principle of "domestic parity" advanced by the Grange, in the hope that it might provide the best long-range solution to the problem of farm surpluses.

COMMUNITY SWIMMING POOLS

I introduced legislation to repeal the 20-percent Federal tax on fees and dues paid to private, nonprofit swimming pool associations. I feel that tax relief for these worthwhile community projects would encourage the organization of more such groups. Neighborhood swimming pools play an important role in curbing juvenile delinquency. They provide needed recreational facilities in the neighborhood to encourage clean, wholesome, and healthful family-type activities. My bill received favorable reaction from people in many parts of the country who are interested in the development of swimming pool projects. It was approved by the House Ways and Means Committee and placed in an overall excise tax readjustment bill which will be considered next year.

MORALS AND ETHICS IN GOVERNMENT

I served as chairman of the Subcommittee on Morals and Ethics in Government. Our subcommittee considered legislation to establish a code of ethics for employees of the Federal Government and reported a bill favorably. While it is obvious that morals and ethics cannot be guaranteed through legislation, this bill outlines a code of conduct which, if used as a guide, would do much to raise the moral climate of government.

PROBLEMS OF THE AGED

In addition to my efforts to liberalize the social-security program, I sponsored legislation to permit single aged persons or couples to occupy public housing units and also worked for inclusion of special aged housing provisions in the overall housing legislation passed by the 84th Congress. The conservative coalition succeeded in blocking the type of aged housing program which many of us felt was necessary to meet the growing needs of our elderly citizens.

I also joined in sponsoring legislation to establish a Bureau of Older Persons in the Health, Education, and Welfare Department. Its duties would be to formulate and carry out broad new types of programs to give older citizens the opportunity to enjoy more productive and independent lives, with adequate income, medical care, housing, and the chance to participate more fully in community activities. This legislation would provide the logical first steps in providing for the necessary Federal-State and private organizational cooperation in the development of plans and projects to assist older persons toward the attainment of these humanitarian objectives.

SURPLUSES AND ABUNDANCE

The real challenge which Congress must face is the challenge of automation and abundance. I joined with liberal Members who sought to channel more of our productive genius in the fields of manufactured goods and farm commodities into the hands of the millions of Americans now existing on meager pensions, substandard diets and living in slum housing. Children are attending inadequate schools, growing up under shameful conditions in this great land of abundance. These conditions must be remedied.

The cost of living remains high and continues to be a hardship on unemployed workers, their families, small farmers, and the millions of our retired senior citizens who struggle to exist on inadequate pensions or social-security benefits.

We must initiate policies to establish a full employment, expanding economy to provide more jobs at decent wages. We must have increased purchasing power in the hands of our neglected, low-income families and our old folks so that they can afford to buy the manufactured goods and farm surpluses which bulge from our warehouses and storage bins.

I supported policies to establish a full employment, expanding economy to provide more jobs and high living levels to put increased purchasing power in the hands of our neglected, low-income families and our old folks so that they can afford to buy the manufactured goods and farm surpluses which bulge from our warehouses and storage bins.

In a brief report it is not possible to tell completely the story of this session of Congress. Another report, resuming this summary of the work of the 84th Congress, will be mailed to you at a later date. Meanwhile, I will make myself available, without expense, to any group in Berks County which desires me to speak, answer questions, or debate on issues of national importance.

Contact my Reading or Washington office with any such request or on any matter in which you may be interested.

Report to the People of Berks County—Part II

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE M. RHODES

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. RHODES of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I take the opportunity at this time to conclude my report to the people of Berks County on the record of the 84th Congress.

In the first section of my report I discussed social security, railroad retirement, civil service retirement, income-tax legislation, small-business problems, health legislation, school construction, farm legislation, and the challenge of surpluses and abundance.

Here are additional important issues which came before this Congress:

PUBLIC WORKS LEGISLATION

Highways: A long-range program to build 41,000 miles of modern, interstate highways was approved. This is one of the most far-reaching actions taken by the Congress, benefiting the motoring public and commercial users of our highways. The new roads will be financed on a pay-as-you-go basis through increased taxes on gasoline, diesel fuel, and tires. I gave my support to this legislation.

Water-pollution control: A program to assist States in research and water-pollution control was enacted. I voted for the proposal which I believe is important in guaranteeing future supplies of water to meet the growing needs of our people.

Economically depressed areas: The 84th Congress took a big step toward the enactment of legislation to provide long-range Federal assistance to sections of our country suffering from chronic unemployment and economic distress. I strongly support this type of program to help people and industry in depressed areas to help themselves in developing new skills, attracting new industry, and diversifying the types of products manufactured.

The bill, because of administration opposition, was killed by delay in the House.

AUTOMATION

A Joint Economic Subcommittee conducted a study of the problems created by increased automation in our industrial society. Its report stressed the possible impact of automation on future employment opportunities and emphasized that a healthy, dynamic economy is needed to form a bulwark against increased unemployment caused by automation. Liberal Democrats approve the report. If Government policies promote an expanding economy, displaced workers can be retrained to fill new jobs at good wages and the impact of automation thus can be considerably alleviated. This Democratic view is opposed by those who support curtailment policies of the administration.

CIVIL RIGHTS

The House passed a bill designed to protect the civil rights of all Americans by establishing a bipartisan commission to investigate alleged violations of civil rights. I supported this important legislation. The bill, however, died because the Senate failed to act.

PEACETIME ATOMIC POWER

Key members of the Congressional Joint Atomic Energy Committee warned of the lack of progress being made in this country toward the development of atomic energy power reactors. Other nations, including Soviet Russia, are making significant advances. Many experts feel that our country will fall behind in the atomic power field unless action is taken. Legislation to direct the Atomic Energy Commission to build power reactors at our atomic energy installations was passed by the Senate. Strong opposition from the administration and Chairman Strauss of the AEC was exerted on House members and, as a result, the atomic power reactor bill was killed by a narrow margin.

I favored and voted for this important legislation to stimulate the peacetime development of atomic power.

SHORTAGE OF SCIENTISTS AND ENGINEERS

Many Members of Congress have been alarmed at recent figures which show that during the past year the Soviet Union graduated more than twice the number of scientists and engineers graduated in the United States. Our very survival in the critical years ahead may well depend on our ability to retain world superiority in technological and scientific developments. The Congressional Joint Atomic Energy Committee conducted important hearings on this subject and made a number of recommendations to arouse increased interest in science and engineering as a career for our young people. Legislation to promote this interest through the awarding of Federal scholarships, teacher's fellowships, and other similar programs was introduced in the House. This program had my full support.

NATURAL-GAS REGULATION

The controversial bill to exempt natural-gas producers from regulation by the Federal Power Commission was vetoed by the President after the revelation by Senator CASE of South Dakota, that he had been offered $2,500 by oil lobbyists for his support of the bill. I opposed the gas bill in the House because I was convinced that it was special-interest legislation which could cost the gas-consuming public hundreds of millions of dollars annually in higher natural-gas rates. Despite the veto, President Eisenhower stated that he supported the bill in principle. The bill is expected to be introduced again in the next Congress.

POSTAL RATES

The administration's attempt to increase first-class postal rates from 3 to 4 cents was blocked in the Senate after having passed the House. Democrats opposed the bill because it would place a disproportionate burden on users of first-class mail who already pay more than their share of the postal costs.

Last year profit in first-class mail was $63 million. The administration bill would have imposed an additional $296 million burden on first-class mail users. It would also have made more secure the subsidies to giant magazine publishers. Life magazine, as an example, got a subsidy of nearly $10 million last year.

I opposed the bill because I believe postal subsidies to Reader's Digest, Saturday Evening Post, Life, and others should be substantially cut before a first-class rate increase is adopted.

Postal subsidies are now costing the taxpayers far more than does the entire agricultural conservation program.

FISCAL POLICIES

The national debt: It has increased $6 billion during the last 4 years. Interest on the debt now amounts to $7 billion, or more than 10 percent of our total budget expenditures. Finally, this year, a balanced budget was achieved. This was done by making sharp cuts in the Armed Forces, by delaying payments into the civil service retirement trust fund, and by economic curtailment policies. The cuts in the armed services caused heated debate and brought warnings that the Nation's security was being imperiled. The curtailment policies which adversely affected small business and employment opportunities was also the subject of bitter debate. Some of these cuts merely shift until a later date payments that the Government is obligated to meet. It gives a false picture of the debt situation.

Economic policies: White House advisors who influence the President are responsible for policies which resulted in higher interest rates, increased living costs, and a serious business recession in 1954. Regulatory commissions and inspection services were weakened.

These policies have caused higher public and private debt, exploitation of our natural resources by special interests, an alarming number of small-business failures, and a reduction of essential Government services.

They also meant the blocking of public-works programs, more subsidies, tax loopholes, and writeoffs for big business, and other policies which discriminate against the average citizen and bring about dangerous curtailment of our national economy. Democrats strongly opposed these policies.

PROBLEMS OF THE AGED

In addition to my efforts to liberalize the social-security program, I sponsored legislation to permit single aged persons or couples to occupy public-housing units. I also worked for inclusion of special housing-for-the-aged provisions in the overall housing legislation passed by the 84th Congress.

I also joined in sponsoring legislation to establish a Bureau of Older Persons in the Health, Education, and Welfare Department. Its duties would be to formulate and carry out broad new types of programs to give older citizens the opportunity to enjoy more productive and independent lives, with adequate income, medical care, housing, and the chance to participate more fully in community activities.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Pensions: The House of Representatives passed a bill to grant a $90-a-month pension at age 65 to World War I veterans whose maximum income does not exceed specified levels. It would have also provided increases for totally disabled World War I, World War II, and Korean veterans receiving non-service-connected pensions. The bill was blocked in the Senate Finance Committee. It was strongly opposed in a personal letter from President Eisenhower prior to the House action on the compromise bill. The bill was a moderate approach toward meeting the problem pertaining to the economic well-being of our older veterans, many of whom are no longer able to find suitable work. I supported the World War I pension bill before the House Veterans' Affairs Committee and voted for the bill which passed the House.

Service-connected benefits: I also supported a bill passed by the House providing a 10-percent increase in compensation for veterans suffering service-connected disabilities during World Wars I, II, and the Korean conflict. In addition, it would have increased by 10 percent the allowances paid to disabled veterans with dependents when such veterans are 50-percent or more disabled. This bill was also opposed by the administration and it failed to receive Senate approval.

GI loan extension: The 84th Congress enacted a bill to extend the World War II GI loan program to July 25, 1958. There are still more than 10 million such veterans who have not used their GI loan entitlement to purchase homes, farms, or businesses. About 4,400,000 veterans have already taken advantage of this provision of the original GI bill.

Veterans' widows compensation: An important provision of the Servicemen's and Veterans' Survivor Benefits Act enacted by the 84th Congress increased the payment of VA benefits for widows of veterans who died as a result of service-connected injury. The new rates will be $112 a month, plus 12 percent of the adjusted basic pay of the deceased veteran.

Veterans' insurance: World War II and Korean War veterans who let their Government life insurance lapse get a chance to reinstate their policies under a law passed by the 84th Congress. The law applies only to 5-year term policies that have lapsed since July 23, 1953, because the holders failed to pay either or both of the final two premiums. Eligible veterans will be sent notices.

LOW-INCOME FAMILIES

A subcommittee of the Congressional Joint Economic Committee conducted a study of the problems of low-income families in the United States. One out of every five families now has an income of less than $2,000 a year. Despite increases in our economic resources, surpluses, and material abundance, millions of American families are forced to live on income too low to provide for their everyday needs. Some sections of the country have been hard hit by unemployment and depressed economic conditions. I presented a statement to the subcommittee describing the economic problems of Reading and Berks County and stressed the need for implementing the Employment Act of 1946 to provide maximum employment opportunities and for adopting policies to provide for the economic rehabilitation of low-income families.

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

The problem of juvenile delinquency has received considerable attention in the 84th Congress. An exhaustive study by the Kefauver Subcommittee To Investigate Juvenile Delinquency in the United States has produced a number of valuable reports discussing the causes, extent, and possible action necessary to alleviate this problem. Legislation to authorize joint Federal-State-local programs to combat the juvenile-delinquency menace was favorably reported to the Senate. While no action was taken on the bill in this Congress, it will undoubtedly be considered further next year. Other bills were enacted to tighten up the law against selling narcotics to minors and against the shipment of obscene materials through the mails.

HUMANE SLAUGHTERING

The Senate passed legislation encouraging the use of humane methods in the slaughter of animals in our Nation's packinghouses. I supported this legislation. In a speech on the House floor I called attention to the shocking and unnecessary brutality in transporting of animals and in methods of slaughter. I urged the use of modern devices now available to guarantee humane slaughtering practices. The bill was not acted upon by the House in this Congress but Senate action was an important step forward.

NEWS CENSORSHIP

Members of Congress as well as newspaper editors, writers, educators, and many other Americans have become aware of the recent trend in the suppression of legitimate news concerning vital subjects of interest to the American people. In some instances security reasons are cited, but more often, ways have been found to restrict the flow of nonclassified information which administration leaders feel might be politically embarrassing if made known to the public.

The Moss investigating subcommittee has made startling discoveries of abuses of this type in its study of news censorship by the executive branch. The committee insisted that the American people have a right to know all of the facts about public business. The "paper curtain" of news censorship, the committee asserted, has no place in our democratic form of government.

COMMUNITY SWIMMING POOLS

I introduced legislation to repeal the 20-percent Federal tax on fees and dues paid to private, nonprofit swimming pool associations. I feel that tax relief for these worthwhile community projects would encourage the organization of more such groups. Neighborhood swimming pools play an important role in curbing juvenile delinquency. They provide needed recreational facilities in the neighborhood to encourage clean, wholesome, and healthful family-type activities. My bill received favorable reaction from people in many parts of the country who are interested in the development of swimming pool projects. It was approved by the House Ways and Means Committee and placed in an overall excise-tax readjustment bill which will be considered next year.

NATURAL RESOURCES

The 84th Congress approved a rivers and harbors and flood-control program costing an estimated $1.5 billion, authorized a research project on the use of saline water for human and commercial purposes, and voted a number of reclamation projects.

Conservation: The 84th Congress took action to protect national forests, parks, and wildlife refuges from further exploitation after House Democrats revealed that oil leases on these refuges had been granted to private drillers by the Interior Department. I joined the Members of Congress in protesting this invasion of wildlife refuges and other administration policies which I considered contrary to sound conservation practices.

A vigorous investigation was also conducted into the activities of the Interior Department in the granting of mining leases in a national forest. These leases were used instead to cut valuable timberland owned by all our citizens.

Violations of fish and game laws by high-ranking military personnel and Government officials also brought strong protests from conservationists and Members of Congress, but legislation to outlaw these practices failed to pass.

HOOVER COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Legislation to provide reforms in the Government's accounting and budgeting practices, recommended by the Hoover Commission, was enacted by the 84th Congress. Numerous other recommendations did not require congressional action. Unlike recommendations of the earlier Hoover Commission, the second Commission proposed many sweeping cutbacks in many services of the Federal Government affecting veterans, small businesses, and farmers.

Legislation offered to put these drastic cutbacks into effect received little serious consideration by the 84th Congress. While I have supported many recommendations of both Hoover Commissions to eliminate waste and inefficiency in Government, I oppose such far-reaching efforts to curtail essential social and economic programs enacted over the past years to protect the average citizen and to promote the general welfare.

REGULATORY COMMISSIONS

Presidential appointments to the various regulatory commissions have shown a shocking disregard of the public interest and have brought repeated congressional protests. These commissions are obligated to protect the public against exorbitant utility rates, fraudulent stocks, false advertising, monopolistic corporate mergers, antitrust violations, and perform other similar important functions. Commission members who were vigilant in protecting the public interest were replaced by individuals coming out of the ranks of the businesses being regulated. Congressional critics referred to one lawyer who, before his appointment as chairman of a commission, spent his life arguing cases before the very same commission in behalf of big businesses accused of monopolistic practices. I joined in protest against such appointments which are very costly to the consumers and against the public interest.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

Administration foreign policies have been challenged in Congress because of indecision, rash slogans, pious declarations, meaningless conferences, and aimless drifting. Chinese Communists have entrenched themselves in North Korea and turned the force of their aggression to the south, gobbling up a part of Indochina.

Despite heroic revolts by workers in East Germany and Poland, the Russian grip on the Iron Curtain countries remains tight. The NATO alliance of free nations has been weakened. The Middle East, with its rich oil reserves, remains a trouble spot. The Israeli Republic is threatened by aggression by its Arab neighbors, armed by the Russians. Communist propagandists have capitalized on our lack of a positive program.

United States prestige has declined in the free world and among uncommitted nations. American soldiers still face the Communists in Korea. The Suez Canal situation is another danger spot. The world situation is far from good and ground has been lost by the United States in the cold war.

TRADE POLICY

The 84th Congress voted a 3-year extension of the reciprocal trade program requested by the administration, authorizing the negotiation of trade agreements with other countries. Peril-point and escape-clause provisions to safeguard American industry from unfair foreign competition were included in the bill.

EUROPEAN TRIP

As a member of a Post Office and Civil Service subcommittee, I visited a number of Government installations in various cities of Europe. The report of our subcommittee recommended certain steps to improve the status of civil service personnel in Europe. The largest and most interesting installation was at Frankfort, Germany, headquarters of the United States Forces in Europe.

While in Europe, I had the honor of representing the Reading YMCA at the world conference in Paris. Here I came into contact with people from all lands, who were working together in the interest of humanity, world brotherhood, and peace. It was an inspiring event for those of us who see and recognize the need for high moral principles and spiritual values as the foundation for lasting peace in the world.

MORALS AND ETHICS

During the 82d and 84th Congresses, I served as chairman of the Subcommittee on Morals and Ethics. Our committee recommended a code of ethics for Federal employees and Members of Congress.

While it is obvious that morals and ethics cannot be guaranteed through legislation, this code of conduct was presented as a guide which the committee believed would do much to improve the moral climate in government.

I am indebted to Rabbi Norbert L. Rosenthal, of Tulsa, Okla., for the following set of principles to which I fully subscribe:

To thyself be true.
To thy family, be affectionate.
To thy neighbor, be generous.
To thy community, be serviceable.
To mankind, be just.
To every living creature, be compassionate.
To the world, be courageous.
To the past, be understanding.
To the future, be hopeful.
And to God, be humble.

AVAILABLE FOR PUBLIC MEETINGS

In concluding this report, I renew my willingness to appear before any group of Berks County citizens to answer questions, debate public issues, or to speak on any subject in which you may be interested.

Congressman Young Aids Nevada Mining

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLIFF YOUNG

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, in the past few years Nevada has had the greatest mining production record in its history—far outstripping the days of the fabulous Comstock Lode.

Although we have had weak spots with respect to certain metals, our over-all production has reached a new peak.

The Bureau of Mines reports that in 1955 we had a total production amounting to $105,400,000.

This is 164 per cent of the amount produced in the war year of 1952.

These are the Bureau of Mines figures on Nevada's total mineral production since 1945:

1945	$31,300,000
1946	35,400,000
1947	40,900,000
1948	42,500,000
1949	37,400,000
1950	48,500,000
1951	57,700,000
1952	64,200,000
1953	73,500,000
1954	88,800,000
1955	105,400,000

Just what is responsible for the great spurt since 1952?

There are good reasons why the minerals industry, by and large, is experiencing prosperity. The most important, I believe, is that this Administration has restored the vital element of confidence in business planning—confidence that there will be no unnecessary intervention by the Government in the everyday activities of our citizens, confidence that there will be no effort to impose more controls over industry, confidence that business will no longer be the whipping boy of Government. As our economy expands, the demand for raw materials, including our mineral resources, increases in proportion. A healthy, growing economy in the years ahead will mean a steady, increasing need for our Nation's minerals and a strong domestic mining industry.

These policies are, of course, directed toward the maintenance of peace. War inevitably brings about high prices, but the aftermath generally brings about chaotic conditions. This Administration's policy is clear. It will leave no stone unturned in its foreign and domestic policies in the search for peace.

TUNGSTEN

Nevada has experienced a particular boom in the tungsten industry. Let us look at the Bureau of Mines report on our tungsten production in recent years:

1951	$4,800,000
1952	8,800,000
1953	13,800,000
1954	19,800,000
1955	23,000,000

Nationwide, domestic production of tungsten since 1952 has been nearly six times what it was in the entire period 1944–52. In short, the domestic tungsten industry productionwise has grown 600 per cent in the past 3½ years.

After considerable difficulty we were able to obtain approval of an extension of the Domestic Minerals Purchase Program to assure continuation of the tungsten industry in Nevada.

As a result of these efforts, hundreds of Nevada mines have been saved the tragedy of shutting down completely.

I have been personally assured by the Honorable Fred Seaton, Secretary of the Interior, that the long-awaited long-range minerals program will be ready for Congress in January.

In the meantime, I am continuing my efforts to see that the Defense Department encourages use of tungsten in the aircraft and other defense industries and that a tungsten research program is inaugurated to insure the continuation of the tungsten industry in Nevada that has been developed in the past 3 years.

GOLD

In my opinion, the first step to further a return to the gold standard would be to make it possible for American citizens to buy and sell gold like any other commodity. We are working diligently, although without notable progress, to accomplish this end. I have introduced legislation to effect this in both the 83d and 84th Congresses, but no legislative action was taken.

BUREAU OF MINES

An estimated $918,700 is planned for expenditure by the Bureau of Mines in Nevada in fiscal year 1957. Activities will continue to center at the Bureau of Mines stations in Reno and Boulder City.

DEFENSE MINERALS EXPLORATION AGENCY

Nevada ranks sixth among the States in terms of funds received from the Defense Minerals Exploration Administration. As of June 30, 54 contracts had been entered into involving Nevada mining explorations. These contracts had a total estimated cost of $2,561,052 with maximum Federal participation of $1,563,221.

Public Hearings Scheduled by Subcommittee on Excise Taxes

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. AIME J. FORAND

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Excise Taxes, Committee on Ways and Means, I recently issued a press release announcing that the subcommittee has scheduled public hearings on Federal excise-tax policy, rates, and technical and administrative problems to begin on November 26, 1956. For the information of the membership and other interested persons, I would like to insert that press release in the RECORD at this point:

HON. AIME J. FORAND, OF RHODE ISLAND, CHAIRMAN, SUBCOMMITTEE ON EXCISE TAXES, ANNOUNCES THE SUBCOMMITTEE'S AGENDA FOR THE REMAINDER OF THE 84TH CONGRESS

The Honorable AIME J. FORAND, chairman of the Subcommittee on Excise Taxes of the House Committee on Ways and Means, today announced that the subcommittee has scheduled public hearings on Federal excise tax policy, rates, and technical and administrative problems to begin on November 26, 1956.

It is expected that the subcommittee will conclude the hearings in not to exceed 2 weeks.

Representatives of the Department of the Treasury will be invited to open the hearings and to present to the subcommittee the Department's views on Federal excise tax policy, rates, and technical and administrative problems which have come to the attention of the Treasury Department, including those arising in the collection and administration of the various Federal excise taxes. Representatives of the Department of the Treasury will also be invited to comment on the provisions of H. R. 12298, the omnibus excise tax bill introduced by Chairman FORAND on July 18, 1956, which incorporates the recommendations of the Subcommittee on Excise Tax Technical and Administrative Problems as embodied in the subcommittee's report dated April 20, 1956, as modified by the Committee on Ways and Means in its review of these recommendations. Following the testimony by Treasury representatives, public witnesses will be scheduled and are invited to present their views on the subject matter falling within the jurisdiction of the subcommittee in the order of the following excise tax categories in which they may be interested:

1. Retail excise taxes;
2. Manufacturers' excise taxes;
3. Excise taxes on facilities and services (admissions, communications, transportation, etc.);
4. Documentary stamp taxes;
5. Excise taxes on wagering, coin-operated devices, bowling alleys, etc., and regulatory taxes (except those on narcotics);[1]
6. Import taxes;
7. Excise taxes on distilled spirits, beer, and wines;
8. Excise taxes on tobacco products; and
9. Other excise taxes.

Within each of these categories industry representatives and others desiring to testify on an entire category will be scheduled for first appearances. Other witnesses will be scheduled according to the numerical order of the section numbers in which the taxes and related provisions on which they wish to testify appear in the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. In the interest of avoiding duplication of testimony, it is requested that to the maximum extent possible an industry group select one spokesman to present the views of that industry.

To facilitate orderly consideration by the subcommittee, witnesses are requested to divide their prepared testimony into four broad groupings to the maximum extent possible. These broad groupings are:

1. Rates and problems relating to the level of rates.
2. Technical and administrative problems relating to broad groups of excises such as, but not limited to, the treatment of leases in the case of the manufacturers' excise taxes and the publication of rulings.
3. The technical adequacy and substantive sufficiency of the provisions of H. R. 12298.
4. Questions of Federal excise tax policy such as, but not limited to, whether or not too large or too small a portion of the total revenues of the Federal Government are derived from excises.

Witnesses may testify on one or more of these groupings, but it is requested that each grouping be clearly separated and captioned in the prepared testimony of each witness.

Persons interested in appearing at these hearings may arrange to do so by writing to the clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means, room 1102, New House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C., by not later than November 10, 1956. It is requested that prospective witnesses indicate in their letters to the clerk the categories on which they will testify and where pertinent the sections of the 1954 code on which they will address themselves. Witnesses should also indicate the minimum amount of time required for their testimony.

Statements may be submitted (in triplicate) for the record in lieu of an appearance. As an alternative to multiple appearances by a witness who is interested in one or more categories, testimony may be given on subjects of major importance to the witness and briefs submitted for the record concerning other topics of interest.

Witnesses will be notified of the scheduled date of their appearance. The hearings will be held in the hearing room of the Committee on Ways and Means in the New House Office Building and will begin each day at 10 a. m.

It is requested that witnesses submit 40 copies of their prepared statements to the committee clerk at least 4 days in advance of their scheduled appearance. In the event that a witness desires to make copies of his testimony available to the press, it is suggested that an additional 40 copies be submitted to the clerk for that purpose.

Chairman FORAND also announced that the congressional staffs and the staff of the Treasury Department have been requested to begin studies designed to develop the necessary facts and statistics on which to base an appraisal of Federal excise-tax policy, the levels of rates, and the technical adequacy and the administration of the Federal excise-tax law. The staffs have also been instructed to prepare legislative drafts incorporating the recommendations of the staffs for the subcommittee's consideration.

The members of the subcommittee are Hon. AIME J. FORAND, Rhode Island, chairman; HERMAN P. EBERHARTER, Pennsylvania; EUGENE J. KEOGH, New York; FRANK M. KARSTEN, Missouri; A. S. HERLONG, JR., Florida; THOMAS A. JENKINS, Ohio; NOAH M. MASON, Illinois; HAL HOLMES, Washington; ex officio, the Honorable JERE COOPER, chairman, Committee on Ways and Means.

Report to My Constituents in the Sixth Congressional District of Maryland

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DeWITT S. HYDE
OF MARYLAND
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, at the close of the 2d session of the 84th Congress, I believe it is my duty to make a report of my voting record to the people of the Sixth Congressional District of Maryland. An analysis of this report will show that I cast my vote on every bill that was brought to a vote except one. My voting record for the 1st session of the 84th Congress was published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on August 16, 1955.

Voting record of Representative DEWITT S. HYDE, 6th District, Maryland, 84th Cong., 2d sess.

Statement on Reorganizational Meetings of Subcommittee on Internal Revenue Taxation of the Committee on Ways and Means

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILBUR D. MILLS

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Internal Revenue Taxation of the Committee on Ways and Means, I recently issued a press release following a series of organizational meetings of the subcommittee. For the information of the membership and other interested persons, I would like to insert that press release in the RECORD at this point:

HON. WILBUR D. MILLS, OF ARKANSAS, CHAIRMAN OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON INTERNAL REVENUE TAXATION OF THE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS, ANNOUNCES AGREEMENT REACHED IN THE SUBCOMMITTEE'S ORGANIZATIONAL MEETINGS

Hon. WILBUR D. MILLS, Democrat, of Arkansas, chairman of the Subcommittee on Internal Revenue Taxation of the Committee on Ways and Means, today announced that the subcommittee had completed a series of organizational meetings and has reached unanimous agreement with respect to the subcommittee's tentative program for the adjournment period of the 84th Congress.

In announcing the subcommittee plans, Chairman MILLS pointed out that due to the fact that the subcommittee has only a short time available for its work, it will be necessary for the subcommittee to concentrate its efforts on a limited study of the matters coming within its jurisdiction so that the study can be completed by the end of this Congress and a report made to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Accordingly, the subcommittee has agreed to concentrate its efforts on reviewing the new provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 as well as those provisions carried over into the new code without substantive change to determine what technical and substantive corrections and changes may be necessary. This review will be primarily concerned with technical and clerical errors, with ambiguities, with instances in which unintended hardships are imposed on taxpayers, and with instances in which unintended advantages are given to taxpayers. A number of cases involving such situations have already been brought to the attention of the Committee on Ways and Means by the Treasury Department, by the staffs of the congressional committees, and by the interested public.

The revisions of the Internal Revenue laws which were involved in the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 necessitated the promulgation of new implementing regulations. In addition, the subcommittee has been advised that the Treasury Department reviewed regulations in those instances where no substantive changes were made in the Internal Revenue laws and attempted to coordinate the old regulations with the new regulations and to bring them into line with judicial precedents handed down subsequent to the initial promulgation of the regulations. The subcommittee will also study the correlation between the statute and the regulations promulgated thereunder to determine the extent of uniformity in substantive meaning and presence of clarity.

The subcommittee will inquire into the administration of the Internal Revenue laws under the Reorganization Act of 1951. Some work in this field has already been done by an advisory group at the direction of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. It is expected that the subcommittee will review the report of this advisory committee to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation dated July 25, 1955, and make such other inquiries as may appear necessary to the subcommittee. With respect to the inquiry into the administration of the Internal Revenue laws, the subcommittee will place particular emphasis on assuring that the administration of our tax laws is being conducted in such a manner as to promote efficiency, to protect the revenues, and to provide equity and fairness to all taxpayers.

Chairman MILLS stated that the above program is not necessarily the complete program for the subcommittee for the remainder of this Congress. Other plans and agenda of the subcommittee will be announced if and when they are decided upon. This, of course, will depend upon the progress of the subcommittee in considering the agenda set forth above. The chairman stated that additional specific problems requiring study by the subcommittee which may come to the attention of the subcommittee membership would be added to the agenda if circumstances warrant.

It is the desire of the subcommittee that legislative recommendations which its studies indicate to be necessary be drafted and submitted to the full committee before the end of this Congress.

Chairman MILLS stated that it was the unanimous intent of the subcommittee to direct this study in such a way as to assure the American public that the subcommittee is interested in achieving tax laws and applicable regulations that are understandable and certain, that are fair in their impact on the American taxpayers, and that are properly administered. Chairman MILLS added that the nature of the subject matter to be reviewed by the subcommittee would require substantial staff study preliminary to formal subcommittee action and that in this connection the staffs of the Committee on Ways and Means, the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, and the Treasury would be utilized with such recourse to outside individuals and groups as the subcommittee may decide to be necessary.

Chairman MILLS expressed the hope that the subcommittee will be reestablished in the 85th Congress so as to conduct a broader inquiry into the technical adequacy, the substantive policy, and the administration of the internal-revenue laws.

Formal announcement with regard to subcommittee hearings will be made at a subsequent date following the further development of staff activity.

The members of the subcommittee are: Hon. WILBUR D. MILLS, Arkansas, chairman; NOBLE J. GREGORY, Kentucky; THOMAS J. O'BRIEN, Illinois; FRANK IKARD, Texas; RICHARD M. SIMPSON, Pennsylvania; ROBERT W. KEAN, New Jersey; HOWARD H. BAKER, Tennessee; ex officio, the Honorable JERE COOPER, chairman, Committee on Ways and Means.

Antitrust Subcommittee Issues Staff Report Critical of Dixon-Yates Contract Maneuvers

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY
OF WYOMING
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement made by me as acting chairman of the Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary in releasing the staff report on the Dixon-Yates contract.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

As acting chairman of the Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, I am releasing a staff report which characterizes the Dixon-Yates contract as violating every concept of decent government and fair and impartial administration of applicable law.

The report emphasizes the role of the administration in encouraging and cooperating with private power interests to finance projects for the Tennessee Valley Authority and for other new power developments.

The document covers hearings held between June 27 and December 5, 1955, by a special subcommittee panel consisting of Senator ESTES KEFAUVER, Democrat, Tennessee, as chairman; myself; and Senator WILLIAM LANGER, Republican, North Dakota.

The report tells the story of the collapse of the Dixon-Yates maneuver, which it describes as the effort of the Atomic Energy Commission and the Bureau of the Budget to make a contract between the Atomic Energy Commission and the Mississippi Valley Generating Co., a newly incorporated organization created as a subsidiary of two private utility holding companies, headed by Mr. Edgar H. Dixon and Mr. Eugene A. Yates. It was a contract to furnish electric energy, not primarily for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, but rather to prevent the Tennessee Valley Authority from increasing its capacity to meet normal growth in the Tennessee Valley, and to accomplish this objective by special concessions on the part of the Government without notice to Congress.

After summarizing in detail all the circumstances involved, the report reaches this conclusion:

"The Dixon-Yates contract provides a dramatic case study of the waste, disorder, and confusion which inevitably surround governmental action which is calculated to serve big business interests rather than the public generally. From its very inception, Dixon-Yates was destined to end in public disgrace and disrepute. Its purpose was unwholesome; the methods used devious, and in carrying out the scheme every concept of decent government and fair and impartial administration of applicable law was ignored. Even a partial listing of the wreckage left strewn in the path of Dixon-Yates will demonstrate the damage that has been done.

"(a) The independent character of the Atomic Energy Commission and the Tennessee Valley Authority was brought into serious question.

"(b) Officials of the Department of Justice and the Securities and Exchange Commission were placed in the position of having been persuaded to take legal positions which ran counter to precedent of many years standing.

"(c) The administration of law by SEC was brought into disrepute because of SEC's flagrant departures from accepted interpretations of the Public Utility Holding Company Act and its succumbing to pressures from higher authority emanating from the White House.

"(d) AEC was forced to execute and sponsor a contract which the Department of Justice has since asserted violated the Holding Company Act, the Atomic Energy Act, and the conflict of interest statutes."

The report presents a detailed analysis of a number of documents submitted to the subcommittee, following the last public hearing on December 5, by Rowland R. Hughes, then Director of the Budget. These documents, made public for the first time, "make clear that the policy of the Dixon-Yates sponsors of substituting private power for any new installations needed by TVA was forcing the Dixon-Yates contract against the objections of the career men at both the Atomic Energy Commission and the Bureau of the Budget."

From a reading of the report, one is inevitably forced to conclude that Adolphe Wenzell, of the First Boston Corp., was sent to the Bureau of the Budget in 1953 to assist it with respect to a plan for eventually turning over to private power companies the attractive investment the American people have in the TVA. Through the guise of a power contract, our Government would have guaranteed very substantial profits with a minimum of private investment.

The report charges that "the administration forced the approval of the Dixon-Yates contract. Pressure of this magnitude must have been directed by the White House." The report presents "persuasive evidence" to support this conclusion.

The report notes that "there is no way that we can ascertain the full facts" because "the subcommittee has been completely blocked from getting to the bottom of the Dixon-Yates contract by the very men in the White House who were involved in these negotiations."

The report cites information leading to the conclusion that private-power officials, with the coming of the Eisenhower administration, had their eyes on power projects such as TVA and were thinking about how they could be taken over by private enterprise.

The report analyzes the evidence produced by the subcommittee "as a result of which the project was abandoned by order of the President and the Dixon-Yates group brought suit against the Government, which the Department of Justice is now resisting upon the ground that the contract was illegal, a conclusion which was presented to the committee by its staff early in the proceedings."

The report contains a legal opinion by the staff concluding that "the Dixon-Yates contract is void under section 434 of title 18 of the United States Criminal Code because of the fact that Mr. Adolphe Wenzell, an officer and director of the First Boston Corp., of which his wife was a stockholder, participated in the negotiations for the contract, although he was at one and the same time a consultant to the Bureau of the Budget and an officer of the First Boston Corp., one of the beneficiaries of the proposed proceeding, inasmuch as it was a financial corporation dealing in corporate securities."

The report also includes a chronology of all the events throughout the Dixon-Yates contract indicating "how incomplete and inaccurate were the releases to the press by the Bureau of the Budget and the Atomic Energy Commission."

The Suez Situation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
HON. MIKE MANSFIELD
OF MONTANA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement prepared by me on the Suez situation.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SUEZ SITUATION

Before the 24-nation conference on the Suez situation is a good time to assess and evaluate the Suez incident on the basis of the known facts. President Gamal Abdel Nasser's seizure of the Suez Canal has posed a difficult question to which the whole world must find an answer. There is no doubt but that President Nasser had the right to nationalize the canal. There is no question but that since the seizure, with one exception, normal transit of vessels through the canal has been allowed to continue in the same old pattern, which is in accord with the Constantinople Convention of 1888. The one exception is the continuation of the 8-year-old Egyptian boycott of Israeli ships. There is a question as to the threats used by the Government of Egypt to keep the foreign technicians on the job in the Canal Zone, and there is a question of legality insofar as taking over the assets of the Suez Canal Co. are concerned. The Suez Canal Co. has a lease with the Egyptian Government which expires in 1968, at which time its holdings automatically revert to the Government of Egypt. President Nasser's reported contention that the receipts from the Suez Canal tolls will average $100 million a year, and that this $100 million could be used on a yearly basis, to build the Aswan Dam is incorrect on the face of it. The fact is that the yearly gross proceeds from the canal average somewhere in the vicinity of $100 million, while the net proceeds are approximately $30 million a year. There is, it must be remembered, a constant drain on the toll funds to dredge the waterway to keep it in operation, and with the building of bigger tankers it will have to be further widened and deepened in certain localities.

I believe that Secretary Dulles did the right thing in finally turning down the Aswan Dam proposal because it would have meant the creating, on a gratis basis, of a moral commitment to the tune of hundreds of millions of United States dollars to build this project. This project, if it is ever to be built with United States contributions, should be on a long-term loan low-interest rate basis and in accord with and in line with the objectives of American foreign policy. The mistakes leading up to the Suez crisis must, in part, at least, be credited to the United States. I say this not so much in criticism but on the basis of hindsight which, while a convenient peg to hang on to, does not excuse anyone personally for not recognizing the possibility of a mistake at the time of the event. We know now that—

1. We should not have exerted the pressure we did to get the British out of the Canal Zone although at the time it was done, I considered it a good policy.

2. We should not have made the proposal last January to begin the financing, on a grant basis, of the Aswan Dam with this country contributing $56 million toward the start of this project and the British offering $14 million. However, that is water over the dam.

We are now faced with a reality which calls for cool and considered action on the part of the Western Big Three and by all other nations as well. Neither the West nor Nasser can afford a defeat on the question of the Suez Canal. The answer to this difficult question does not lie in the use of aggressive tactics or in war. The answer lies in the use of diplomacy and the development of new policies and ideas. The emphasis on rearming and the calling up to the colors of reserves by both Britain and France is understandable in view of their economic interest and dependence on and in the Middle East, as well as other factors, but their emotionalism in this situation is, in its own way, as bad and as dangerous as Nasser's.

To illustrate the importance of the Suez Canal and the questions related to it, it is well to keep in mind that Western Europe depends for 90 percent of its oil needs on the Middle East and that in the next 10 years those oil needs will be doubled. Seventy percent of the world's oil reserves are in the Middle East; the loss of Mid-East oil either through closure of the Suez Canal or by nationalization or expropriation of the Middle East wells and pipelines would bankrupt Western Europe, bring about its economic collapse and pave the way for Moscow to move in. We must remember that through the Marshall plan we have spent $15 billion to rehabilitate Western Europe; we have been responsible for and have to a large extent spent a great deal of our treasure in keeping NATO functioning; we have, through the use of Mutual Security Administration, Foreign Operations Administration and International Cooperation Administration—all successors to the Marshall plan—poured additional billions of dollars into Europe to keep it a going entity. Surely, we do not want to see what we have contributed to the welfare of Western Europe, in our own defense and in our own security, go down the drain because of the situation in the Middle East. We cannot afford it.

President Nasser's seizure of the Suez Canal Company was not a move made on the spur of the moment. Nor was it made only because of the United States refusal to make a grant to Nasser to allow him to start on the Aswan Dam. It appears to be that Nasser's seizure was a carefully worked-out plan which was moved ahead of its scheduled timetable and used as a means of offsetting the United States refusal to grant funds for the Aswan Dam. In other words, in my opinion, even if the United States funds had been granted, it would have only been a question of time before the seizure of the Suez Canal Company would have taken place. We cannot afford to become hysterical or emotional over Nasser's action because we have to remember that out of his seizure may come events which might imperil the Middle East oil and pipelines. Therefore, what we should do is to go slow, tread water cautiously and plan now for the future. Serious consideration should be given to the following possibilities:

1. The London Conference called for August 16. Secretary Dulles is to be commended for pouring oil on the troubled waters of the Suez question when he visited London on August 1 to confer with Foreign Minister Pineau of France and Prime Minister Eden of Britain. He was able, at that time, to quench some of the fire which these and other leaders were fanning and to come up with a proposal for a 24 power conference to convene on August 16 in London to consider the question of the Suez. His success in this matter did much to calm the situation and to allow Messrs. Nasser, Eden, Mollet, and Pineau, as well as others, to take a second look at their hole cards; to reassess the situation and to revise their original views. The purpose of the conference beginning August 16, as I understand it, will be to try to modernize the Treaty of 1888 and to make sure that, if possible, internationalization of the Suez Canal is made secure. It is to be noted that both Indian and the U. S. S. R. have accepted invitations to attend the conference. Even though they have expressed reservations it is significant of their interest in this particular question and an awareness, on their part, of its ramifications and complications. It is significant to note that this is the first invitation, to my knowledge, to the U. S. S. R. to participate in a conference affecting this particular area and a recognition of the fact that the Soviet Union has penetrated the Middle East. In my opinion, it is there to stay. Incidentally, we must recognize that the U. S. S. R. is now an exporting oil nation entirely on the basis of its own oil production and exclusive of the Rumanian fields at Ploesti. We should recognize that the cold war has now developed into an economic struggle between the U. S. S. R. on the one end and the United States on the other. We should not try to outbid or outbuy the U. S. S. R. We should do only what is primarily in our own interest.

2. There is a question in my mind as to whether President Nasser or Egypt alone can be absolutely depended upon to keep the canal open from here on out. As an illustration, all Israeli ships for the past 8 years, as well as other nationalities carrying goods to Israel, have been refused transit through the Suez Canal.

3. The Western World, including ourselves, must begin to lay emergency plans now to export oil, if necessary, from the United States, Canada, and Venezuela to Western Europe:

(a) We should allow United States oil companies to expand and develop their oil production in the United States.

(b) We should encourage, through subsidies and otherwise, the building of 70,000- to 80,000-ton tankers. With their speed, tonnage, and reduced comparative costs, they could go around the Cape of Good Hope and nullify, in part, dependence on the Suez Canal. They could also be used to export oil from the Western Hemisphere.

(c) We should give consideration to the possibility of the construction and support of a new canal from the Mediterranean through Israel to the port of Aquaba off the Red Sea.

4. We should recognize Egypt's right to nationalize the Suez Canal; but if no solid international agreement can be worked out, we should begin work on the alternatives already suggested. Even if an agreement can be worked out, we must be prepared to have an alternative very possibly along the lines already suggested.

5. The stakes connected with the question of the Suez are of the greatest importance because they affect the economic welfare and security of a large part of the rest of the world. Some of the grave questions raised are:

(a) The canal itself and all it means to the economic lifeblood of the world.

(b) Mid-East oil and all its implications and complications.

(c) North Africa and its effect on France's future.

(d) Europe's economy and its dependence on the Suez Canal and Mid-East oil.

(e) The possibility that the Mid-East situation may, if it expands, either bring a final breakdown of NATO or at long last, a final recognition that if it is to survive it must pull itself together, reassess its condition and recognize its importance as a European defense alliance and its possible significance as an economic unit.

(f) The question of Israel.

(g) The question of Cyprus.

(h) South of the Sahara Africa is and will be affected more by events growing out of the Mid-East crisis.

War is not the answer to the Suez incident. While the exasperation and emotionalism of France and Britain are understandable, it should be recognized that gunboat diplomacy in this day and age would only exacerbate the situation and make it worse. What we have to do now is to work with the present, but think and plan for the future.

We should in addition to the conference to be held in London consider the possibilities, in the light of subsequent circumstances, of referring the Suez question to the International Court of Justice in the Hague and, if aggressive action is undertaken by either side on an unwarranted basis, taking the question immediately to the United Nations Security Council.

Aggression and force are not the answers. Reason, not passion—restraint, not fireworks—must prevail.

The American Character: Strength or Weakness

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. PHILIP J. PHILBIN

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a very disturbing statement recently made by Maj. William E. Mayer, described as a top Army psychiatrist, relative to the brainwashing of American soldiers captured in Korea.

I may say very frankly that I am astonished by the results of Major Mayer's findings concerning the results of Communist brainwashing.

The major states that "the effectiveness of the Red program points up basic defects in the American character that should cause searching self-examination by all Americans." If the conditions found by Major Mayer are at all extensive among our armed services, we have great reason to be gravely concerned.

I have great faith in the young men and women of this generation. They are sound, ambitious, loyal Americans, able and willing to fulfill their duty, defend the Nation and carry the burden of future leadership.

The fact remains that, if we are to have members of our armed services as indicated by Major Mayer's report lacking that historic stamina, courage, and tenacity which American fighting men have always displayed, clearly the Congress should take action as soon as possible to ascertain the degree and the cause of these conditions and try to rectify them.

My concern regarding this problem which involves the possible lessening of the vitality, endurance, and capacity in Americans of this generation was first deeply aroused by the results in the field of international athletics. As I pointed out in a speech last year, the Soviet is making great headway in athletics and is developing well-trained athletes in practically every field of great skill and ability who have in many instances demonstrated superiority over the athletes of the Western World.

It is true that the Soviet approach to organized athletics is on a different basis than our own and our friends of the free world, and that the training and education athletes receive under communism amounts, in effect, to professionalism as we know it. Their athletes are unquestionably professionals.

Nevertheless, the Soviet and the Iron Curtain countries are steadily building up and increasing the number of trained athletes who are able to outscore those of the free world. The winter Olympics was another example of this newly developed prowess of Communist nations.

It is my studied opinion that this fact, coupled with observations like Major Mayer's and other developments we are all aware of, should put this Nation sternly on notice that all is not well in our current social and educational life.

In my opinion, it is not principally the youth who are responsible for these conditions. It is primarily those who are responsible for bringing them up, for training them, for making them useful, ambitious, courageous members of the American society. Juvenile delinquency, so called, is only part of the picture. It is merely the symptom of an underlying social plague which is spreading in America, which is breaking down moral, physical, ethical, and cultural standards and subjecting the young folks of the Nation to the paganism and materialism that obtain in some other countries of the world where people have turned away from fundamental precepts of God, nature, and freedom and hence have declined in physical and moral strength, in political stability, in prestige, and national vitality.

Can this trend be stopped? Can these tendencies be checked? Can these instances of disloyalty and softness in the armed services be ended? These are grave problems for America and their solution must be seriously sought not only by Congress alone but in the States, in the local communities, in the homes of the Nation.

How long can we continue to ignore these problems deriving from modern life? How long can we permit debilitating influences to spread in the Nation and still retain the basic values and strength of body and character we need in order to cope with current threats to our way of life?

Let me reiterate: Despite what social commentators may say, fundamentally our American youth is sound, ambitious, and patriotic. It is morally and spiritually sound on the whole, and I personally see little evidence that in many respects it differs basically from the youth of previous generations. The youth of today may have more material means, more opportunities, more comforts and conveniences than those of former years. But essentially human nature has not changed very much, and I seriously doubt that modern-day youth, taken as a whole, is very different from its predecessors.

There is great good, splendid morality, fine spirit, commendable zeal, and loyalty in the present generation. Our young people are living in a vastly changed world; consequently their approach—their habits, their outlook, their attitude toward many things are bound to be different.

It must be noted also that they are living in a world where the poison of godlessness, paganism, materialism, skepticism and doubt and all the destructive philosophies are spread everywhere by Communists and other radical cultists endeavoring to destroy our religious beliefs, our culture, and our free society.

For these reasons, it is all the more important and vital that the young people of today be given very special guidance and direction in the homes, the schools, and the churches of America, for it is primarily in these great institutions of our God-fearing Nation that the American character of which we are so proud, and which has contributed so significantly to our national life and national success, is molded and developed and comes to its finest flowering.

It is to these institutions that we must look with increasing faith now for the proper guidance, direction, and training of new generations. The Bolsheviks are trying to destroy the family which is the basic social unit of civilization. But they will never be able, try as they will, to destroy the American family or the universal idea and ideal of family life.

It is for the homes of America to make sure that they are assuming and discharging their full responsibility toward the youth. A college friend of mine, Mr. N. V. "Swede" Nelson, Harvard football great, nationally known wit, pundit, and patriot, who is, among other fine things, a great worker among young people, put it well in a recent talk before a parent-teachers group when he asked the question: "Where is your boy or girl tonight?" For that is the plainest responsibility of parenthood—to know the companions, the whereabouts, and activities of young people who live in our American homes. If all parents made it a point to know "where their son or daughter is tonight," there would certainly be less delinquency, less maladjustment.

The part the school plays is also most important and vital. Upon the educators and teachers a great responsibility rests, not merely to perform the routine tasks of teaching, but to guide, to inspire, and to infuse the youth with love of learning and culture, with ambition and the spirit of civic and patriotic devotion. The cultivation of high ideals is most essential.

Above all comes the church, and there will be few so bold as to doubt that in this field is found the greatest source of moral teaching and spiritual enlightenment. And it is for this reason, because the church is the foundation stone of religious morality and virtue upon which loyal citizenship depends, that the fanatical charlatans of the communistic world direct such blasphemous attacks against it. Though they fall as upon some great indestructible rock, constantly dripping water in time wears away the hardest stone. We must insulate our religious institutions against these wanton attacks. This can be done by an enlightened, militant public opinion.

The atomic age, in its social, economic, political, and moral aspects, requires a firm sense of responsibility, individual and collective. It must be accepted and shared by all. It must rest as before on fundamental principles and truth. If we but put our interests and our energies loyally behind the great trilogy—the home, the school, and the church, which has so notably and indispensably contributed to the national greatness, this Nation will grapple with and solve its problems and find the road to security and peace in a free world.

DOCTOR REPORTS MANY CAPTURED UNITED STATES TROOPS YIELDED TO BRAINWASHING

WASHINGTON.—A top Army psychiatrist said today that nearly one-third of all American soldiers captured in Korea yielded to Communist efforts to sway their loyalty by brainwashing.

Maj. William E. Mayer declared that the effectiveness of the Red program points up basic defects in the American character that should cause searching self-examination by all Americans.

He said: "The behavior of too many of our soldiers in prison fell far short of the historical American standards of honor, character, loyalty, courage, and personal integrity."

Mayer, a foremost authority on brainwashing, based his views on a 4-year study of the experiences of 1,000 POW returnees. His opinions were expressed in a copyrighted interview with the magazine U. S. News & World Report.

The psychiatrist said that of about 4,000 GI's who returned from Korean captivity, nearly 1,000 admitted becoming progressives.

He added: "By the Communists' own definition, this meant that a man was either a Communist sympathizer or a collaborator—or both—during his stay in a prison camp."

Mayer stressed that these soldiers, by their own admission, were not subject to any physical torture.

Many Americans magnificently resisted Red attempts to change their beliefs, Mayer said.

He added: "But even granting that two-thirds of the men remained stanchly loyal Americans, still the fact that so many yielded to the degree that they did presents a problem of fantastic proportions and should cause searching self-examination by all Americans, both in and out of uniform."

Mayer said the Red brainwashers exploited three basic defects in the captive GI's—faulty character development, ignorance of American democracy, and lack of military toughness.

Many POW's, Mayer asserted, "had not been taught a sense of personal responsibility for the welfare of others" and failed to take care of sick comrades. As a result of this "every man for himself behavior," he added, "some ailing Americans needlessly died."

The expert said the Chinese Communists had a pretty low estimate of the American soldier, which was borne out to a certain degree by the behavior of the soldiers who bowed to Red psychological pressure.

Mayer charged that American schools are failing miserably to prepare youths for survival in a tense and troubled international society.

The psychiatrist also decried a lack of toughness in military training and said that the attitude of the parents of soldiers seems to be responsible.

UNITED STATES CRIME DROP CITED—WARNING SOUNDED BY FBI

(By Frank R. Kent, Jr.)

The Nation's crime rate has shown signs of a slight drop for the first time in 7 years, FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover has informed Congress.

Hoover, however, called the indicated decrease of 0.5 percent for 1955 "negligible when considering the country as a whole." If the present trend of reports continues, he said, the year 1955 will represent the fourth consecutive year in which the number of major crimes has exceeded the 2-million mark.

Figures based on reports for the first 6 months of 1955 show "that crime has taken on such proportions that 1 out of every 17 homes will be victimized this year," he asserted.

Hoover's statements were included in testimony before a House appropriations subcommittee on February 1 and released yesterday. The subcommittee was conducting hearings on the budgetary requests of the Department of Justice.

Hoover said there were an estimated 1,128,350 major crimes committed during the first 6 months of 1955. This was only 7,790 fewer than the number committed during the same period of 1954, he said.

He listed the following highlights:

A major crime was committed every 13.9 seconds.

Every 4.2 minutes there was a crime of murder, manslaughter, rape, or assault to kill.

Victims of killers totaled 6,240.

Other individuals feloniously assaulted by rapists and potential killers totaled 55,410.

The lives of 284,590 other persons were jeopardized by crimes of robbery or burglary.

In 1954, Hoover said, 9.7 percent of persons arrested were under 18 years of age. Yet this percentage, he told the committee, was responsible for: 57 percent of all auto theft arrests, 49 percent of all burglary arrests, 43.6 percent of all larceny arrests, 26 percent of all arrests for violations involving receipt of stolen property, and 18.7 percent of all robbery arrests.

Hoover said the fundamental principle was that "We have to look to the home to correct this problem." Too often, parents resent and reproach the police officer who brings their child home after he has engaged in wrongdoing, Hoover said.

"It is that kind of softheadedness which contributes to delinquency," he declared.

Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr., in his general statement, disclosed that the Department was asking for two new institutions to cost an estimated total of $17 million. One would be an Alcatraz-type maximum security prison. The other would be an institution to enable the Department to carry out provisions of the Youth Corrections Act in judicial districts west of the Mississippi.

The act permits a youth correction board to study the cases of offenders under 21 and to put them on parole, or send them to a farm, camp hospital, training school or prison, rather than incarcerating them with hardened criminals.

George J. Reel, chairman of the Board of Parole's Youth Division, said during the past year the Youth Division granted parole under the Federal Juvenile Delinquency Act to 53.2 percent of the juveniles in that category. Of the juveniles from the District of Columbia sent to the National Training School under a District statute 78.9 percent were granted parole, and 14.6 percent of those committed under the Youth Act were paroled.

District juveniles averaged 17.2 months in the institution here, Richardson said, Federal Juvenile Delinquency Act cases averaged 14.7 months and youths under the Youth Corrections Act 10 months.

Richardson told the committee that under the first year of operation of the Youth Act, the number of juveniles committed under it and those committed under District law who violated parole decreased from 48.2 percent in 1954 to 42.9 percent last year. He remarked that the percentage of violations among the District juveniles at the school has been high, but it decreased by 5½ percent last year.

Flood Insurance Legislation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. L. H. FOUNTAIN
OF NORTH CAROLINA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. FOUNTAIN. Mr. Speaker, the flood-insurance bill which we have passed in the closing moments before adjournment, in my opinion, will be remembered as one of the great achievements of the 84th Congress.

I believe that Congress in passing this bill has provided the American people with a flood-insurance program which, if properly administered, should promptly offer a high degree of security to potential flood sufferers. It should eventually offer a program of insurance against flood damage as readily available and as inexpensive as fire insurance is today. I believe the time will come when private insurers will find it a profitable business.

Flood-insurance legislation has had a long and hard fight through the 84th Congress. The problem that had to be overcome in getting a flood-insurance bill through Congress was apathy rather than opposition.

I believe that there is one Member of the House who deserves to be singled out for destroying this apathy through his persistent efforts and persuasive speech in behalf of the flood-insurance bill. I refer, Mr. Speaker, to our able colleague from Connecticut, THOMAS J. DODD.

As a member of the House Committee on Banking and Currency, I heard Mr. DODD testify on behalf of flood-insurance legislation. I read his earlier statement before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. In all of his statements he vividly portrayed the terrible destruction that he personally witnessed in Connecticut. He clearly depicted the economic chaos for individuals and communities that such destruction inevitably brings. His statements vigorously supported the need for and the merits of flood insurance.

This gentleman did more than just convincingly support this legislation. It was Mr. DODD who introduced the unique loan feature which was made a vital part of the flood-insurance bill by the House, and kept as an essential feature in sections 5 and 6 of the bill we have just passed.

The loan feature of this bill was original and imaginative. It demonstrates Mr. DODD's ability to produce a solution to a most complex problem, as well as his consistent concern for the people in Connecticut and elsewhere in the Nation who have suffered such terrible destruction from floods.

Without the efforts of this eloquent and able gentleman from Connecticut, I believe that we would not have passed a flood-insurance bill in this Congress. Most assuredly, without his courageous and persistent fight on behalf of the people of Connecticut and other potential flood victims throughout our Nation, the loan feature would not have been adopted; and, without the Dodd loan plan, I feel that the flood-insurance bill which we have passed would not be as effective.

Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that the House is about to lose the services of TOM DODD, but I expect that his ability and integrity will not be lost to the Congress. I understand that his sights are now set on a seat in the other body. If his goal is reached, I know that this outstanding legislator will continue to serve the people of Connecticut and the entire Nation with great distinction, reflecting credit upon them as well as upon himself.

Summary of Eisenhower-Republican Administration Achievements

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, the Eisenhower-Republican administration achievements is a record of surpassing importance to the welfare of all our people. A summary of it from 1953–56 is as follows:

REPUBLICANS WAGE PEACE

First. Ended Korean war in July 1953, as promised.

Second. Secured United States prisoner release from Reds.

Third. Strengthened American defenses with powerful new weapons; lowered costs.

Fourth. Bolstered European collective security through West German sovereignty—NATO membership, Austrian Peace Treaty.

Fifth. Closed gaps in collective defense ring around Communist countries through SEATO, free China and Korea treaties.

Sixth. Deterred Red seizure of Quemoy, Matsu, Formosa; helped end Communist control of Guatemala in this hemisphere.

Seventh. Helped settle Iranian oil disputes—aiding free world.

Eighth. Initiated atoms for peace development.

Ninth. Furthered disarmament prospects through air reconnaissance and blueprint exchange proposals accepted by U. N.

Tenth. Improved world trade relations, while safeguarding United States industry.

REPUBLICANS ADVANCE PROSPERITY

Eleventh. Achieved war-to-peace conversion of economy with greater than ever prosperity, while freeing the Nation from wage, price, rent controls.

Twelfth. Stabilized cost of living. In 3 Republican years, held dollar to within 1 cent of its January 1953 value compared to 12-cent loss in last 3 years of previous administration.

Thirteenth. Halted spiral of inflation that was robbing people's savings.

Fourteenth. Attained highest employment in history—currently 2 to 3 million higher than ever reached.

Fifteenth. Encourage record-breaking building of homes and other construction.

Sixteenth. Reduced labor strife significantly. Nineteen hundred and fifty-five strike losses down 53 percent from 1952.

Seventeenth. Pushed wages and take-home pay to record heights. One thousand six hundred and sixty-four dollars annual per capita disposable income means each American now averages $127 more per year to spend than highest ever reached before.

REPUBLICANS ASSURE PROGRESS

Eighteenth. Restored honesty and prestige to Government.

Nineteenth. Ended Communist influence in Government policy; tightened security standards.

Twentieth. Reversed 20-year trend to centralization of power in Washington. Reduced Government competition with industry.

Twenty-first. Cut Government spending and waste by over $10 billion from Truman's budget. Cut payroll by 275,000 Federal jobs, thereby reducing cost of Government.

Twenty-second. Provided history's biggest tax cut—$7½ billion a year, 62 percent to individuals, only 38 percent to corporations. Saved each family about $100 a year.

Twenty-third. Achieving balanced budget for 1956 despite defense demands and $80 billion IOU's inherited from previous administration.

Twenty-fourth. Established Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Twenty-fifth. Extended social security to 10 million; liberalized benefits for all. Reduced eligibility age for women from 65 to 62 years of age.

Twenty-sixth. Increased railroad retirement and unemployment benefits. Extended unemployment insurance to 4 million Government and small-business workers.

Twenty-seventh. Improved postal, Government, military pay structures with generous raises; greater benefits and security.

Twenty-eighth. Set up Small Business Administration.

Twenty-ninth. Advanced civil rights of minorities.

Thirtieth. Provided record highway aid.

Thirty-first. Initiated and expanded conservation and wise development of natural resources. Added to national parks, wildlife refuges.

Thirty-second. Helped farmers expand markets. Disposed of $4.7 billion of surpluses. Established sounder support program. Proposed soil banks and aid to low-income farmers.

Thirty-third. Proposed to Congress new programs for school construction, highway expansion, medical research, aid to depressed labor areas, and so forth.

The Outlook in Asia

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WALTER H. JUDD
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, once in a while it is useful, in trying to understand the future, to take a look into the past. So many people in these troubled days seem to be so surprised at the acute difficulties that continually boil up in the long slumbering countries of Asia. But the developments there were clearly foreseeable. They are the result, first, of ideas let loose in the world by the American Revolution of 1776, and, second, of the perversion of those ideas by the concepts and methods of the Communist counterrevolution in Russia of October 1917.

The losses that the cause of freedom has sustained in Asia since the war are not so much the result of Communist activities, brilliant and tireless as they are; rather, they are due to ignorance, indifference, and default by the forces of freedom—including our own country.

During the last year of World War II and for 3 years thereafter, I gave one speech, with variations, scores of times all over the country and to anyone who would listen. I was trying my best to prevent just what we now have on our hands—and with no good way to deal with it now.

I remember giving it at a meeting of the Yale Club in Washington in May 1946—with Under Secretary of State Dean Acheson on one side of me and Senator Robert Taft and Ambassador Spruille Braden on the other. I was honored when Mr. Acheson said at the end, "I would not have you change a word of it." But, somehow or other, nothing much ever seemed to get done, with vigor and in time, along the lines urged.

Mr. Speaker, recently I ran across a copy of the speech, condensed to meet the time limitations of a Town Hall broadcast in Newark, N. J., on March 4, 1946—just 6 months after V–J Day. Already the dearly bought victory in Asia, and for that matter, in the world, was on the verge of being lost—while America and the West slumbered.

Some of us who had watched the revolution growing in Asia were dismissed as alleged Asia-firsters, partisans of Chiang Kai-shek, emotional about Asia, and so on. No, we were trying to save our own beloved America from the terrible travail through which, barring a miracle, we must now pass for long, hard years ahead.

But the joy of freedom and the blessings of liberty are worth the price, whatever it be. We look back momentarily, only in order to look ahead and to march steadfastly on.

The speech of 1944–48 follows:

THE OUTLOOK IN ASIA

(Address of Hon. WALTER H. JUDD, Member of Congress, Town Hall broadcast, March 4, 1946, Newark, N. J.)

Only the shooting part of World War II has ended. A world-shaking ideological and political war is raging—a war to determine who really won the shooting war. No matter who defeated the Germans and the Japanese, the real victor in World War II depends on whose ideas ultimately dominate in the reconstruction of Europe and in the development of the gigantic manpower, resources and potential markets of Asia.

I believe that eventually it will become generally recognized that World War II all along was a war, more than anything else, to determine who is going to control the development of Asia.

Hitler knew that. He understood clearly that conquering Europe was merely the first step necessary to enable him to get control of the undeveloped areas of the world, most of which are in Asia.

Japan knew it. Her militarists openly admitted more than a decade ago that they had to get control of the manpower, resources, harbors and bases of east Asia to provide the springboard of their program of world conquest.

England, France and Holland have known it. Witness their feverish efforts to reestablish their empires in Asia.

Russia has known it. Over a period of more than two decades she poured more money and effort into the Communist movement in China than into any other country in the world. Undoubtedly she has hoped and still hopes to win control of Asia by propaganda and political agitation. But the drastic steps she has taken in Manchuria, for example, make perfectly clear that she intends to get control by other means if propaganda fails.

Only we Americans, even though we live on the same ocean with Asia, and its problems are in our front yard, seem not to realize fully that our own future in a large degree depends on the kind of ideas which guide the development of Asia.

There are four major possible ways Asia could go.

The first is a return to colonialism. Sections of Asia can be forced back into the old colonial pattern under the empire-building nations of Europe. If that is done, Asia will explode. And it will explode as violently against the United States as against England, France, and Holland.

I suspect future historians may record that the single most significant battle of World War II was the fall of Singapore. A billion Asiatics saw the white man's empires go down like a house of cards before the onslaught of an oriental country, Japan. Actually, the empires had been doomed since July 4, 1776; but it did not become clearly apparent to the people of Asia until 1942. They now know full well the weaknesses of those empires and they know that if they are forced back into that pattern it can only be because of the tacit approval, or at least the acquiescence, of the United States.

Through two centuries the Asiatics learned what attitude to expect from the European empire builders. The people of Asia are realistic and have not expected any such miracle as a right-about-face in that attitude.

But on the other hand, they certainly have not expected that the United States, which got its own independence by fighting a war against that same imperialism and which established a totally different pattern in dealing with the Philippines, might now appear to reverse its historical attitude and allow its strength and influence to be on the side of the empires.

This puts a very difficult decision before us. Our interests are essentially identical with, or at least parallel to, those of the British, French, and Dutch—in Europe. We need them as much as they need us, and it is imperative that we hang together—for reasons too plain to need mentioning here. But our interests are not identical with or even parallel to what many seem to regard as the legitimate interests of Britain, Holland, and France—in Asia.

I see no way out except for us to make unmistakably clear to all concerned that we will stand by the democracies in Europe; we will not support their empires in Asia.

That is the right position; it is also the expedient position. For if our choice is between having on our side in Asia the old decadent empires, or the hearts of the billion people who live there—then by all means let us have the hearts of the people.

The second possibility in Asia is racialism.

The basic thesis of the Japanese policymakers was that white men would never treat Asiatics decently and that, therefore, the Asiatics had no hope except to unite under Japan's leadership and expel the white men and all their interests from Asia. The thing that prevented the Japanese propaganda of "Asia for the Asiatics" from succeeding was the incredible folly of the Japanese militarists in treating the Asiatics even worse than the white man had. But let nobody think that because Japan's initial effort failed, her idea did not take root.

If attempts are made to reimpose the old colonial pattern in Asia, vigorous and magnetic leaders will arise in the Philippines, or Malaysia, or Indonesia, or Burma, or India, or China with a new totalitarianism of the racial pattern, urging the people of Asia to unite with all the colored peoples of the world in one solid bloc against the white man. Such a movement will not be good for anyone, but it is almost inevitable if we fail to provide adequate leadership in other directions.

The third possibility is the new imperialism of Russia. Let no one be so naive as to imagine that the unity pact between Chinese Communists and the Central Government of China means the Communists will not, just as soon as there is a chance of success, make a strong bid for complete control of China—a development which would tend to swing all of east Asia into the Communist column.

At San Francisco, at the meetings in London and Paris of the Security Council, at the Assembly of the UNO, and on a dozen other occasions, skillful Russian maneuvering coupled with our own diplomatic ineptness has managed to get us before the world on the side of imperialism in Asia, and Russia before the world in the apparent role of liberator. The fact that Russia is herself actually imposing a new and utterly ruthless imperialism on her neighbors is kept partly obscured by her effective attacks on the old European imperialisms.

Why did we get into World War II? Because we finally realized that we could not afford to let one totalitarian militaristic nation, Japan, get control of the manpower, materials, and potential markets of China and of Asia.

Yet a good many Americans have been trying for over a year to get us to abandon our ally, China, to the control of another totalitarian militaristic nation, Russia. It is an almost incredible performance.

They seem to assume that the only way we can have good relations with Russia is by always yielding to her; that we must either appease or go to war.

But surely we should have learned by now that appeasement does not prevent war. It always leads either to war or to abject surrender. And surely we know that when it comes to a showdown, we will not abjectly surrender.

We spent 10 years appeasing our enemies. It did not give us peace. It led straight to war.

Are we now to spend the next decade trying in vain to get peace by appeasing our allies?

I am utterly opposed to any such policy because it would lead only to Russia becoming incomparably the strongest power in Asia as well as in Europe. This would be as bad in the long run for Russia as it would be for Asia and for ourselves and for world peace. It would compel all the democracies to get together in an alliance against such an unprecedented concentration of power. It would divide the world into two great armed camps with constant tensions and suspicions. Some day an inevitable spark would set off world war III.

It is not because we want war with Russia but precisely because we don't want war with Russia that we must reject any fallacious notion that trying to appease her by giving her other people's territory will bring peace.

Shortly after Yalta, at a time when most Americans were profoundly disturbed by Russia's action in Eastern Europe in violation of that agreement, a Russian in Washington said, "You folks do not understand us Russians. We never take any seats that are not empty. When did we ever push anybody out of the seat he was firmly occupying? But, if you leave a seat empty, and we take it, then don't you come along and try to push us out."

As nearly as I can figure out Russia's foreign policy, that is the best description I have heard of it—taking empty seats.

We left a political vacuum in Eastern Europe. We had leaders who insisted political decisions must be postponed until all military questions were settled. But political decisions could not wait. And Russia could not and did not wait. When empty seats were left in Eastern Europe, Russia moved in, and I don't see how anyone could rightly blame her or have expected anything else. She was realistic while we daydreamed.

Manchuria has now become almost a second Poland—because once again we didn't exercise vigorous and steady leadership in time. We left the seat empty. The same will happen to all of north China and then to other parts of Asia, if we do not stand firmly now—not against Russia, but for the sovereignty, independence, territorial and administrative integrity of China—the same sound policy we have had in Asia since 1898, the objective for which we fought Japan, and which we reaffirmed in unequivocal terms in the Cairo Declaration to which Russia also gave her approval.

It is not a new policy, something hastily cooked up to checkmate Russia. It is merely continued adherence to our historic policy, the thing for which we fought Japan for 4 years—to maintain the open door in China—"equality of opportunity in China for all friendly nations; dominance by none."

Thus our alternatives are not just either appease Russia or go to war. There is another. We can stand firmly by our commitments in Asia and by the commitments of the Atlantic Charter everywhere. We can exercise positive, consistent, effective leadership for the pattern we ourselves established in the Philippines—the pattern which the overwhelming majority of the people of Asia wants.

That is the fourth possibility—not the old colonial imperialism of Europe; not racialism; not the new Communist imperialism of Russia; but genuine democracy and independence of the sort we helped establish in the Philippines.

All Asia observed that when we took the Philippine Islands we did not make them the first colony in a great new empire, but started immediately to help them build a republic and trained their people for the independence we promised and delivered. That is the pattern which the rest of Asia wants.

Why do we Americans sometimes seem to be the only people in the world who have so little idea of the strength of our own country? We are inclined to ask with fear and trembling, "What will this nation or that leader think or do?" I sometimes wonder why in the world we don't decide what we ourselves believe and stand for. Why do we so underestimate the soundness and the appeal to the oppressed peoples of the earth of the democratic system and ideology? Why do we hesitate to make our own position forthright and clear to all?

It is reckless irresponsibility as well as plain distortion of the truth for anyone to misrepresent such a foreign policy as one of "getting tough with Russia." On the contrary, it is a policy of standing firmly for the principles which have been the foundation of America's foreign policy for 50 years, while extending our hand in good neighborliness to all other powers, including Russia, and bending every effort to help iron out international differences.

How can anyone consider it unfriendly to Russia for the United States to continue supporting policies in Asia to which Russia herself has given written agreement? The United States must cling tenaciously to the principles and policies laid down in the Atlantic Charter.

The white man's prestige in Asia was at its all-time low after Pearl Harbor and Singapore. To regain respect he had to demonstrate power—and he did. But power alone will not restore confidence. That can come only as he demonstrates for what purpose he intends to use that power in the future.

The original relationship of the western nations to Asia was one of overlordship. It is now in various stages of transformation into one of trusteeship. But that is not enough. It must go on to independence; and then, if the new countries desire, to partnership.

The peoples of Asia and Europe are on the move. We cannot hold them back. We cannot drive them. What, then, can we do? We can lead them—if it be on a basis, not of superior and inferior, but of full partnership in working together for the good of all as the true way to promote the good of each. If the democracies fail to exert vigorous leadership in that direction, there are others able and eager to lead them in other directions.

There is no more important task in the world than that of making sure the western democracies and the peoples of Asia are on the same side, the side of freedom and democracy.

We defeated Japan's Army and Navy—but her ideas or those of Russia will have won the war in Asia unless all its people are assured, beyond any question, of their ultimate freedom as they work and struggle and grow to full nationhood and independence.

The Communists in China can start really serious civil war there only if they know Moscow is ready to back them. Thus what happens in China in the near future depends on what is decided in Moscow. But what is decided in Moscow depends on what happens in Washington. Fortunately, the United States of America is one of the few remaining places where what happens in its Capital City still can be determined by its citizens—just like ourselves—if we will.

Conservation Record of the 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LESTER R. JOHNSON

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. JOHNSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the record of the 84th Congress

shows that it was one of the most conservation-minded assemblies ever to grace these halls. Natural resources management has been a legislative subject of major importance. And the record is one that we can take proudly to the American people. New and constructive conservation laws were written into the statute books. Beyond that, by its alertness, the 84th Congress was able to ferret out and to expose the giveaway policies of the Republican administration—an administration which believes natural resources should be granted, leased, reserved, and exploited for the profit of the privileged few rather than conserved and wisely used for the benefit of all the people. Mr. Speaker, we were able to stop some of the giveaways dead in their tracks. Some we slowed down, but some are still going on.

But back to the conservation record of the 84th Congress. Here are some of the positive achievements:

First. We adopted a soil-bank law which, if properly administered, will save and build up the Nation's soil, water, timber, and wildlife resources while cutting down the troublesome crop surpluses. I am proud to say that, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture, I had some part in the shaping and final passage of this important and far-reaching legislation.

Second. Amended the Small Watershed Act of 1954 in order to broaden its purposes, slash through the redtape and speed up the work. Now a watershed project can include municipal water supply, stream-flow regulation, wildlife conservation, recreation, and other benefits as well as flood prevention and agricultural purposes. A watershed is not merely an area of land and water, the drainage basin of a stream. It also is a community of human beings, and usually includes towns and cities as well as farmers. All of these people are dependent upon the resources of the watershed for their health, wealth, and security, and none of the opportunities for wise use of those resources must be overlooked or neglected.

Perhaps the major improvement written into the Watershed Act by the 84th Congress was that all the costs allocable to flood control shall be paid for by the Federal Government. This is in line with long-established policies laid down by the Congress in connection with flood-control projects of the Corps of Engineers. It is recognized that flood-control benefits accrue to the economy of the whole Nation, and therefore the Federal Government has paid for them.

The local sponsoring watershed district or organization and the landowners will share the costs of land-treatment measures and of water storage and utilization for farming purposes, as before. For some of the other community benefits which may now be included in a watershed project, such as impoundment of municipal water supply, will be paid for by the local interests. This bill will be of great benefit to my district, the Ninth District of Wisconsin.

Here again, Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture, to help formulate and support the amendments which have broadened and liberalized the watersheds conservation program.

Third. This Congress adopted a new water-pollution control law with teeth, and for the first time in history appropriated enough money to start a first-class pollution-abatement program. While I was not the first Member of this Congress to introduce pollution-control legislation, I was the first to sponsor a bill containing authorization of incentive loans and grants designed to speed up the construction of sewage-treatment plants. This was the key new feature of the improved Blatnik bill that finally became law. The legislation sponsored by my distinguished colleague from Minnesota [Mr. BLATNIK] and by the Committee on Public Works, sets up a program of $50 million per year and a total of $500 million over a period of years for grants to municipalities that are hard-pressed to finance sewage-treatment works. It also authorizes $3 million annually in grants to State water agencies to help them build and strengthen the State pollution-control programs.

The new law also gives the United States Public Health Service a better tool with which to clean up stubborn cases of pollution in interstate waters. Now the Federal Government can instigate abatement proceedings without first securing the consent of the State where the pollution originates; this was a fatal weakness of the old law.

Mr. Speaker, we have had a pollution-control law on the Federal books since 1948, but Congress never before appropriated enough money to fulfill its authorizations. To the everlasting credit of the 84th Congress, we not only passed the law, we appropriated the necessary funds. We voted the full $50 million for the construction grants, $2 million for grants to State and interstate agencies, and $1 million for administration and enforcement. If I am privileged to be a Member of the 85th Congress, Mr. Speaker, I shall work to increase the State grants appropriation to the full $3 million, and I shall advocate more money for research and enforcement.

Fourth. We passed legislation to stop raids on, and despoilation of, the national forests and other public lands through abuses of the outmoded mining law of 1872. Public Law 167 of the 84th Congress, 1st session, probably will go down in history as our outstanding contribution to the management of the public lands. It does not go quite far enough, however. It is still possible for an administration devoted to special privilege to give away fabulous timber resources under pretext of granting a mining claim, as occurred in the notorious Al Sarena case in Oregon. I shall discuss this case later in more detail.

Fifth. We appropriated funds to start mission 66 for the national parks. This is a 10-year program of rehabilitation and improvement of our great national park system. If subsequent Congresses follow through, the parks will be safeguarded and equipped to accommodate the 80 million visitors annually which are anticipated by 1966.

Sixth. Of special interest to sportsmen, we passed legislation to release $13½ million of Federal-aid wildlife funds that had been tied up in the Federal Treasury for 10 years. This is money paid into the Treasury by sportsmen through an excise tax on their guns and ammunition. It was earmarked for Federal aid to the States in game-restoration projects. The $13½ million accumulated during the war years when the States could not use the full annual receipts under the Pittman-Robertson Act. But once accumulated in the Treasury, it took special legislation to release the unappropriated surplus for its intended purpose. It is a good thing this Congress acted, Mr. Speaker, because the administration budget balancers had their eye on that chunk of the sportsmen's money. They wanted to use it for other purposes so they could brag on an economy record.

Seventh. We enacted a bill to assist distressed segments of the commercial fishing industry and at the same time to elevate and strengthen the whole fish and wildlife program in the Department of the Interior. Key accomplishment here was the creation of an Assistant Secretary of Interior for Fish and Wildlife. In the past, wildlife interests have often been overlooked in bureaucratic competition for the attention of an Assistant Secretary who handled all public land matters.

In amending and then passing S. 3275, Mr. Speaker, we also headed off an ill-advised drive by commercial fishing interests to dismember the Fish and Wildlife Service and to put recreational fishing under the domination of a commercial-minded commission. We insisted upon the sound principle that fish and wildlife are related resources that, for true conservation, must be administered and coordinated in a single agency.

Eighth. We authorized far-reaching reclamation power and flood-control programs, including such major developments as the upper Colorado storage project.

The foregoing were the major positive achievements in the field of natural resources management. There were other momentous, and some small, conservation victories. A grave threat to the national park system was eliminated when Congress rejected an adminstration proposal to build Echo Park Dam in Dinosaur National Monument. This not only would have despoiled one of the grandest areas of wild canyon country in the national park system, it would have established a precedent that would have made it virtually impossible to resist similar invasions of other national parks.

Among other lesser, but by no means unimportant, conservation enactments was the bill implementing the Great Lakes Fisheries Treaty with Canada, the major objective of which is control of the destructive sea lamprey, and a measure authorizing acquisition of private holdings within the famous Quetico-Superior wilderness canoe country of the Superior National Forest in Minnesota.

A great deal of time was spent investigating and exposing the giveaway policies of the Republican administration. The name Al Sarena became notorious as it was disclosed how lieutenants of "generous Doug McKay" resorted to highly unorthodox methods to overrule career conservationists in the Forest Service and approved dubious mining claims in the Rogue River National Forest in Oregon. As a result of this giveaway, documented carefully by the Public Works and Resources Subcommittee of the House Committee on Government Operations in House Report No. 2408, Al Sarena Mines, Inc., secured title to 475 acres of highly valuable timber. While Al Sarena company has taken practically no minerals from the area, it has been mining rich stands of timber estimated in value at more than $500,000.

Investigations by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries disclosed the machinations of another McKay-sanctioned giveaway, this one gravely endangering the national wildlife refuges.

On August 31, 1953, Secretary McKay announced a stop order suspending action on applications for oil and gas leases on national wildlife refuge lands while the Department worked out new regulations for such leasing. Some 27 months later, on December 2, 1955, Secretary McKay announced and published the new regulations and it was immediately apparent that, while pretending to protect the wildlife values, they amounted to little more than an outright invitation to the oil and gas operators. Conservationists both within and outside of Congress protested and the Commmittee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries started an investigation of this peculiar situation. Among other startling facts it was disclosed that during the 27 months of the so-called stop order, more than 550 leases were granted on wildlife lands. While the general public assumed the door was closed to oil exploitation in the wildlife refuges, a favored group of operators and manipulators were sneaking in the back door of the Department of the Interior and sneaking out again with oil leases in their pockets. When is a stop order not a stop order?

During all the years since Congress passed the Mineral Leasing Act in 1920, only 11 oil leases had been granted on national wildlife refuges until Mr. McKay's stop order went into effect.

As for the new regulations promulgated by the McKay administration, the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee issued a highly critical report which was approved unanimously by Republicans and Democrats alike—House Report No. 1941. The committee had this to say:

> The new regulations fall far short of providing the degree of protection to the refuges which the activities of recent years prove to be necessary. Superficially these regulations appear to give a veto power to the Fish and Wildlife Service. However, under applicable laws, oil and gas leasing in wildlife lands is a matter solely within the discretion of the Secretary of Interior. Consequently, the veto power exists only so long as, and to the extent that, the Secretary permits the regulations to control.

Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, the danger of raids on the National Wildlife Refuges remains with us. The hearings and the forthright report of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee undoubtedly slowed down the oil exploiters, but they are not enough to stop them. The pressures for mining and grazing privileges, for homesteading on some of the western wildlife refuges, for transfer of lands to the military departments, and for other exploitive uses, continue to threaten our wildlife resources. In my opinion, it will be necessary for the Congress to enact some kind of protective legislation for the Wildlife Refuges, erecting the same kind of legal safeguards that now keep the raiders out of the National Parks.

Still another kind of giveaway has recently come to light, this one affecting and restricting the opportunities of the taxpaying public to enjoy recreation on Federal reservoirs that their money helps to build. It started with a new joint land acquisition policy agreed to by the Secretary of the Army and the Secretary of Interior, and said to have originated in orders from the White House shortly after the Eisenhower administration took over. The new policy, approved January 13, 1954, and published in the Federal Register as Order No. 2744, provides that the Corps of Engineers or Bureau of Reclamation, in building flood control, power or irrigation reservoirs, shall acquire in fee title only the bare minimum of land needed for construction purposes. Much of the area may be only partially controlled through flowage easements, and most of the shorelines are to remain in private ownership. The effect of this policy is to sacrifice opportunities for fish and wildlife development, which requires the management of shoreline areas, and to restrict public access for recreational purposes. On the other hand, this policy favors the few—usually real estate speculators—who manage to get their hands on the shoreline areas and can cash in on commercial developments.

Now the joint land acquisition policy of January 13, 1954, is being applied retroactively to Federal reservoirs started before that date. Several bills have come before this Congress with administration backing, proposing to sell reservoir lands back to the former owners at a special low price that fails to take into consideration the greatly increased values resulting from the expenditure of public funds. Once again, in most cases, it will not be the former owner who benefits, but the real estate manipulator who had "inside information" and has managed to corner the options.

Mr. Speaker, the special-privilege land acquisition policy at Federal reservoirs has got to be changed in the public interests. This is another task left over for the 85th Congress.

In conclusion, I want to comment briefly on the biggest giveaway among all the giveaways of the Eisenhower administration. I refer to the gift to favored private power combines of the Nation's finest remaining public power sites. At the same time, the administration has tried to hamstring, if not destroy, the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Rural Electrification Administration, and other agencies created by Congress in the past for the purpose of extending the blessings of electric power at reasonable rates to all of the people in all parts of the country. Mr. Speaker, had it not been for the fact that this Congress would not stand for it, TVA and REA would be in bad shape today.

Under the whiplash of the White House and the private power lobby, working together like a well-oiled team, the Senate voted down a bill to authorize a great Government dam on the Snake River in Oregon and Idaho. Hells Canyon is the finest public power site remaining in the land. The Republican administration has given it away to a private power combine which, under Federal Power Commission license, will build 2 or 3 little dams accomplishing only part of the tremendous power and water-storage potential of the Hells Canyon site. The balance of the Hells Canyon potential, unless this giveaway is reversed, will be lost to the public forever.

No, Mr. Speaker, we may have slowed down, but we have by no means stopped all of the giveaways of the Republican administration. It takes time to ferret them out, time to overcome and defeat the well-heeled lobbies of special privilege. But if the facts are made clear to the American people, if the conservation issues are widely debated and clearly defined, I have no doubt of the final outcome. The American people believe in the wise use of our natural resources for the greatest good of the largest number, in the long run.

Comments on Interstate Power Co. Report on TVA

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HUBERT H. HUMPHREY

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, earlier this year, a mimeographed report on The Facts About TVA was presented by a local representative of the Interstate Power Co. to a Kiwanis Club in Minnesota. This report was so distorted and constituted such a misrepresentation of the facts that I sought the advice and counsel of the distinguished junior Senator from Tennessee, Senator ALBERT GORE, in preparing a reply so the record may be set straight.

Senator GORE'S comments should be read by every American who has been inclined to take at face value the claims of certain groups who have fought TVA from its very inception.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in my remarks Senator GORE'S Comments on Interstate Power Co. Report on TVA.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMENTS ON INTERSTATE POWER CO. REPORT ON TVA

The mimeographed report on The Facts About TVA presented by a local representative of the Interstate Power Co. to a Kiwanis Club in Minnesota follows the general pattern of misrepresentation of TVA which has been spread nationwide through almost every media available to the free-spending private utilities.

The origin of the TVA idea is misrepresented. The power provisions of the TVA Act are completely distorted. The report glaringly omits any mention of TVA's national defense contributions, although more than one-half its power output today goes to the Atomic Energy Commission and other Federal defense agencies. The statements concerning TVA power finances bear hardly a remote resemblance to truth, depicting an enterprise earning a 4 percent annual return as subsidized. No reference whatever is made, of course, to the positive benefits to electricity consumers and taxpayers in the Nation resulting from TVA power operations.

These points are supported factually in the following analysis:

POWER IN THE TVA ACT

The development of power was one of the major purposes in the TVA Act, which set up TVA as an agency for unified development of natural resources along principles developed in the conservation movement under President Theodore Roosevelt 30 years earlier. In fact, Roosevelt set the stage for TVA when he vetoed a bill turning over the Muscle Shoals, Ala., site of what is now Wilson Dam to private interests. In the course of similar vetoes on other streams, he declared "I esteem it my duty to use every endeavor to prevent this growing (power) monopoly, the most threatening which has ever appeared, from being fastened upon the people of this Nation."

The historical facts thus effectively dispose of the claim in the report that TVA was presented to the public in 1933 "as a noble experiment—a new idea in river development that would show how the Federal Government could be a real help to a large depressed region." The idea that TVA was a kind of charity for a depressed region, instead of an application of conservation principles long established, is further discounted by the fact that the first act aimed at the development of the Tennessee Valley was passed in the economic boom year of 1928, only to be pocket-vetoed by President Coolidge.

Similarly, the provisions of the TVA Act itself completely controvert the assertion that the Congress of 1933 intended that "TVA dams would also generate a little electricity for local consumption."

Rather, section 9 of the act provided that TVA was to generate electricity "so far as may be consistent" with the requirements of flood control and navigation in the operation of its multiple-purpose dams. Section 23 removed any possible misunderstanding on this score by declaring the objective to be "the maximum generation of electric power consistent with flood control and navigation."

The act transferred to TVA a Government-built steam plant and clearly contemplated the construction and operation of additional steam plants when needed.

The power provisions of the act were specific. They required that power operations be "self-supporting and self-liquidating," but emphasis was on maximum service rather than maximum profits. TVA was expected to seek the wide and abundant use of electricity for the "fuller and better balanced development of the resources of the region." The act gave preference in the sale of electricity to nonprofit municipal and cooperative organizations operating "primarily for the purpose of supplying electricity" to citizens or members. TVA was directed to keep accurate records to accumulate data on costs of power generation and distribution for the benefit of the Congress, Federal and State agencies, and the public. The act, in short, shows that power in the unified development was a major consideration.

Finally, the act made clear that TVA's power facilities, as well as the chemical plants at Muscle Shoal, were to be available always for national defense.

NATIONAL DEFENSE AND TVA POWER GROWTH

The report is accurate in saying that the TVA power system has grown into the largest integrated power system in the country and similarly accurate in saying "TVA did not grow like Topsy. It grew by design." In the fiscal year 1956, the system generated more than 57 billion kilowatt-hours in a region where production in 1933 was only 1.5 billion kilowatt-hours.

Completely lacking in the report, however, is any reference to the major factors in development of the design—that during the life of TVA the Nation has engaged in the greatest war in history, that scientists have split the atom, that since 1951 the Nation has been engaged in a tremendous national defense effort based on atomic weapons, accompanied by atomic development for peacetime use, and requiring hitherto unheard of amounts of electricity.

During World War II, from 1939 to 1945, TVA raised power production from 2 billion kilowatt-hours to 12 billion kilowatt-hours by rapid construction of dams and hydro plants. During the war three-fourths of TVA's power was used for war purposes—to produce aluminum for airplanes, chemicals for munitions, fissionable materials for the atomic bomb, and other war materials. Beginning with the hostilities in Korea in 1951, an even vaster expansion of power has been demanded and met.

Since 1951, TVA's power output has been multiplied 3 times, from 18 billion kilowatt-hours to 57 billion kilowatt-hours. More than half TVA's power sales—56 percent in 1956—goes to the Atomic Energy Commission's huge plants and to other Federal defense installations. Between 1950 and 1956, these Federal agencies multiplied their demand for TVA power 15 times—from 2 billion kilowatt-hours to more than 30 billion kilowatt-hours.

At the same time, TVA has had to meet the normal growth in power demand in the region it serves in the same way that other power systems do. TVA power is distributed in an area of 80,000 square miles by 98 municipal, 51 cooperative, and 2 small private utilities. In this area, which has remained stable geographically since 1945, power use has continued to grow rapidly.

THE JOB OF ELECTRICAL DEVELOPMENT

The report falsely seeks to convey the impression that in 1945 the job of TVA, under the act, was finished, saying "TVA itself declared that the job of harnessing the Tennessee was complete." It is true that TVA in its 1945 report said rapid wartime construction had advanced its project so that "no other major stream was so completely controlled for the protection and benefit of man." About 11 million acre-feet of flood storage had been provided and a 630-mile channel substantially achieved.

But the same report also made clear that the TVA job was not complete, that with the end of the war "emphasis could again be directed toward the job of building a stronger and more fertile valley through the development of its basic resources of soil, forests, and minerals."

Power, one of the resources, was needed for that development, for farms, factories, and homes. The TVA report made clear that normal power use during the war had been retarded by lack of manpower, materials, and appliances.

That the electric-power job was not complete in 1945 is amply demonstrated by what has happened since, keeping in mind that the geographical area served has remained virtually unchanged. In this area, the municipal and coperative systems increased their total sales from 3 billion kilowatt-hours in 1945 to more than 14 billion kilowatt-hours in 1956. The number of customers more than doubled, from 600,000 to 1,425,000. Where a quarter of the farms had service, the proportion today is 93 percent. The average home in the region used 1,750 kilowatt-hours a year in 1945, today the average is nearing 5,800 kilowatt-hours. Industrial sales by the local distributors increased from 2 billion kilowatt-hours to 7 billion kilowatt-hours in 1956.

This growth has been the work of the people in the valley region since they elected, by municipal referenda and by formation of rural cooperatives in areas long ignored by the private utilities, to own and operate their own electric systems. In this they followed a long-established American tradition, for publicly owned systems have existed since 1882, the birth date of the electric industry.

The report claims TVA "seized and put out of business 20 electric companies." This is a curious way to describe a change in ownership in which municipalities and cooperatives joined with TVA in purchasing the privately owned electric facilities, paying their full value of $127 million (the local agencies paid nearly $69 million for distribution properties, TVA over $58 million for generating and transmission facilities). About 350,000 customers, one-fourth the present number, were involved in the transfers.

WHY TVA BUILDS STEAM PLANTS

The vast increase in the demand for power, and particularly the tremendous requirements of the AEC and other Federal defense agencies, answers the question raised in the report: "Why does TVA need steam plants when it has 30 major dams?" (TVA has constructed 20 dams, acquired 5 from a private company plus Wilson Dam taken over from the War Department, and directs the operation of 5 major privately owned dams as a part of the integrated system, with benefits to both TVA and the company.)

The fact is that the power requirements of the region, including requirements of Federal installations for the common defense of the Nation, have far outrun the hydroelectric resources of the region. Some sites remain that may be developed for flood control and other purposes, as well as power, but even with total development of all available hydro, steam plants will be required to meet the total power demand.

The fear expressed in the report that TVA could expand its steam generation in an unlimited manner without regard to the region it is in is entirely unjustified; while no precise boundaries are set, TVA is limited in its sales of power to the economical transmission distance from its hydroelectric projects. The location of steam plants does not affect that limitation.

Similarly, the charge that TVA has been buying its coal at nonunion rates is without foundation. TVA can set neither the price of coal nor miners' wages. It buys its coal—about 18 million tons a year—in the competitive, free-enterprise market. Obviously, it buys its coal just as cheaply as it can, as any other well-managed enterprise would do, letting contracts to the lowest bidders. Under the law, TVA cannot differentiate between mines which pay high or low wages, or which are union or nonunion, except to require bidders to pay the minimum wages required on production for Federal agencies. Such minimum wages are established for each coalfield by the United States Secretary of Labor under the Walsh-Healey Act. Private utilities are subject to no such requirement and can buy coal where they will, regardless of the Walsh-Healey Act.

All TVA's coal contracts provide for escalation in price to compensate for general wage increases.

TVA POWER MORE THAN PAYS ITS WAY

The consumers of TVA power pay for it without subsidy from taxpayers anywhere. Power revenues cover all costs of operation—the cost of coal and materials, wages and salaries, maintenance—and straight-line depreciation, together with payments in lieu of taxes to States and counties. In addition those revenues have provided a margin which amounts to an average annual return of 4 percent on the power investment over the entire 23 years of operation. An operation which earns a 4 percent annual return on the investment obviously is not subsidized.

Sometimes attempts are made as in this report to disparage the financial record of TVA power operations by declaring that TVA does not pay interest. Interest, of course, is paid on debt, and the interest payments of any private business vary with the size of its debts. TVA, like any utility, has paid interest on its outstanding bonds. Sixty-five million dollars in bonds were originally issued, but the last $14 million outstanding were retired in August 1955, and no interest has been paid since that date. What the report is contending in effect is that because TVA does pay interest not on debt, but on equity capital, that money made available for investment by the Government as owner of the system, its financial record is unsound. There is no basis for such a conclusion. It is, of course, entirely fair to examine the extent to which TVA power system earnings have been adequate to cover the cost of money to the owner (the Government), assuming that the Government borrowed the funds to invest in the power system. The answer to this fair question is clear. The 4 percent return which the TVA power system has earned on the investment, after paying all costs of operation including depreciation, is about double the cost of money to the Government during the period in which the system was built.

TVA PAYMENTS ON INVESTMENT AHEAD OF SCHEDULE

Under a provision of the Government Corporations Appropriation Act, 1948, TVA is required to pay into the United States Treasury, including retirements of bonds, amounts which will equal the Treasury funds invested in the power system within 40 years from the time electric facilities so financed are placed in operation.

TVA is well ahead of schedule on these payments, which amount to an average annual requirement of 2½ percent, thus disposing of the claim in the report that "TVA has at no time repaid more than 1.4 percent of its total investment in any one year."

On the basis of paying 2½ percent, or one-fortieth, of the Treasury investment each year, TVA should have paid by the end of the fiscal year 1956 about $115.6 million. The actual payments to that date were $186.5 million, about 60 percent ahead of the requirement. Prior to the 1948 act, TVA had paid $23.6 million to the Treasury. This brings the total payments from power revenues to more than $210 million at the end of fiscal 1956. (An additional $34.8 million of non-power proceeds has also been paid, bringing the total to nearly a quarter of a billion dollars.)

It should be pointed out here that no shift in ownership is involved. After the Treasury has received the equivalent of the Federal investment in the facilities, the Government continues to own them and is entitled to the earnings from them.

TAX PAYMENTS ON TVA POWER

The report includes the standard misrepresentations of the payments in lieu of taxes made by the TVA and the taxes and tax equivalents paid by the local distributors, and adds a new one. In the first place, it attempts to compare the State and local tax payments on TVA power with the total taxes of electric utility companies, including income taxes. In addition, it gives the impression that the payments on TVA power simply replace the taxes formerly paid by the private utilities at the time their facilities were purchased.

This is not true. The fact is that the State and local taxes of about $11 million paid by TVA and the distributors in the fiscal year 1956 was about 225 percent greater than the total of State and local taxes paid in 1937, when the production and sale of electricity was substantially in private hands. In the rest of the country the State and local taxes of private utilities in 1955 were 203 percent above 1937, a differential in favor of the TVA area of 22 percentage points.

The Hoover Commission Task Force on Payments in Lieu of Taxes and Shared Revenues in June 1955 recommended that the provision for payments in lieu of taxes by TVA remain undisturbed, since "the present system is working to the general satisfaction of the State and local governments in the TVA area."

"This payment arrangement," the task force report said, on page 62, "conceptually reimburses the recipient governments not merely of potential property tax receipts but of all potential taxes of those governments referable to the power property and its operation."

Under section 13 of the TVA Act, TVA pays 5 percent of its revenues from sale of power, excepting from sales to agencies of the Federal Government itself, to the States and counties in which it owns property or sells power. The electric cooperatives, on their operations, pay the applicable State taxes, and the municipal systems make tax equivalent payments generally based on the combined State, county, and local tax rate applied to the net value of their systems.

In the fiscal year 1955, the $10 million of tax payments by the TVA and the distributors amounted to 6.2 percent of the combined power revenues, save those from sales to the Federal Government which are exempt by law. In comparison, the State and local taxes of a dozen private utilities adjacent to the TVA area ranged from 4.8 percent to 11.3 percent, averaging 7.9 percent, according to data of the Federal Power Commission.

TVA's in-lieu payments make it the largest single taxpayer in the State of Tennessee, according to State records. In the four largest cities using TVA power, and probably in many smaller cities, the publicly owned electric systems are likewise the largest taxpayers.

With State and local taxes disposed of, Federal income taxes can be considered. TVA is not required to pay Federal income taxes, since it is a Federal agency and the income from the power system belongs to the Government. The important fact is that the return on the investment is sufficient to cover the cost of money by a substantial margin. Although there would be no advantage to designating a part or all of this margin as income taxes, perhaps a hypothetical illustration will be helpful. In the fiscal year 1955 the net income from power operations was $47.9 million, representing a return of 4.2 percent on the net average power investment of $1,130 million. An allowance for the cost of money at 2 percent on this investment, amounting to $22.6 million, would leave $25.3 million. On this profit a private company would have paid an income tax of a little over $13 million to the Government. In the case of TVA the total income belongs to the Government.

THE TVA YARDSTICK

The report displays the usual reluctance of TVA critics to discuss the real yardstick, the public demonstration of economical power production and distribution. "Where the average cost per kilowatt-hour for the Nation's residential customers in 1954 was 2.69 cents, TVA consumers pay only 1.24 cents," says the report. "This is what TVA and its public power advocates call the TVA yardstick—the low rates that are supposed to set an example to the rest of the private electric industry."

The yardstick has often been thus misinterpreted to indicate that TVA was intended to arrive at rates which would then become a precise measure for electric rates everywhere. On the contrary, TVA has always recognized that conditions of power generation and distribution vary from region to region. However, the careful records which the Congress directed TVA to keep can be a source of information for purposes of comparison to weigh likenesses and differences.

But the yardstick has other useful and more general applications, based on the congressional criteria for success of power operations geared primarily to maximum service rather than maximum profit. The report points this up when it mentions only the comparative costs per kilowatt-hour for residential service between the TVA area and the Nation at large. It leaves out the other side of the equation—the effect of low rates on electrical use.

In the TVA area, average annual use by homes in the 12 months ending with May 1956 reached 5,778 kilowatt-hours per customer, more than double the national average home use—a demonstration of the well-known American industrial principle of mass, low-cost production and distribution inducing mass consumption.

Again, the TVA experience, in which the TVA costs of generation and transmission are reported separately from the costs of local distribution, gave a new insight into one of the mysteries of electric service—the costs of distribution as distinguished from the costs of generation and transmission.

The practical effects of the rate demonstration were revealed in a recent study which showed that the closer private utilities were to the TVA area, and to the public power demonstrations in the Pacific Northwest, the lower their residential rates tended to be. Consumers served by private utilities neighboring TVA, for example, are saving millions of dollars annually because of the TVA demonstration. The more remote they are, the higher their rates. Similarly, rural electric cooperatives buying wholesale power from private utilities pay lower rates per kilowatt-hour the closer they are to the public power areas.

The TVA area, in another demonstration, led the Nation in rural electrification, which was virtually nonexistent in 1933; in the Nation, only 11 percent of the farms had service, and in the present TVA region the proportion was 3 percent. In 1934 and 1935, the first cooperatives to offer service on a broad area basis were formed in the Tennessee Valley region, demonstrating that widespread rural electrification was feasible. They became the model for the REA cooperatives which, beginning in 1936, have brought electric service to more than 2.5 million farms in the Nation and have spurred private utilities to provide service to an additional 1¼ million farms.

All the Nation's taxpayers are benefiting through lower national defense power bills, not only from the low-cost power supplied by the TVA to AEC and other national defense agencies, but also because the TVA demonstration provided a lever which enabled the AEC to contract for large supplies of power for its atomic plants from privately owned public utilities at rates well below the rates of ordinary industrial service, even in large amounts. AEC is buying more than 50 billion kilowatt hours a year from TVA and two private utilities; this means that for every mill per kilowatt hour of saving, compared with what AEC would have had to pay in the absence of TVA, the Nation's taxpayers are benefiting to the extent of more than $50 million a year in reduced defense power bills. Over the 25-year periods of the contracts, every mill of annual saving per kilowatt hour will add up to $1¼ billion, a sum equal to the total TVA power investment, including construction in progress, at the end of the 1955 fiscal year.

These facts may suggest why the TVA yardstick or demonstration is attacked so bitterly, why the facts about it are consistently distorted, and why the private utility industry is determined to destroy it.

TENNESSEE VALLEY NOT A FAVORED REGION

Contrary to the impression sought to be conveyed in the last paragraph of the report, the Tennessee Valley region is not favored in Federal expenditures. The Federal Government spends money for a wide variety of purposes intended to advance the general welfare, and not primarily to benefit particular States, regions, or groups. However, since the report raises the point, it can be answered. The fact is that in the years 1934-54, total Federal expenditures amounted to $5,850 per capita in the country; in the Tennessee Valley region, where the TVA expenditures were only a small proportion of the total, Federal expenditures per capita were only $2,840, less than half the national figure.

Even so, the price is further distorted by the use of the figures purporting to show how much TVA has cost Minnesota and Iowa. Most of the appropriated funds of TVA have been invested in power facilities and, as has been shown, will be returned to the Treasury in 40 years. A large proportion of the power investment is devoted to the national defense, which is as important to these States as to the rest of the country. Some of the funds have been used for TVA's fertilizer and munitions development, with strong benefits to midwestern agriculture and to national security. The Tennessee navigation channel has expanded the opportunities for interregional commerce, as for example—expanding the southeastern market for midwest grain.

At the same time, the flow of taxes and Federal expenditures is not a one-way street, taxes from the Tennessee Valley region contribute to the expenditures in the rest of the country for various projects and activities in the general welfare. Moreover, the valley region is contributing a proportionally larger share; in 1933, when TVA was created, the seven Tennessee Valley States contributed 3.4 percent of all the individual income taxes collected in the Nation; in 1954, the proportion was more than 6 percent. In 1954 taxpayers from these States paid $986,069,000 more than they would have paid had the proportion remained constant.

Report to the People of the 22d Congressional District of California

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOE HOLT

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include a report to the folks of the 22d Congressional District of California on my voting record for the 1st and 2d sessions of the 84th Congress. The purpose of this report is to collect and put in one place some 25,000 pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. This information is not generally available to the people of my district, and I believe it should be made available to every citizen.

It has been my policy, and shall continue to be, through the media of weekly news columns, Reports from Washington, and Legislative Questionnaires to keep the folks I represent in Congress informed as to what I am doing as their Representative and to give them every opportunity to participate in their Government.

The descriptions of the bills and the amendments or motions as contained in the report are for the purposes of identification only; no attempt is made to describe the legislation completely or to elaborate upon the issues involved.

I just add this word of explanation as sometimes the official descriptive titles do not always reflect the entire purpose of the legislation. Upon request, I, of course, will be pleased to furnish detailed information concerning particular legislation and the reasons for my vote.

An explanation of the terms used below will be found at the end of the report.

It is my suggestion that readers look this résumé over before continuing.

Voting record of Congressman JOE HOLT, 22d District, California (84th Cong.)

[1] Not voting. Would have voted "yea" if present.

[2] Not voting. Would have voted "nay" if present.

AN EXPLANATION OF TERMS

First. A bill may pass, or be defeated, by one of the following kind of votes:

1. Voice vote: The Speaker first asks all in favor to say "aye" then those opposed to say "nay." If there is no question as to the result, this is sufficient.

2. Division: If the result of the voice vote is in doubt, the Speaker asks those in favor to stand, then those opposed to stand. He counts in each instance and announces the result. If he is in doubt, or if demand is made by one-fifth of a quorum, then—

3. Tellers are ordered. A Member on each side of the question is appointed as teller, and they take their places at each side of the center aisle. Those in favor walk through and are counted. Those opposed do likewise. The result settles most questions, but any Member, supported by one-fifth of a quorum, can ask for a rollcall. This privilege is guaranteed by the Constitution.

4. Rollcalls place each Member on record on the particular measure involved. Each Member's name is called and his vote recorded. Rollcalls constitute the official voting record of the House.

Second. The type of bill can be determined by the letters which precede its number. All bills that originate in the House are designated by an H; those that originate in the Senate by an S. There are four main types:

1. H. R. (S.) designates a bill which, when passed by both Houses in identical form and signed by the President, becomes law.

2. H. J. Res. (S. J. Res.) designates a joint resolution which must pass both Houses and be signed by the President before becoming law. It is generally used for continuing the life of an existing law, or in submitting to the States a constitutional amendment, in which case it does not require the signature of the President but must be passed by a two-thirds majority of both Houses.

3. H. Con. Res. (S. Con. Res.) designates a concurrent resolution. To become effective it must be passed by both the House and Senate but does not require the President's signature. It is used to take joint action which is purely within the jurisdiction of Congress. Many emergency laws carry the provision that they may be terminated by concurrent resolution, thus eliminating the possibility of a Presidential veto.

4. H. Res. (S. Res.) designates a simple resolution of either body. It does not require approval by the other body nor the signature of the President. It is used to deal with matters that concern one House only, such as changing rules, creating special committees, and so forth.

Third. Recommittal: Generally, on all important bills, a motion to recommit the bill to a committee, with or without instructions, is voted upon by the House before it votes upon passage of the bill. If such a motion is adopted, it means that the bill will be changed, delayed, or even killed. However, when a motion to recommit is accompanied by instructions, the vote generally indicates whether the Member is in favor of or opposed to the change in the legislation proposed by the instructions and does not necessarily indicate his position on the bill as a whole. A motion to recommit with instructions, if adopted, does not kill the bill.

Fourth. Conference: Representatives from both Houses of Congress meet in conference to work out differences existing in the legislation as passed by the two bodies. Upon conclusion of their conference, a report is submitted to each House setting forth the agreements reached. Each House then must act by way of adopting or rejecting the report in whole or in part.

Fifth. A quorum call consists of a calling of the roll of Members to determine whether or not a quorum—a majority of Members—is present. No business may be conducted when it is found that a quorum is not present.

Polish Courage Displayed at Poznan

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, at Poznan the Polish people gave unmistakable evidence of a spirit that is willing to assert itself against oppression no matter how strong the adversary may be.

Time and again in the long history of Poland its people have shown a willingness to face death in its effort to be free. No people in all of Europe have fought more relentlessly nor shown greater courage in the cause of freedom. They have won the admiration of all free people.

When the people of Poznan cried out for bread, they were met by tanks that gave them death instead. This was the Communist answer to the cry of starvation. No matter how strong the language used by the present leaders in Moscow in denunciation of Stalin and his regime of cruelty, the fact remains that they are attached to and carry out the same kind of cruelty for which they have criticized him. All of this goes to show that at heart communism is the same no matter who the Soviet leaders are, and, that when the mask that covers their faces is removed we see the same hideous face of communism depicting the same cruelty that has always been the case.

The Communist government in Poland would like us to believe that their so-called workers' government in that country is all that its name implies. But the incident at Poznan clearly shows that it is in no true sense a workers' government. It is nothing other than a dictatorial government that is using the workers as slaves to strengthen the Moscow leadership and to strip Poland of its resources for the benefit of maintaining the Soviet rule in Russia. No matter how loud the claim of the Communist rulers that they have the situation well in hand, the true fact is that they do not have any such hold on the Polish people.

The Polish people are not the kind that will submit to despotic rule, and Soviet Russia will never be able to truthfully say that they have them in hand. Beneath the domination that now prevails in Poland there is a determination upon the part of the people to again enjoy freedom and liberty. That spirit will never die. Oppression will make it stronger and shorten the time when it will assert itself again. There is nothing more certain in the history of any nation than that love of freedom, both political and religious. In Poland it cannot be killed; it cannot be held down, nor for any great length of time be denied to its people. Freedom is the heart and soul of Poland.

This is no new element in the character of the people of that land. It has always been so, even in the darkest days of its history. There is no people of any nation who have fought longer, endured greater hardship, and surmounted more obstacles in the fight for freedom than Poland and its people. The spirit of Poland will never die.

It is my opinion, and I am strongly convinced, that the free nations of the world through the United Nations Organization should take a strong stand in support of Poland, reestablish its sovereignty as a free nation, and return to it the land that was so unjustly taken from it. It is time that acts of oppression such as were displayed at Poznan should be denounced in no uncertain terms and the rule of justice established.

Report to the People of the 15th Congressional District of Michigan by Congressman John D. Dingell

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN D. DINGELL
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, now that the second session of the 84th Congress has become history, I am making a report to my people of the 15th Congressional District of Michigan on my stewardship and program in this 84th Congress.

I was first elected to Congress by a special election held December 13, 1955, to fill a vacancy left by the death of my father, Congressman John D. Dingell, who represented this district for 23 years from its founding until his death.

I have served my constituents on the Public Works Committee, where I helped frame the great Federal Highway Construction Act passed by this Congress. It was as a member of that committee that I joined other liberals in the successful fight for the so-called Bacon-Davis amendment which guarantees that the prevailing fair wage in the area be paid on any highway construction project in which Federal funds are used.

I am also a member of that committee's Subcommittee on Rivers and Harbors and have worked to help secure a number of important harbor improvement projects in the Great Lakes areas.

I maintain an office in the district, to serve my constituents, located at 7310 Grand River Avenue, Detroit, staffed by my able legislative assistant, Mr. Charles S. Brown, and Mrs. Theresa Tabin, my secretary in the district.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

SOCIAL SECURITY

I have worked on a number of legislative projects including the improvement of the social security program by reduction of age requirements for men and women, increase in benefit schedules, free hospitalization for all recipients of social security benefits, and by extending permanent disability benefits, at any age, to persons covered by social security. I supported the improvements in the social security amendments passed by this session of Congress, and authored a number of bills on these and other related subjects.

TAXATION

During this session I introduced bills which provided for tax relief for low-income groups and small business. Under my program these things could have been accomplished by a revision of existing laws to close tax loopholes and by increasing individual exemptions from $600 to $700. Tax relief of $80 to $120 per year to an average family of four with an income of $5,000 per year would have been possible, together with a balanced budget and reduction of the national debt.

I also introduced a bill to revise corporate tax rates to permit fairer treatment of small firms by revising taxes to benefit small business. This would be accomplished by raising taxes slightly on large firms on a graduated scale. This bill was aimed not only at helping small business, but also at preventing the mergers which are leading our country to economic rule by huge corporate giants.

CIVIL RIGHTS

Shortly after coming to Congress I introduced a series of bills aimed at guaranteeing to all Americans the full exercise of the rights given them by the Constitution and laws of the United States. The most comprehensive of these, H. R. 8989, outlawed discrimination in public facilities, transportation and housing, and provided for protection of citizens from violence and lynching. These bills would also protect citizens in their right to vote, create a Commission on Civil Rights, and establish a Civil Rights Division within the Department of Justice with broad enforcement powers.

I was among the sponsors of H. R. 627, the civil-rights bill of 1956, and was one of the leaders in the small group who filed the discharge petition that brought the matter to the floor of the House for debate and passage.

IMMIGRATION

I joined in the sponsorship of an omnibus immigration bill eliminating discriminatory immigration quotas, and removing inequities in the present McCarran-Walter Act. I also introduced bills to extend the Displaced Persons Act and permit 45,000 more displaced persons, including orphans, to enter this country. These bills also eliminate the mortgage imposed on quotas of immigrants and help persons in need of refuge to find haven in the United States.

EDUCATION AND HOUSING

I supported the Federal aid-to-education bill which would have provided for over $4 billion in Federal aid for construction of schools. I voted for the Federal housing bill which passed both the House and Senate and which will provide for liberalized home-improvement loans under title I and the continuation of the liberal FHA loan guaranty provisions for purchase and construction of homes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a part of my stewardship to the people of my district and my legislative action on their behalf during this 84th Congress.

It is my sincere hope that future sessions will see the completion of this program, and it is my prayer that my humble efforts will contribute to bring it about.

Views of Hon. Estes Kefauver, of Tennessee, on Dixon-Yates Staff Report

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ESTES KEFAUVER
OF TENNESSEE
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement by me on the Dixon-Yates staff report.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At the conclusion of the Dixon-Yates hearings conducted by a panel of the Senate Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee, Senator O'MAHONEY instructed the subcommittee staff to prepare a draft report. We have reviewed the report and have approved its release.

In addition, there are certain aspects of the Dixon-Yates matter which I feel it is necessary to comment upon briefly.

This whole plan was crudely conceived in darkness for the base and ulterior motive of destroying the Tennessee Valley Authority. Then Director of the Bureau of the Budget, Joseph M. Dodge, brought Adolphe H. Wenzell, vice president and director of the First Boston Corp., a private investment firm, into the Budget Bureau for the purpose of studying TVA in May 1953. He worked in secret. Employees of the Budget Bureau were warned not to mention Wenzell or reveal his presence in the Bureau or the task to which he was assigned.

In this case there exists substantial evidence indicating that Mr. Adams, Mr. Hughes, and Mr. Strauss deliberately attempted to conceal the conflict of interest growing out of Mr. Wenzell's dual role in the Dixon-Yates deal—a conflict which the President's own Attorney General now labels so contrary to public policy as to render the agreement null and void.

WENZELL'S PLAN

At the conclusion of his initial period of work Mr. Wenzell produced a plan, one part of which was the Dixon-Yates proposal. This, too, was held in secret by the Bureau. A copy of the Wenzell plan was withheld from this committee, upon a plea of executive privilege by Rowland R. Hughes, then Director of the Bureau, despite the fact that it had been shown to Herbert Hoover and to Mr. Wenzell's superior in the private firm of the First Boston Corp., George D. Woods, who recognized in it a vast field for exploitation by his and similar firms.

Mr. Woods was frank to admit that he saw in it not only an opening wedge into the TVA, but also the opening of all public-power investments of the Federal Government for private exploitation. Mr. Woods testified before our committee:

"I was impelled to come down here (to see Dodge) because my business is the security business and I thought it would be fine if there were untold millions or billions of dollars of securities sold on the market at a profit to security dealers" (p. 512).

PLEAS OF PRIVILEGE

Mr. Hughes was not alone among Government officials in pleading privilege and thus conspiring to conceal the facts. It will be recalled that our investigation was obstructed by numerous pleas of executive privilege. As a result we were impeded in developing the facts with respect to certain actions taken by White House representatives, by Mr. Hughes, and by the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, Adm. Lewis L. Strauss, and by the Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, J. Sinclair Armstrong. I call attention to this aspect of our hearings at this time because there exists persuasive evidence that various high officials in the Eisenhower administration have violated the criminal code.

The Government's answer in the suit filed by Dixon-Yates in the Court of Claims now alleges that the contract was illegal because it violated the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 and the Public Utility Holding Company Act. The Government has also taken the position that the contract was null and void and against public policy because of the conflict of interest growing out of the dual capacity in which Adolphe H. Wenzell served during the negotiations of the power contract.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

From the standpoint of legal propriety, the conduct of the Department of Justice is highly questionable. In October of 1954 Attorney General Brownell advised the Comptroller, Joseph Campbell, then an Atomic Energy Commissioner, that the Dixon-Yates contract was a legal one for the Commission to execute under the Atomic Energy Act.

In opposition to the State of Tennessee both before the SEC and in the United States court of appeals, the Department argued the Dixon-Yates contract was valid under both the Atomic Energy Act and the Public Utility Holding Company Act.

Now the Department, in its present answer, takes precisely the opposite position.

The Justice Department's own answer to the Dixon-Yates suit in the United States Court of Claims also asserts:

"The alleged agreement set forth in the petition is in violation of the statutes and laws of the United States and is unlawful, null and void, and contrary to public policy, for the following reasons, among others:

"(A) * * * by reason of the activities of one Adolphe H. Wenzell. * * * The role played by Wenzell in consulting with and advising and representing the Government, the First Boston Corp., and plaintiff (Dixon-Yates) with respect to the same project and the same alleged agreement with contemplated benefits to the First Boston Corp., as well as to plaintiff, involved a conflict of interest so contrary to public policy as to render the alleged agreement null and void."

POSSIBLE CRIMINAL IMPLICATIONS

The allegations in the Government's answer thus give a new meaning to the various pleas of executive privilege which were asserted by the Chairman of the SEC, by Mr. Strauss, and by Mr. Hughes. They also give new meaning to the refusal by Mr. Sherman Adams to testify when Chairman Armstrong disclosed that Mr. Adams had intervened in the hearings before the SEC at the very time Mr. Wenzell was scheduled to testify. And finally, the answer throws new light upon the concealment by Mr. Hughes of Mr. Wenzell's activities in the Bureau of the Budget and the elimination of his name from the published chronologies.

Indictments and convictions have been obtained under section 371 of title 18 of the United States Code, which provides:

"If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States, or any agency thereof in any manner or for any purpose and one or more of such persons do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both."

The offense under this section of the criminal code is that of conspiring to defraud the United States Government or any agency thereof. The essential ingredient of the criminal offense is the failure of a Government official to discharge conscientiously the duties of his office or his failure to administer Federal law in an unbiased manner. The crime is one of exercising improper influence. I believe that even with the limited facts available to us it is clear that the Dixon-Yates deal involved actions on the part of public officials which should be presented to a grand jury without further delay.

Briefly, the facts are these:

Mr. Adams, assistant to the President, telephoned the Chairman of the SEC and asked him to postpone the appearance of Mr. Wenzell. The reason Mr. Adams gave, according to Mr. Armstrong, was that he wanted to consult counsel on whether the Government should object to Mr. Wenzell's being called as a witness. Mr. Adams also stated at the time he requested the postponement, according to Mr. Armstrong, that he had a problem in Congress that week—the problem was the appropriation for the TVA transmission line which was scheduled for a vote within a day or two after Wenzell was first scheduled to appear.

WHY?

Why did Mr. Adams want to consult counsel about Wenzell's scheduled appearance? What bearing did Mr. Wenzell's testimony have on the problem which Mr. Adams faced in the Congress that same week? Did Mr. Adams know at the time he telephoned Armstrong what Wenzell's testimony would disclose?

What reason could he possibly have had for intervening in the SEC proceeding if it was not to prevent the disclosure of Wenzell's role, which the administration's own lawyers now say rendered the contract illegal? And if this was his purpose, it is obvious that Mr. Adams—had he succeeded—would have concealed information concerning the legality of a contract to which the United States Government was a party.

If Mr. Adams had a simple and proper explanation for his actions and his conduct, why didn't he avail himself of the opportunity to advance it when the panel asked him to appear following Chairman Armstrong's testimony? Nor is it too late even now for Mr. Adams to explain his actions. But if he fails to give a satisfactory explanation, the Attorney General, it seems to me, has no alternative but to present the case to a grand jury.

POSITION OF INFLUENCE

Mr. Adams' position and influence is well known. He holds a position of great power and importance. The facts show that he first used his office to push through a deal which his own administration now says is against the public interest. He later used his high office to try to prevent public disclosure of wrongdoing, and he finally used his position as Assistant to the President to frustrate the efforts of a congressional committee to develop fully and completely all the facts surrounding this affair.

Mr. Adams was not alone in perpetrating and carrying out a deliberate plan of concealment to avoid public disclosure of wrongdoing in the Dixon-Yates case. Mr. Hughes, the former Director of the Bureau of the Budget, insisted when he first appeared before our panel that he knew nothing about the First Boston Corp.; he knew nothing about any question of conflict of interest having been raised; and knew nothing about Mr. Wenzell's activities in the Dixon-Yates affair.

Consider his testimony against the testimony of Mr. Dixon, Mr. Wenzell and Mr. James, Mr. Dixon's counsel. Before the hearings were concluded these individuals and others testified that the question of a conflict of interest was discussed with Mr.

Hughes as early as February 1954. Now Mr. Hughes is not a stupid man. How could he possibly forget, in a matter as important as Dixon-Yates, that on several occasions at least three different people discussed with him the seriousness of the situation created by Wenzell's dual position. Moreover, the two letters Hughes wrote Senator LISTER HILL were calculated to deceive. And his testimony that Wenzell was not a negotiator of the Dixon-Yates proposal is flatly contradicted not only by Wenzell and AEC but also by documents that it took us almost 6 months to get Hughes to produce from his own files.

Was President Eisenhower aware of these facts? Was he aware of Sherman Adams' activities and Mr. Hughes' concealment of Wenzell's name when the chronologies were issued by the Bureau of the Budget and the Atomic Energy Commission? We must assume that the President knew nothing about these matters. Otherwise it is difficult to explain why the President would have stated at a press conference (July 6, 1955) that Mr. Wenzell's role in the Dixon-Yates affair was a proper one.

But now the facts are available to the President. Our investigation developed them for him. They have now been confirmed by his own Attorney General. But still there is no indication that the President will insist upon punishment for those who abused his trust and breached their oath of office. If he is still unconvinced that Mr. Adams betrayed him and the American people, the President can quickly resolve the question if he would direct his assistant to comply with our request that he testify under oath.

The American people are entitled to the full facts. The President is justified, under certain circumstances and the course of normal Government administration, particularly where the security of the Nation is involved, to protect the papers and persons of the executive branch from unwarranted disclosures. But it is well established—and the Teapot Dome case is an important precedent—that executive privilege cannot be sustained and should not be used for the purpose of concealing fraud, wrongdoing, or crime.

Résumé of the 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. HARLEY O. STAGGERS

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Speaker, the record of the 84th Congress is now history. It has been a great personal experience for me to serve the people of the Second Congressional District of West Virginia and our country for 8 years as a Member of the House of Representatives. We have spent many hours each day in committee and on the House floor in preparing and debating legislation which comprises the record of the 84th Congress. We now await the decision of the American people. We each diligently tried to do what we believe is best for our district and country and our accomplishments, or what we failed to accomplish, await the judgment of our constituency. I feel we have presented a good record and that the 84th Congress will go down in history as one of the hardest working and one of the most productive.

This was a Congress that put the future of our Nation ahead of narrow partisan considerations. We enacted a vast program of health and medical research which means hope for the stricken and for those in need in the years to come. We enacted a great highway-building program that will clear the congested arteries of commerce. It was a Congress that looked to the future in our defense and foreign policies. We have set up the framework to safeguard the security and the interests of the American people. For the workers, we increased the minimum wage to $1 an hour. We approved the flood-insurance program to help those in the areas of natural disasters.

The Democratic Party, as usual, continued to work for the benefits of the majority of the people and stood behind legislation for the greatest good for the greatest number. We fought against special interests and supported a humanitarian program. It is my belief that the past Congress was one of the most fruitful in history because it has touched the lives of more American men and women than any Congress in the past. It was a responsible Congress which looked to the needs of all our people, as it is the people who count in the final showing.

The 84th Congress approved appropriations for more than $34 billion for the Department of Defense for the next year. Preservation of the defense strength of our country is the greatest guaranty of security for the free world against aggression. To help support our national-defense efforts and promote international security we have approved a total of $3.8 billion to be expended under provisions of the National Security Act. This program provides economic and military aid and assistance to our overseas allies which gives to us a better defense program and strengthens our network of defense throughout the world through the cooperation of other free nations.

For the farmers we passed the soil bank program. We enacted legislation which exempts farmers from paying the Federal excise tax on gasoline and other special fuels used on the farm. This legislation is expected to give farmers about $60 million in tax relief. In the vital field of soil conservation we extended for 2 years the authority of the Federal Government to regulate soil conservation payments to our farmers. One of the major items was the allocating of funds to establish research centers in various sections of the country for the purpose of studying the forestry program. We approved funds for the Extension Service, watershed protection and flood prevention, marketing service, Rural Electrification Administration, Commodity Credit Corporation, Farm Credit Administration, and for other loan, credit, and assistance programs administered by the Department of Agriculture.

It is pleasing to know that Congress enacted legislation for public library service which is primarily designed to assist in bringing books and library services to rural families. It was disappointing to me, however, that this Congress did not pass legislation providing Federal assistance to our school systems. To me this is one of the most pressing problems confronting America today. There is a definite need in our country for better school buildings and other facilities to improve our overall school system. As our population continues to grow, more pupils are entering schools and many of our institutions are overcrowded and are in need of better schoolrooms. I am happy to report, however, that Congress passed a bill to increase the allocation for the school milk and lunch program. This is another important and significant measure approved by this Congress affecting the health and welfare of our schoolchildren.

In an effort to improve the veterans program of this grateful Nation the Congress this year granted an additional appropriation for all veterans benefits. Our Nation has the greatest veterans program of any nation in the world. This program includes education and training, insurance, housing, compensation and pensions, medical services, and many other benefits for veterans and their dependents. We failed, however, to increase pensions for disabled veterans and increase rates of compensation to veterans for service-connected disabilities.

The Water Pollution Control Act to assist States and local governments in the prevention and control of water pollution was a major step taken by this Congress. This will be helpful to the cities and communities in the construction of necessary draining works to prevent the discharge of undertreated or inadequately treated sewage or waste into any waters.

I am also pleased to report that Congress amended the present narcotic laws to strengthen the penalty of unlawful acquisition, transportation, and sale of narcotics and provides a death penalty for the sale of heroin to juveniles.

One of the major accomplishments was the passage of a record $32.9 billion highway-construction program. This is the biggest roadbuilding program in our Nation's history and one long overdue.

Another major accomplishment during this Congress was approval of major innovations in the Social Security program giving additional benefits to the workers of this Nation. The two major changes in the Social Security Act would first allow physically or mentally disabled workers to obtain cash benefits at age 50; secondly, reduce the retirement age of women workers from 65 to 62. The measure also extends old-age and survivors insurance coverage to lawyers, dentists, and other self-employed persons who have been excluded from social security coverage in the past.

The record of the 84th Congress bespeaks a deep interest in the people who work for a living. This Congress has made a magnificent record, but much remains yet to be done for the welfare and prosperity of our farm families.

Additional strides must be taken in the area of housing for the lower income groups and the aged. Additional legislation is needed in the field of labor and management relations so that these two great segments of our society engaged in production might meet across the bargaining table on an equal basis. Additional legislation is needed in the field of social security aid to our dependent children and the handicapped. Legislative progress must be made in the development of atomic energy for the conservation and development of our natural resources. In the field of foreign policy bolder steps must be taken to insure our own national security and peace in the world. It was sorely disappointing to me that the Senate did not act on the House-passed bill to increase pensions for disabled veterans and an increase in the rates of compensation payable to veterans for service-connected disabilities.

The record of the 84th Congress is something that I am proud to have had a part in since Congress more thoroughly reflects the thinking of the people than any other branch of the Government. There remain issues to be resolved before this country can be said to be directly at peace with prosperity. The rights of our individual citizens regardless of race, creed or national origin need additional legislative protection. Assistance is needed in our educational facilities. This assistance obviously must come from the Federal Government and should come in such a fashion that local control over such facilities may be retained.

Judge Harlan G. Palmer

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOSEPH F. HOLT
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, July 27, 1956, I called the attention of my colleagues to the passing of Judge Harlan G. Palmer. His contribution to the community which I represent in Congress, the city of Los Angeles, entire State of California, and our country, earned him the respect and admiration of all citizens.

His contribution went far beyond that of being editor and publisher of the Citizen News. He personally participated actively, day and night, in making our community a better place to live. Most folks, when they talk of Hollywood, speak of movie stars and the entertainment world. Judge Palmer was a vital part of this entertainment world, but, even more important, he was vitally interested in good, honest government and a clean, healthy city. His strong moral fiber served as a guiding light for me on many occasions. We shall miss him.

Judge Palmer had been a resident of Los Angeles for the last 45 years, all of which were spent as a newspaper publisher and active participant in the civic life of the city.

A drafted candidate for district attorney to oppose underworld forces in 1936, he received 48½ percent of the total votes cast, although he had not actively sought election.

In 1929 Judge Palmer was appointed to the Los Angeles Board of Water and Power Commissioners. This was at a time when contracts were being drawn between the southland and the United States Government for water and power from Hoover Dam.

As the commission's delegate chosen to achieve peace with the citizens of Owens Valley, his services were hailed as invaluable.

He later served without compensation as special attorney for the city council in an investigation of the water and power department.

Again, without fee, he successfully represented Dr. John P. Buckley, foreman of the 1934 county grand jury, in a libel action brought because of a report the grand jury had prepared against the county purchasing department.

Hollywood's first practicing attorney, Judge Palmer was appointed in 1915 as one of the six judges of the Los Angeles justice court, forerunner of the present municipal court system.

He was born in Le Roy, Minn., March 19, 1885. He received his elementary and high school education in his hometown, later attending the University of Minnesota, College of Liberal Arts, and the University of Southern California, College of Law.

During his boyhood, he worked at such jobs as driving the neighbors' cows to pasture, pulling mustard out of oatfields, and picking up potatoes after the plow. Judge Palmer's father was a lumber and coal merchant, so his early duties also included shoveling coal out of flatcars and piling lumber.

At the age of 14, he went to work in a country general merchandise store in the afternoons after school, on Saturdays, and during the summer vacation months. During the summer, the hours were from 6:30 a. m. until 10 p. m. on the first 5 days of the week and on Saturday nights until the last farmer had left town some time between midnight and 1 a. m.

When he graduated from high school, he was offered the management of a similar store in another country town 8 miles distant.

But Mr. Palmer had decided to go to university and start a 6-year law course. He worked his way through 2 years of university by carrying a morning newspaper route, working as a janitor and printer's devil in a printshop, waiting table in a nearby restaurant, and working full time during summer vacations.

At the start of his third college year, he was given the opportunity to purchase his hometown newspaper, the Le Roy Independent. The idea appealed to him and he hoped to earn enough to insure the completion of his education at a later date.

Judge Palmer published the paper for a little better than 2 years when his father was ordered to California for his health. The young publisher sold his paper and went into his father's retail lumber and coal business. Three years later, in 1911, came the decision to sell out and join the rest of his family in California.

During his 5 years as a businessman in Le Roy, he was an unsuccessful candidate for representative, 1908, and State senator, 1910.

After his arrival in Pasadena, he looked for a business that he might operate while going to law school.

At the suggestion of Dr. E. O. Palmer, a second cousin in Hollywood, he bought a small weekly newspaper, the Hollywood Citizen. He took possession of the Citizen on April 1, 1911, starting operations with one printer and one half-time reporter.

During the fall of 1911, he entered law school at the University of Southern California, attending classes during the late afternoon and at night. In 1913, after a year and a half of schooling, Mr. Palmer passed the State bar examination and opened the first law office in Hollywood.

The next year he was named president of the Southern California Editorial Association, the forerunner of the present California Newspaper Publishers Association. He served as president of the SCEA for 3 years, later serving as legal adviser to the CNPA for many years.

In April of 1915, Mr. Palmer was married to Ethelyn Hunkins, formerly of Minneapolis. Later the same year, the supervisors appointed him judge of the Los Angeles justice court, the forerunner of the present municipal court. He was reelected to a 4-year term in 1918.

In the latter part of 1920, the Citizen started construction of a four-story concrete building at Hollywood Boulevard and Cosmo. This project, coupled with the conversion of the weekly to a daily, forced Judge Palmer to resign from the court and devote full time to his business.

The Citizen began daily publication on October 1, 1921. Ten years later the Citizen purchased the Hollywood News and became known as the Citizen News.

In recent years, Judge Palmer served as a director of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, representing as such all newspapers in the mountain and Pacific time zones.

At the time of his death, he also was serving as a director of the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce.

He had been a past president of the Hollywood Business Men's Club, and a member of the Hollywood Round Table, Hollywood Masonic Lodge, Los Angeles City Club, Los Angeles Municipal League, Los Angeles Advertising Club, Malibu Lake Mountain Club, Los Angeles and Hollywood athletic clubs, and Wilshire Country Club.

His membership in the Los Angeles City Club had been presented for life, in recognition of his management of the club's membership campaign in 1920, which increased membership from 300 to 2,000 and enabled the club to obtain its own permanent quarters.

Judge Palmer is survived by his wife, Ethelyn H.; his children, Harlan, Jr., Byron, Ralph, and Peggy; two brothers, Judge William J., and Orlando T., and his sister Zuma, and nine grandchildren.

The following first-person résumé of Judge Harlan G. Palmer's career was written in 1950 for inclusion in the Citizen-News' 50 years of progress edition, commemorating Hollywood's golden anniversary:

I wish that it might have been my privilege to have been connected with the entire history of the Hollywood Citizen and the Hollywood Citizen-News. However, I am grateful for the nearly 40 years that I have been associated with these publications.

I came to California from Minnesota in January of 1911. For 5 years my college education had been interrupted. Two years had been spent as publisher, editor, reporter, and typesetter of a country weekly at Le Roy, Minn. Three years had been spent in the retail lumber and coal business that my father had been obliged to abandon when sickness overtook him and he moved from Le Roy to Pasadena.

I had started at the University of Minnesota with a course that offered a bachelor of arts degree and a bachelor of laws degree upon completion of 6 years of work, 3 in the liberal arts college and 3 in the law school.

I had returned several weeks late for the start of my third year at the university in 1905. I was grappling with the problems of making up for the lost period, working 3 hours a day in a restaurant, and playing basketball, when a letter came from my father with the information that the publisher of the hometown paper at Le Roy had come to him with the proposal that I buy the paper as he had bought a larger newspaper elsewhere.

COULD SWEEP FLOOR

The publisher had convinced my father that I could operate the business. I knew how to do janitor work in a printing office, having worked the previous year from 4 to 7 each morning in sweeping the floors, cleaning linotype machine space bands and melting linotype metal in a Minneapolis commercial printing plant located near the university.

I was not qualified as a writer. My father had promised me $10 for the first letter I should write home that was free from spelling and grammatical errors. Two years of higher education had not equipped me to earn the award which to both my father and me represented a magnificent sum. (At jobs I could get in those days my earnings were 15 cents an hour.)

But the country-editor idea appealed to me nonetheless. I thought that I might make enough from the undertaking in a couple of years to insure the comfortable completion of a college education at a later date.

The price of the newspaper business was $2,150. How the seller happened to put that extra $150 onto the price I know not, but $150 happened to be just the amount of money I had saved up from a summer's work on farms. My father went on my note at the bank for $2,000 and I was in business.

LEARNING TO SET TYPE

My first job was to learn how to set type since all the reading matter in the paper was handset. I had to learn fast in order to get out the paper. In a few weeks I was setting as much type as the best printers set. My one printer set the ads and took charge of the job printing. I learned quickly to feed the job press and the larger press which printed four pages of the newspaper at one time. My young brother, Bill (now a Los Angeles County Superior Court judge) helped in his spare time from high school.

I gathered most of the local news items by running to the two depots when I heard incoming passenger trains whistle for town. I seldom had to ask questions. I knew everyone in town and could safely guess where the most of them were going or whence they were coming. In those days, train travel was the means for going more than 10 miles. The horse and buggy or sleigh served on the short trips.

I seldom took time to write the local news. I just got up on the stool at the type case and put the story in type.

OUT OF DEBT

I got the paper paid for in 2 years and was considering its sale and my return to college with the money in my jeans when my father was stricken and the doctor ordered him to go to California. The only way we could get him to break from home ties, from all his friends, and from the source of a modest livelihood was for me to step into his shoes in the lumber and coal business.

There wasn't much activity in lumber during the winter months so I started the study of a correspondence course in law.

When my father was finally convinced that I might run a small business in California as well as one in the hometown, he consented to the sale of his partnership interest. Then I came to Pasadena and began a search for a business that I might run while going to law school.

Finding such a business began to look hopeless until one day I came across a classified advertisement for the sale of the Whittier newspaper. I believed that I could manage such a publication. The streetcar service was such, I figured, that I could commute daily between Whittier and the USC Law School, then located at First and Broadway. I was keen for buying it.

SEEKING ADVICE

My cautious father then said: "You have a second cousin over in Hollywood, Dr. E. O. Palmer, who has been in southern California for 10 years, is connected with a bank, and is posted on business matters. You better go over and ask him what he thinks of the Whittier proposition."

I went to over to see Dr. Palmer. In substance I got this comment: "You don't want Whittier. Hollywood has a bigger future than Whittier has. Though Whittier has a daily newspaper today and Hollywood has only a weekly newspaper, one of these days Hollywood will outdistance Whittier. I know that you can buy the Hollywood newspaper at a good price. The man who bought both the Hollywood Citizen and the Hollywood Sentinel 2 months ago is sick of his bargain and ready to sell."

Since Hollywood was closer to law school and the demands of a weekly less than the demands of a daily, and since I didn't know that Dr. Palmer had a mortgage on the Hollywood Citizen, I took his advice. For several years, I blamed myself for doing so but in the course of time reached the conclusion that the advice had been good.

ORIGIN IN 1900

I took possession of the consolidated Hollywood Citizen and Hollywood Sentinel on April 1, 1911. The name of the Sentinel had been dropped in the consolidation. The Citizen was exactly 6 years old on April 1, 1911. The Sentinel was 5 years older, having been started in January 1900.

Before the consolidation the Sentinel had been the champion of the Highland Avenue and end of Hollywood Boulevard. The Citizen had been the champion of the Cahuenga Boulevard end. Each of those two ends had considered itself a rival of the other.

It was my job to overlook the past and to see the two ends as growing together.

THE VISIONAIRES

During the first week of my activities as Hollywood publisher I attended a meeting of the Hollywood Board of Trade and heard a discussion of the future of the boulevard. One man was bold enough to predict that eventually there would be solid business between Highland and Cahuenga. Most of the members of the board differed from the optimist but they finally settled on the vision of solid business on the south side of the boulevard between Highland and Cahuenga and apartment houses on the north side. None visualized any development at Vine Street and Hollywood Boulevard, where the Jacob Sterns home was located at the center of a 4-acre orange grove.

At the time of my advent it seemed to me that there could be no finer residential area in the world than was Hollywood. As I think back upon those days, when beautiful homes and gardens lined the boulevard, I am convinced that this was a correct conclusion. To me, coming from a small country town, it was like a dream.

And the people were such wonderful folks. Most of the prominent residents had their businesses in downtown Los Angeles. When all got together in Hollywood they had the common interest of maintaining a beautiful residential district.

The post office was located alongside the Citizen office on Cahuenga just south of Hollywood Boulevard. The morning greetings as folks came for their mail were bright spots in the day.

I started off with one printer and one half-time reporter. That reporter was Mabelle Lewis, now Mrs. Ward Heinzman, who was recommended to me as the person who knew the history of every woman and man in Hollywood. She never let any local news escape her.

The front section of the building, in which we housed our printing equipment and editorial desk, was occupied by an ice-cream parlor.

It was that ice cream parlor that led to my falling into the notion that Ethelyn Hunkins was the most exciting girl I ever met. She migrated with her parents from Minneapolis a year after I had arrived. Her father, W. S. Hunkins, looked around for former Minnesotans and made my acquaintance. Thereafter, the daughter came to the ice-cream parlor as an excuse for looking me over. We've been married over 35 years now.

IN LAW SCHOOL

I started in law school in the fall of 1911. It was tough going. I went into school for an early morning class and then back for a late afternoon class, until pressure became so great I switched all classes to late afternoon and night.

In those early days there was no place in Hollywood where a person could buy a large envelope or a sheet of cardboard or blotting paper, except at the printing office. Every time a customer came in for such stationery supplies, a printer would have to leave his work, wash his hands, and deliver a few cents worth of merchandise while losing a greater amount of money in the value of the time taken from mechanical work.

I finally decided to take over the space occupied by the ice cream parlor, install some shelves for stocking the called for stationery supplies, employ a girl to keep the books and wait on newspaper and stationery trade. That's how the Citizen Stationery Store got its start.

LAWYER AND JUDGE

Our business grew slowly. I passed the State bar examination, after a year and a half of schooling and 6 weeks of special cramming of the bar examination, and opened the first law office to be opened in Hollywood. There were a number of successful lawyers living in Hollywood at the time but their offices were in downtown Los Angeles.

We moved to two storerooms on Hollywood Boulevard, between Wilcox and Cahuenga, used part of the space for a law office, part for the stationery store, rented a part for real-estate offices, and used the entire basement for printing machinery and stock.

I had always figured that when I got a law business established I would sell the newspaper. But in October of 1915, the supervisors made two appointments to fill two offices additional to four in the court then designated as the justice court of Los Angeles Township and since consolidated with the Los Angeles police courts into the Los Angeles municipal court. One of the appointments was given to me.

I had an idea, regardless of qualifications, I wouldn't have gotten the appointment if most of the weekly newspapers of the county had not favored it. I was then president of the Southern California Editorial Association, the forerunner of the present California Newspaper Publishers Association. I decided that being both a lawyer and a newspaperman wasn't a bad idea.

GETTING IN DEEP

In the latter part of 1920 we undertook the construction at 6362 Hollywood Boulevard, of a four-story concrete store, office, and newspaper building. The site had formerly been occupied by the freight yard and depot of the Pacific Electric. The undertaking took on what to us were large responsibilities. I decided that I owed it to the folks who had loaned the money for the building to resign from the court job and devote my full time to business. I had enjoyed the 5 years on the bench but circumstances forced me to quit. The complimentary title of "Judge" clung long after the resignation.

WEEKLY TO DAILY

On October 1, 1921, 10½ years after acquiring the weekly newspaper, we changed it into the Hollywood Daily Citizen. We didn't care to do it at that time for the new building wasn't completed and we had no press capable of handling the daily. But the owner of the Los Angeles Express was setting up an extensive plant for the publication beginning November 1 of a new daily, the Hollywood News, to be circulated free with the Express.

For a period we had to have our presswork done at Glendale or in Santa Monica. The experience was trying when the type forms broke or other accidents happened en route to the presses. We got our own press installed in the new building before the building was completed but when the basement was covered. We slid the type forms into the basement on skids. Only the most loyal group of subscribers and advertisers in the world could have carried us over those trying days.

Ten years to a day after the start of the Hollywood News, November 1, 1931, in the midst of the depression, it was purchased by the Hollywood Citizen on an installment plan that held over our heads for a period of 12 years the possibility of our losing everything.

STILL ALIVE

When we launched the Daily Citizen, experienced newspapermen predicted failure. When we purchased the Hollywood News experienced newspapermen again predicted failure. They are still predicting failure. They say that a daily newspaper cannot be successfully operated in one section of a big city. They are doubtless right.

We merely believe that our job is to keep on going so long as conditions permit and be very thankful for the years we have been permitted to stay in business and to make our contributions to the cause of good journalism and to the cause of better government in the city, the county, and the State.

The St. Lawrence Seaway Will Bring a New Era of Prosperity to Detroit

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. LOUIS C. RABAUT

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, as we all know, the dream of a deep-draft route from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic Ocean is on the way to becoming a reality. We in Michigan and the surrounding area have fought for many long years to achieve access to world ports.

It is most fitting and proper that the Great Lakes region, wherein is concentrated a tremendous agricultural and industrial capacity, have available the transportation necessary to market this vast production.

With the coming of the St. Lawrence Seaway, access to all of the seaports of the world by deep-draft ships is made possible. This low-cost water transportation route will be an important factor in the ability to sell and meet competition in the markets of the world where the products of the Great Lakes area must compete with those produced by low-priced labor in other countries.

The Middle West will be freed from the necessity of paying tribute to higher cost forms of transportation to the seaboard. It will be free from the pilferage so common to the seaboard ports, and their high-cost shipping services.

What is said of all of the Great Lakes ports is true, with added emphasis, of Detroit. The products of Detroit and the surrounding area are of a general type peculiarly adapted to water transportation. A larger proportion of its products are of the heavy, large bulk type which offers greater opportunity for savings in transportation costs by cutting down on the number of times it must be handled. Direct loading at shipside and unloading at destination from vessels which are able to make the entire trip and complete delivery will save Detroit's industries millions of dollars annually.

The Motor City is already the greatest single producing center for foreign cargo in the United States. It thus stands to gain much by use of the St. Lawrence Seaway. Not only will its competitive position be improved by savings in transportation costs but there is a possibility of further savings in lower costs for much of its raw materials, particularly those which must come from overseas.

Much of Detroit's industry is based on utilization of metals. The coming of the seaway has fortunately coincided with an increasing dependence upon foreign sources for iron ore and other minerals. The availability of the seaway will for all time put a stopper to the long-dreaded possibility of the steel industry having to migrate to the seacoast. This might have taken place as the direct-shipping high quality iron ores of the Mesabi range became depleted. The industry must, of course, have easy access and at lowest possible transportation cost, to the raw materials required. It would have had little choice other than to move closer to these sources. In that event, Detroit would have been placed in a precarious position. Its metal fabricating industries would then have to choose between following steel's example or paying the penalty of greatly increased transportation costs. Fortunately, that possibility will be banished forever when the St. Lawrence Seaway is open to traffic in 1959.

With the steady increase in recent years of availability of overseas shipping services via the present shallow canals, such commerce in Detroit has increased rapidly. In the last 10 years services offered by small freighters carrying general cargo have increased from a handful of vessels and a few hundred tons to nearly 400 vessel arrivals and over 97,000 tons of cargo in 1955. The Port Commission of Detroit estimates that this will increase tenfold in the first 10 years following the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway.

Already in anticipation of increased offerings for shipping by water, several railroads and trucking firms are preparing special export-import rates to lake ports. Since Detroit is one of the best situated cities in the world so far as inland transport is concerned, the breadth and extent of such services will expand as time goes on.

The business of freight forwarders, freight agents, and other accessories of commerce such as banking, marine insurance, warehousing, and the other manifold servants of foreign commerce will all expand considerably—thereby creating thousands of new jobs.

All of these elements add up to more efficient handling of a trade that is certain to expand rapidly when the seaway makes it all possible.

Detroit, over the years, has built up a well-deserved reputation for fast and efficient cargo handling. When this is made available to shippers from overseas seeking to reach the rich midwestern market, it will be a great inducement to increased commerce which cannot help but have an almost immediate impact on the volume of general cargoes.

It is fortunate that Detroit has an alert port commission which is aware of the potential value of general cargo. I am sure that when the seaway is completed, Detroit will have available the public, general cargo facilities that will be needed. It is my understanding that $15 million is being spent to provide 10 new berths especially designed to handle up to 1 million tons of foreign commerce. So it now appears that Detroit will be prepared.

Another result of the seaway in Detroit undoubtedly will be the establishment of new industries. They will choose this location because their market is here, and their raw materials will reach them cheaply and directly by water. They will be able to take advantage of all the varied mercantile services available in such a highly industrialized area as Detroit.

An authority in the field envisages Detroit as an important export center for packaged food products moving to northern Europe from as far south as St. Louis and as far west as Davenport, Iowa. It is quite likely that cargoes like furniture from Grand Rapids, chemicals from Midland and Wyandotte and farm machinery from Battle Creek will reach points all over the world through the Detroit gateway and the St. Lawrence.

It has been estimated that 1 million tons of foreign trade through Detroit's port would save shippers up to $1½ million per year in transportation costs over present methods of shipping.

Present users of the shallow St. Lawrence canals are planning to expand their use of the route when the 27-foot channel becomes available.

All in all, it is a pleasant prospect to contemplate. Detroit and its citizens will be the major beneficiaries of the St. Lawrence Seaway. It will require some positive effort, some salesmanship, imagination, and cooperation to make the most of it. Fortunately, those are characteristics that have long been identified with Detroit and its dynamic producers of the past two generations. The new generation now has an opportunity to extend its horizons. If the past is any indication, then Detroit is all set for a new and even more prosperous era, spurred by the coming of the St. Lawrence Seaway.

Record of Activity of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EMANUEL CELLER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, a review of the activities of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, 84th Congress, reveals the major role the committee played in the legislative history of this Congress. Statistics tell only a part of the story.

Of the 14,104 bills introduced in the House in this Congress, 5,327 were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Thus, the Judiciary Committee handled 37.6 percent of the legislative work of the House of Representatives.

Major legislation of vital importance to the Nation kept public interest focused on the activities of the committee. Among such bills can be found those dealing with the vital issues of civil rights, the strengthening of antitrust laws, the "good faith" bills, the automotive dealers franchise bills, the Federal Construction Contract Act, and the subject of conflict between State and Federal jurisdiction.

In addition to the 5 standing subcommittees, there were appointed 3 special subcommittees of particular note and significance.

The Special Subcommittee on Presidential Inability, composed of Messrs. CELLER, chairman, WALTER, LANE, KEATING, and MCCULLOCH, made an exhaustive study of this subject which is deeply vested with public interest. In addition to the hearings, the subcommittee compiled a document setting forth the views of eminent political scientists and constitutional lawyers on how best to meet the situation that arises when the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office. In addition thereto, it prepared legislation, not as yet introduced, setting forth the alternate suggestions with a view toward direct action in the forthcoming session.

The Special Subcommittee on Administrative Procedure Act, composed of Messrs. ASHMORE, chairman, BOYLE, and CURTIS of Massachusetts, directed its attention to legislation concerning administrative procedure to insure that the integrity of the Administrative Procedure Act is preserved. The subcommittee completed a study concerning deviations from the Administrative Procedure Act. This study not only indicates instances where Congress has provided express exemptions from the requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act but also indicates instances in which Congress has provided procedural requirments which are more strict than those prescribed by the Administrative Procedure Act.

The special subcommittee also assisted in the formulation of committee views on House Resolution 462, a resolution to create a new standing Committee on Administrative Procedure in the House of Representatives. In conjuction with its study of House Resolution 462, the special subcommittee analyzed and examined the work of the Judiciary Committee regarding administrative procedure, the staff study on the Hoover Commission Report on Legal Services and Procedure and the testimony before the Rules Committee concerning House Resolution 462. The fruits of this analysis and examination were made available to the full committee and served as a basis for the statement made by the Judiciary Committee and forwarded to the Rules Committee which was considering House Resolution 462.

The Committee on the Judiciary received complaints concerning a controversy between the press of the Boston area and the Shubert theatrical organization. It was alleged that actions taken by the Shubert organization in the course of a controversy with the Boston Post had infringed upon freedom of the press. A special subcommittee was appointed to hear and weigh the testimony of those who were involved in the controversy. Representative FRANK CHELF, of Kentucky, was designated as the chairman of the subcommittee, and Representatives HAROLD D. DONOHUE and LAURENCE CURTIS, both of Massachusetts, were appointed to serve as members. The subcommittee held public hearings on the matter in Washington on May 2, 1956, and June 27, 1956.

A series of editorials in the Boston Post had charged that the Shubert theatrical interests in Boston had infringed upon the freedom of the press when, after a dispute concerning the paper's reviews of its plays, the Shubert organization reduced its theatrical advertising in the Post and refused to accord the paper's drama critic the customary complimentary press tickets to its productions. On the other hand, the Shubert organization contended that it acted with sound business justification, and that there was no issue of civil liberties or other public policy involved.

The subcommittee found that there was no actual violation of the constitutional provisions guaranteeing freedom of the press, since those provisions insure that the press of the United States will be free to function without being limited by laws imposing previous restraints on publications. The subcommittee, therefore, found that there did not appear to be any immediate need for Federal legislation. However, the subcommittee concluded that the economic pressure exerted by the Shubert organization in this instance was subject to criticism in that it must be recognized that such measures do in fact operate to limit freedom of expression as it has traditionally been recognized in the United States, and it is this freedom of expression which is protected from governmental interference by the guaranties of the Constitution.

In addition to the bulk of public legislation, it is altogether proper that we direct attention to the number of private bills which were referred to this committee: 3,827 immigration bills and 1,059 claims bills, giving a total of 4,886 private bills. It must be emphasized that each one of these bills, though private, requires active consideration in the same measure as do many of the public bills before the committee. Reports are requested, hearings are held, subcommittee deliberation and full committee deliberation are in order for each individual bill, and the appropriate report is filed.

The Subcommittee on Antitrust held exhaustive hearings in a serious effort to preserve the principles of free enterprise. The record of that subcommittee is one of which the committee is justly proud. The subcommittee sat mornings and afternoons in 88 hearings, issuing 6 special reports, and coming to grips with the grave economic problems attendant upon monopolies and monopolistic practices.

The members of the committee and the staff worked together in maximum effort to discharge their responsibilities on the issues that were placed before them, and the record speaks for itself.

To understand more clearly the nature of the activities of the Committee on the Judiciary, I have set forth below the activities of each subcommittee so that the total picture may emerge in greater detail and with sharper clarity:

SUBCOMMITTEE NO. 1

Subcommittee No. 1 had 150 public bills referred to it for action.

A group of nine bills dealing with the transportation and distribution of obscene matter was considered by the subcommittee. H. R. 3333, amending chapter 71 of title 18, United States Code, so as to strengthen the provisions barring the transportation of indecent and obscene matter, was reported by the subcommittee. A similar Senate bill, S. 600, was amended on the floor of the House by the substitution of the provisions of H. R. 3333. That bill, approved by both Houses of Congress and signed by the President, became Public Law 95.

The subcommittee drafted and recommended for enactment a bill to facilitate the admission into the United States of wives and children of Spanish sheepherders who had been admitted under laws authorizing the admission of such sheepherders. The legislation also provided for a more humane approach to the waiver of minor criminal offenses of persons seeking to enter the United States. The subcommittee incorporated into the bill an amendment to the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended, so as to apply that law to refugees in Spain. An additional committee amendment was designed to correct a situation involving a number of aliens admitted under the displaced persons laws, who misrepresented their nationality or country of birth to avoid forced repatriation to Communist-controlled countries. The bill, H. R. 6888, was reported to the House, and was passed on July 30, 1955. The Senate passed an amended version of the bill on July 27, 1956, the last day of the Congress, but the Senate amendments were not agreed to by the House prior to adjournment.

The subcommittee considered a group of three bills proposing an amendment to section 2314 of title 18, United States Code, dealing with confidence game swindles. The committee reported S. 997 which added an amendment making it unlawful to transport or induce a person to travel in interstate commerce in the execution or concealment of a confidence game swindle. The bill passed the House and became Public Law 661.

During the 1st session of the 84th Congress the subcommittee considered legislation proposing a commission to study problems in the field of international legal practice and procedures. After hearings at which representatives of the American Bar Association, and the Departments of State and Justice appeared, the subcommittee recommended an amended bill to provide for a commission to conduct a study of problems in the field of international legal procedure. A clean bill was introduced embodying the recommendations of the subcommittee, and that bill, H. R. 7500, was reported to the House by the committee. During the second session a rule was granted, and the bill passed the House. The bill was not acted upon by the Senate prior to adjournment.

The subcommittee held hearings on H. R. 3 and related bills dealing with the question of the effects of acts of Congress on State laws. The subcommittee recommended an amendment to H. R. 3 so as to limit the application of the bill to the field of sedition and subversion, and to provide for concurrent jurisdiction in the States and the Federal Government in that field. The committee reported to the House H. R. 3 amended to provide for such concurrent jurisdiction.

The bill H. R. 2854, increasing the penalties for seditious conspiracy and advocating the overthrow of the Government, was considered by the subcommittee, reported by the full committee, and passed the House, and then the Senate with an amendment during first session of the Congress. This bill was the subject of a conference during the second session at which the Senate receded from its amendment and the bill was subsequently approved as Public Law No. 212.

The subcommittee held hearings on problems being encountered in connection with the issuance of United States passports. After the consideration of the matters brought out in the hearings, the subcommittee favorably recommended to the full committee, H. R. 11582, a bill providing for passport review procedure. That bill was pending at that point at the conclusion of the Congress.

SUBCOMMITTEE NO. 2—GENERAL JURISDICTION OVER JUDICIARY BILLS, AS ASSIGNED SPECIAL JURISDICTION OVER CLAIMS

During the Congress the subcommittee conducted hearings on 28 different days. These covered public as well as private claims measures.

The subcommittee processed S. 1077, a bill to recompense, to a limited extent, those persons or their survivors, who suffered death, personal injury, and property losses as a result of the explosions and fires at Texas City, Tex., in April 1947. This was a manmade disaster. Loaded bags of ammonium nitrate fertilizer forming a part of the United States Government's program of foreign aid to war-ravaged and famine-stricken foreign countries, blew up in the holds of 2 ships at Texas City killing over 750 persons and injuring 3,500 more. This bill became Public Law 378.

The subcommittee also processed H. R. 7763, a bill to expedite the final settlement of Japanese-American evacuation claims which resulted from the Army's evacuation of over 100,000 persons of Japanese ancestry from the west coast areas during World War II. The claims program has been underway for some 7 years, and implementing legislation was needed to help expedite the final settlement of the remaining claims—Public Law 673.

Another bill on general legislation which the subcommittee favorably considered was S. 1644, prescribing policy and procedure for the letting of lump-sum Federal construction contracts. After extensive hearings, the subcommittee adopted this Senate bill which, among other things, was designed to conform Government procedures for the letting of construction contracts to those followed by many prudent organizations in private industry, and at the same time eliminate unfair trade practices of bid shopping.

One of the public claims bills favorably considered by the subcommittee and enacted into law was H. R. 3996. This amends the Military Personnel Claims Act, as amended, to remove the $2,500 limitation upon the amount to be recovered under the act, and to permit settlement of claims not in excess of $6,500. Several House-passed private bills and one Senate-passed private bill are being settled administratively under the amended act—Public Law 571.

The following tabulation indicates the workload of this subcommittee in connection with claims against the Government:

SUBCOMMITTEE NO. 2—GENERAL JURISDICTION OVER JUDICIARY BILLS AS ASSIGNED—SPECIAL JURISDICTION OVER CLAIMS

In addition to claim bills, subcommittee No. 2 handled a significant number of pieces of general legislation. These included civil-rights bills, bills to establish a public-defender system in the courts of the United States, legislation concerning criminal laws, mileage allowance increases for marshals and their deputies, proposed modification of the Lucas Act—Public Law 657, 79th Congress—and bills to provide a remedy for persons who are slandered or libeled by Members of Congress.

H. R. 627, a civil-rights bill, passed by the House of Representatives on July 23, 1956. It included four main provisions, namely, establishment of a Civil Rights Commission in the executive branch of the Government, creation of an additional Assistant Attorney General to be in charge of a Civil Rights Division in the Department of Justice, provision for a civil remedy at the behest of the Attorney General to protect the right to vote and provision for a civil remedy on the part of the Attorney General to further strengthen civil rights presently protected by the Ku Klux Act—title 42, United States Code, section 1985.

H. R. 627 was one of 70 civil-rights bills considered by subcommittee No. 2. Others called for the following: The creation of a Fair Employment Practices Commission to eliminate racial and other discriminations in employment, prohibitions on racial and other discriminations in federally supported housing, federally supported education, interstate transportation and the armed services, prohibitions on interference with the right to vote, and other rights, privileges, and immunities secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States, and antilynching, antipoll tax, and antipeonage legislation.

H. R. 5205, a bill extending the protection of certain Federal criminal laws to all members of the armed services also passed the House. It would provide Federal protection against murder, manslaughter, or assault for all servicemen if the attack took place while they were engaged in their duties.

Hearings were held on other legislation concerning the criminal law. H. R. 4930 and H. R. 4932 would provide the defendant with an appeal against an excessive criminal sentence. H. R. 799 and H. R. 5264 would establish the making of contradictory statements under oath as perjury.

Subcommittee No. 2 held hearings on two bills, H. R. 271 and H. R. 641 to provide remedies for persons who are slandered or libeled by Members of Congress. These two bills were adversely reported by the subcommittee and tabled by the full committee.

In view of the fact that all other Federal employees received increases in mileage allowances for travel on official business Subcommittee No. 2 favorably reported H. R. 4019, to authorize an identical mileage-allowance increase for United States marshals and their deputies. This bill passed the House on July 25, 1955, and an identical bill, S. 2592—Public Law 228—was then substituted for it.

SUBCOMMITTEE NO. 3—GENERAL JURISDICTION OVER JUDICIARY BILLS AS ASSIGNED—SPECIAL JURISDICTION OVER PATENTS, TRADEMARKS, COPYRIGHTS, AND REVISION OF THE LAWS—GENERAL STATEMENT

The principal functions of this subcommittee may be divided into three categories. It processes all general legislation bills which are assigned to it. It also handles all legislation relating to patent, trademark, and copyright laws. In addition, it has jurisdiction over the revision of the laws, classifying all laws of general and permanent nature as they are enacted into the 50 titles which comprise the United States Code.

During the 84th Congress the workload of Subcommittee No. 3 was substantially increased. In all, 98 bills were referred for processing. Forty-two bills were handled in the 1st session of the 84th Congress and are not discussed here since they are covered in an earlier report made at the end of the first session of this Congress. During the second session of the Congress the subcommittee processed 56 bills. These included such subjects as foreign agents registration, habeas corpus, juvenile delinquency, national Federal probation, wire fraud, aircraft destruction, and interstate compacts. A statement (a) pointing up the functions of the subcommittee and (b) highlighting some of the legislation processed by it follows.

GENERAL LEGISLATION

Because of the many recent aircraft disasters the subcommittee favorably reported H. R. 319—provisions of H. R. 319 were incorporated into S. 2972, which became public law—making it a Federal offense to place explosive substances near or on an aircraft with the intent of disabling or destroying it or any of its passengers. The subcommittee also broadened the scope of this legislation to include buses and other motor vehicles which move in interstate commerce—see S. 2972. In connection with aircraft, H. R. 6805 was also processed, prohibiting in any lawsuit the use of evidence obtained in military aircraft investigations conducted in the interest of air safety.

Due to the expansion in oil and gas leases, timber sales, and other activities of Indian tribal organizations, it became necessary to consider Federal legislation setting up safeguards to protect the funds and other assets belonging to the tribes which are entrusted to the care of its officers and Federal officials. H. R. 6403 was favorably considered by the subcommittee, and, if enacted, will make theft or embezzlement of tribal funds a Federal criminal offense.

The subcommittee also took action on legislation making the Federal Probation Act applicable to the District of Columbia. The courts in the District of Columbia have a greater number of criminal prosecutions, perhaps, than any other district since, by statute, the Attorney General is authorized to institute prosecutions in a wider range of criminal cases here in the District of Columbia. Favorable consideration was given to H. R. 6870 to bring the district courts in line with other Federal districts so that Federal probation laws will now be uniform throughout all district courts.

A bill designed to close the loophole in the present law which presently limits the prosecution of frauds involving wire, radio, and television communication to interstate transactions was approved by the subcommittee so as to cover foreign communications as well—S. 3674. Persons seeking to circumvent Federal criminal statutes have been crossing the border into Canada and Mexico and by telephone and other communications promoting false stock and other transactions to victims residing in the United States.

The subcommittee took favorable action on several pieces of legislation which grant the consent of Congress to the States concerned, to enter into interstate compacts. Some of these bills were H. R. 6623, permitting States sharing common boundaries with New York or New Jersey to enter into mutual military aid compacts, H. R. 9314, an education compact between Wisconsin and Illinois, H. R. 11911, boundary relocation compact between Arizona and California, House Joint Resolution 511, New York-New Jersey air pollution compact, H. R. 5274, extending the crime control compact to Federal territories and possessions.

In addition to the above legislation, the subcommittee held hearings on a number of other important bills on which further action is contemplated. For example, as a result of hearings, the subcommittee decided to publish a committee document on H. R. 6682, affecting the judicial review of administrative decisions, so that the views of interested persons and agencies may be obtained during the recess and further action taken next Congress. Similarly, hearings were held on juvenile delinquency—House Joint Resolution 290, House Joint Resolution 291—and it is hoped that during the recess the staff of the subcommittee will secure data on several of the problems brought out at the hearings so that it may be studied next Congress. Hearings were also held on the disclosure provisions of the Foreign Agents Registration Act, H. R. 4105. This bill, among other things, would require foreign agents outside of the United States who use the United States mails to circulate propaganda to register under the Foreign Agents Registration Act. Hearings on this legislation will be printed, and made available for public comment and suggestions.

PATENTS, TRADEMARKS, AND COPYRIGHTS

The subcommittee during this Congress devoted a substantial portion of its time to patents, trademark, and copyright bills. Probably the most significant piece of legislation regarding patents and trademarks was H. R. 7416, which would increase certain patent and trademark fees in the Patent Office. This bill was favorably reported to the House. The subcommittee also favorably considered H. R. 10263, a bill adjusting certain fees in the Copyright Office. Another bill of substantial interest was H. R. 6716, which would provide a remedy against the Government for its infringement of any work protected under the copyright laws.

Legislation which was also favorably considered by the subcommittee and which affects the copyright field generally was contained in H. R. 781, setting up a 3-year statute of limitations on civil copyright infringement actions.

The foregoing bills, together with such items as patent extension, H. R. 2128, inventive contribution awards, H. R. 2383, and several other bills which passed the House during the first session of this Congress, gave the subcommittee two very active work years on patent, trademark, and copyright legislation.

REVISION OF THE LAWS

The principal work of the subcommittee with regard to the revision of the laws is the classification and codification of the public laws, as they are enacted, to the appropriate titles of the United States Code and the District of Columbia Code. In this Congress over 1,050 bills will have been enacted into public law, and because of the great number of these bills which were passed during the last days of the present session the subcommittee staff will be required to continue diligently in this work of classifying and codifying the laws for the next several months. The laws of the second session of the 84th Congress, which has just ended, will be set forth in supplement IV of the United States Code and supplement V of the District of Columbia Code.

The law-revision functions of the subcommittee include the enactment into positive law of the various titles of the code. To date, 13 of the 50 titles have been so enacted, with several titles now in various stages of process for enactment into law.

With regard to this particular phase of the work, there was cleared for Presidential approval H. R. 7049, a bill to revise, codify, and enact into law title 10 of the United States Code entitled "Armed Forces" and title 32 entitled "National Guard." The enactment of this bill is one of the major legislative accomplishments of this Congress. In size alone it ranks as one of the largest bills ever enacted by the Congress. It consists of more than 800 pages of type printed in smaller than normal style. If printed in the usual style it would undoubtedly comprise more than 2,000 pages. The work on this legislation commenced more than 8 years ago and in the intervening period there has been almost daily liaison between the officials in the Pentagon and the subcommittee staff with regard to the thousands of provisions in the bill. With its enactment it will be possible to find and keep up to date all of the laws relating to the Armed Forces and the National Guard. These laws are now scattered throughout some 70 volumes of the Statutes at Large and although they were classified into titles 10, Army; 32, National Guard; 34, Navy, of the United States Code, until enactment of this bill those titles were only prima facie evidence of the law. Now titles 10 and 32 constitute the law per se and may be amended directly. This legislation will be of tremendous help to the Congress, the Armed Forces, and the public generally.

In this Congress, H. R. 6991—title 21, United States Code—relating to food, drugs, and cosmetics, received the favorable action of the House of Representatives. In addition work has progressed steadily on the preparation of material for the enactment into law of Title 16: Conservation and Reclamation; Title 20: Education; Title 23: Highways; Title 43: Public Lands. During the last several months the subcommittee staff has been working with the members of the Solicitor's Office of the Post Office Department with a view to enacting Title 39: The Postal Service, into law. Preliminary work on this proposed legislation is now completed and a bill will be ready for introduction and early committee action when the Congress convenes next January.

In addition, progress has been made on a draft of a bill to enact Title 44: Public Printing, into law.

The subcommittee has continued its daily function of cooperating with other committees of the Congress with respect to the form and style of legislation affecting titles of the code. In addition, it has received and considered numerous suggestions from individuals, Government agencies, and other organizations relating to corrections, discrepancies, and conflicts in our Federal laws. Work to correct or reconcile these conflicts or discrepancies in the law is now, as always, being processed.

SUBCOMMITTEE NO. 4—GENERAL JURISDICTION OVER JUDICIARY BILLS AS ASSIGNED, SPECIAL JURISDICTION OVER BANKRUPT AND REORGANIZATION

During the 84th Congress, subcommittee No. 4 handled a number of bills designed to improve the administration of the bankruptcy laws. H. R. 4791, Public Law 518, and H. R. 5047, Public Law 543, provide for increases in the compensation of referees and trustees in bankruptcy. These laws are designed to make highly qualified persons available as referees and trustees. Another bill, H. R. 9956, improves the administration of the bankruptcy laws by eliminating the mailing of certain unnecessary notices, while H. R. 6247 contributes to this goal by conforming the handling of unclaimed bankruptcy funds with the handling of other unclaimed funds of district courts. H. R. 256 clarifies the definition of "salesmen" in the priorities section of the bankruptcy law. H. R. 6681 is designed to improve chapter XI proceedings dealing with arrangements. This bill, making a number of technical changes in chapter XI, passed the House but was not acted on by the Senate.

General legislation assigned to subcommittee No. 4 has covered a wide range of subjects. For example, there have been before the subcommittee more than 175 bills concerning holidays, celebrations, and the incorporation of patriotic and other organizations. In addition, action has been taken on general legislation dealing with the temporary extension of various emergency statutes, the amendment of the Contract Settlement Act of 1944, and the amendment of criminal laws.

The emergency legislation on which Subcommittee No. 4 took action concerns title II of the First War Powers Act and certain legislation dealing with benefits to employees for mishaps arising out of war-risk hazards. Public Law 58 extends to July 30, 1957, the effectiveness of title II of the First War Powers Act, which authorizes expeditious contracting procedures essential to national defense. Public Law 125 and Public Law 679 provide temporary extensions to July 1, 1957, of legislation providing benefits for civilian employees who are injured, killed, or captured by enemy or other military action. These war-risk hazard and detention benefits are essential for effective recruitment of qualified civilian personnel for overseas employment, such as construction work on military installations. Permanent legislation in this area was proposed to Congress by the Department of Defense late in the session. However, hearings on these proposals indicated that significant changes in the temporary legislation were contemplated which would require extensive and careful consideration by Congress. For this reason the temporary legislation was extended for 1 year.

Subcommittee No. 4 handled a number of bills amending the Federal criminal laws. The laws concerning threats against the President were amended by S. 734, Public Law 53, to include the President-elect and Vice President in their protections. Subsequently, the House passed H. R. 6621 to include the Vice President-elect in this protection but the Senate took no action on the bill.

H. R. 9257, Public Law 544, and H. R. 10111 close gaps in the criminal laws. H. R. 9257 provides punishment for one who instigates, aids, or assists an attempted but unsuccessful escape from custody. Prior to this, the law appeared to punish assistance in conjunction with completed escapes only. H. R. 10111 added federally insured, State-chartered savings and loan associations to the protections of the Federal criminal law as to theft, embezzlement, misapplication of funds, and the making of false entries.

Another bill amendatory of the Federal criminal law, H. R. 6997, would have added certain Federal officers and employees of the Departments of Labor and Commerce, the General Services Administration and Federal probation officers to the protection of Federal criminal laws relating to murder, manslaughter, and assault. This bill passed the House but was not acted on by the Senate.

Subcommittee No. 4 handled legislation in other areas also. H. R. 10417, Public Law 619, amended the Federal Register Act to provide emergency means for the publication of Executive proclamations, regulations, orders, and other documents in the event of attack or threatened attack on the United States. H. R. 9038, Public Law 808, expressly provided for the inclusion of Puerto Rico in section 1332 of title 28 of the United States Code conferring jurisdiction on district courts in diversity of citizenship cases.

SUBCOMMITTEE NO. 5—GENERAL JURISDICTION OVER JUDICIARY BILLS AS ASSIGNED—SPECIAL JURISDICTION OVER ANTITRUST MATTERS

This subcommittee exercised jurisdiction over a variety of subjects with special jurisdiction over antitrust matters. Under its general jurisdiction, the subcommittee considered legislation relating to the Federal judicial system in which it covered subject matters as additional circuit and district judges, additional places for holding terms of court and the creation of new judicial districts and divisions. It also considered such matters as an increase in the fees paid to witnesses in the Federal courts, the increase in court costs, and the fees charged by United States commissioners and marshals. The subcommittee devoted considerable time to the problem of wiretapping. It also considered legislation raising congressional and judicial salaries and creating a Commission on Government Security. It provided for a system of annuities for the widows and dependent children of Federal judges.

During the 84th Congress this subcommittee had referred to it 119 bills—114 being House measures, 5 being Senate measures. Hearings were conducted on 59 of these bills. It disposed of 96 bills of which 25 were favorably reported to the House of Representatives by the full committee. There were 15 bills enacted into public law during the 84th Congress. One of the first bills enacted into law in the 84th Congress was the bill which increased congressional and judicial salaries. Another was the bill which created a Commission on Security which is making a study of the Government's security program both within the Government itself and in private industry insofar as national defense and security are concerned.

Another bill enacted into law established a system whereby annuities will be paid to the widows and dependent children of the Federal judges.

Several bills relating to the Federal judicial system were also enacted into law.

The committee reported to the House a bill which would have created 21 new judgeships throughout the United States. However, the bill was never considered by the House since no rule was granted. The committee also had enacted into law a bill which established the United States Customs Court as a constitutional court and also a bill improving judicial administration in the court of claims.

The subcommittee made an extensive study and conducted lengthy hearings on the problem of wiretapping. Several bills were considered in this connection and the subcommittee finally reported a bill to the full committee. Under that bill, all wiretapping would have been made a Federal crime except when it was done in accordance with the law of the State wherein the act was committed. It would also ban the use of any evidence obtained by wiretapping except where wiretapping was done under a court order which cases were limited to specific Federal crimes dealing with national security. Possession of wiretap equipment under certain circumstances was also made a crime. The full committee considered the bill at several executive sessions but the bill was not reported at the close of the Congress.

ANTITRUST JURISDICTION—LEGISLATIVE

Early in the first session the subcommittee recommended two antitrust bills which were enacted into law. Public Law 135, approved July 7, 1955, increased the maximum fine for violations of the antitrust laws from $5,000 to $50,000. Public Law 137, approved July 7, 1955, provides a uniform statute of limitations in private antitrust litigation, and in addition, creates a right of action on the part of the Government to recover actual damages for injuries to the business or property of the United States by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws.

Another bill referred to the subcommittee, S. 3879, which is designed to supplement the antitrust laws, passed the Senate as amended by the House, on July 26, 1956. This bill permits a franchised automobile dealer to bring suit for damages against an automobile manufacturer in United States district courts for the failure of the manufacturer to act in good faith in performing or complying with any of the terms or provisions of the franchise, or in terminating, canceling or not renewing the dealer's franchise. S. 3879 creates a cause of action where none previously existed in that, irrespective of contractual provisions, it grants a right of review in Federal courts of disputes between automobile manufacturers and franchised dealers which involves the good faith of the parties. The bill, in its definition of good faith, imposes the duty on each party to act in a fair and equitable manner so as to guarantee the one party freedom from coercion, intimidation, or threats of coercion, or intimidation, from the other party.

Three additional antitrust bills referred to the subcommittee and passed by the House were pending in the Senate when Congress adjourned. Two of these bills, H. R. 5948 and H. R. 9424, resulted from the subcommittee's investigations into the administration and enforcement of the Celler-Kefauver Antimerger Act of 1950. The other bill, H. R.

1840, originated in complaints from representatives of the small business community that the Supreme Court's interpretation of section 2 of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, has frustrated effective enforcement of the antiprice discrimination law.

The purpose of H. R. 5948 was to prevent bank mergers achieved by acquisition of assets where the effect may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any section of the country. Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Celler-Kefauver Act, covers bank mergers achieved by stock acquisitions, but fails to include bank mergers accomplished by means of asset acquisition.

H. R. 5948 was passed by the House on February 6, 1956, to close the gap in existing law and to provide the Federal Reserve Board and the Attorney General with the same authority to move against asset acquisitions by banks as against stock acquisitions.

H. R. 9424, which passed the House on April 16, 1956, had two purposes. First, to require parties to a proposed merger, where the combined capital structure would exceed $10 million, to notify the Attorney General and the Federal Trade Commission—or the appropriate commission or board vested with jurisdiction—90 days in advance of the transaction. Together with the notice, the bill would require the acquiring corporation to supply specifically enumerated information which would enable the Attorney General and the appropriate agency to assess the merger's probable impact on competition. Willful failure to submit the notification or to furnish the required information would be subject to a civil penalty of from $5,000 to $50,000.

Second, H. R. 9424 amended the Clayton Act to provide the Federal Trade Commission with authority to seek a district court order preventing and restraining a merger in violation of Clayton Act section 7 pending issuance of a complaint and the completion of the Commission's administrative proceeding. This amendment would give the Federal Trade Commission, which has concurrent jurisdiction with the Attorney General to enforce the merger provisions of the Clayton Act, authority similar to that now possessed by the Attorney General to seek a preliminary court injunction to restrain the consummation of a merger pending adjudication of its legality.

H. R. 1840 was one of an important series of bills referred to the subcommittee which were designed to modify the doctrine enunciated by the Supreme Court in Standard Oil Company v. Federal Trade Commission (340 U. S. 231 (1951)), which holds that, regardless of the injurious effect on competition, it is a complete defense to a charge of price discrimination for a seller to show that his differential was made in good faith to meet the lawful and equally low price of a competitor. The bill, which was passed by the House on June 11, 1956, would have amended section 2 (b) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act to provide that unless the effect of a discrimination prohibited by section 2 of the act may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, it shall be a complete defense for a seller to show that his lower price or his furnishing of services or facilities was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor.

INVESTIGATIONS

Early in the first session, the Antitrust Subcommittee conducted a comprehensive series of hearings on current antitrust problems. In these hearings the subcommittee studied antitrust enforcement procedures, recommendations made by the Attorney General's Committee To Study the Antitrust Laws, the forces involved in the merger movement, the growing problem of an industry concentration, and secured up-to-date information from political, industrial, agricultural, and labor leaders concerning the antitrust problems posed by new forces active in the economy. Hearings on these matters extended over a period of 17 days in the course of which 55 Government officials and leaders in the fields of business, labor, farming, and banking, testified.

These exploratory hearings resulted in the introduction of bills to amend the Celler-Kefauver Antimerger Act of 1950 subsequently considered by the House, and the publication by the subcommittee of two reports on the current merger movement. The subcommittee's interim report, Corporate and Bank Mergers, issued September 27, 1955, criticized the record of the agencies responsible for enforcing the Celler-Kefauver Antimerger Act of 1950, and reported on the forces active in the extensive merger movement now underway as well as the adequacy of existing legislation. The subcommittee's staff report, The Merger Movement in the Textile Industry, outlined the background of recent mergers in the textile industry and analyzed the scope of the current merger developments and their effect on the pattern of concentration in the textile industry. The report gave a comprehensive description of certain specific mergers, primarily those involving Textron American and Burlington Industries.

Extensive hearings were held by the subcommittee during the first session on the problems involved in the Government's use of businessmen serving in key positions without compensation as well as the problems involved in the organization and operation of advisory groups by Government officials to assist in the exercise of administrative responsibilities. Hearings on WOC's and Government advisory groups extended over a period of 15 days during which the subcommittee received testimony from officials of the Departments of Commerce and Justice, the Office of Defense Mobilization, and the Civil Service Commission, and WOC's who formerly had served in the Government.

Testimony adduced at the hearings by the subcommittee in its investigation of WOC's and Government advisory groups demonstrated the dangers presented by conflicts of interest inherent in the use of WOC's by the Government. The subcommittee's investigation underscored the necessity for careful safeguards to avoid any possibility of Government abdication of policymaking functions to private bodies in its use of advisory groups. From the standpoint of public policy enunciated in the antitrust laws, and the enforcement of those laws, there is not only the danger that Government advisory groups may abuse the circumstances which cause the Government to authorize meetings of competitors and use such meetings to commence or continue overt antitrust violations, but there is also the effect the activities of such private groups may have on governmental decisions bearing directly on industrial growth and concentration of economic power.

Two interim reports resulted from the subcommittee's investigation. The first report, The Business Advisory Council for the Department of Commerce, issued December 12, 1955, analyzed the operations and activities of a special advisory group created to assist the Secretary of Commerce. The second report, WOC's and Government Advisory Groups, issued April 24, 1956, examined in detail the practices and procedures of the Department of Commerce in the Business and Defense Services Administration, and its predecessor, the National Production Authority, in the utilization of WOC's and advisory groups.

In its investigation of conflicts of interest involving full-time Government employees, the subcommittee conducted a 3-day hearing concerning the activities of Peter A. Strobel, Commissioner of Public Buildings Service, General Services Administration. As a result of disclosures uncovered in this investigation, Mr. Strobel resigned his position. The subcommittee's report, Activities of Peter A. Strobel, published April 10, 1956, affords a detailed analysis of the relationship maintained by Mr. Strobel between his private business and his Government position.

During the second session of this Congress, the Antitrust Subcommittee has undertaken an investigation of monopoly problems in industries which are under the jurisdiction of Federal regulatory agencies. Testimony has been received by the subcommittee from representatives of the Department of Justice, the Civil Aeronautics Board, and the Federal Communications Commission, various academic specialists in the antitrust problems of regulated industries, and representatives from the airlines and television industries, in a series of hearings extending over 31 days.

This investigation was instituted as a result of frequent allegations made in the subcommittee's hearings on current antitrust problems, that, in operation Federal regulatory bodies have become unduly industry-oriented and have sanctioned excessive economic concentration in the industries subject to their jurisdiction. The purpose of the investigation is to determine the validity of the contention that public regulation has gradually shifted the objectives of regulation from protecting the public interest to protecting the monopolies created under its aegis.

The subcommittee's extensive hearings on the airline industry included testimony from the members of the Civil Aeronautics Board, representatives from the Air Transport Association, a trade association representing the scheduled air carriers and representatives from nonscheduled air carriers. The subcommittee also heard the Director of the International Air Transport Association testify with respect to air carrier problems and operations in the foreign field as well as the Comptroller General, representatives from Pan American World Airways, North American Airlines, and National Airlines, travel agents, and representatives from travel agents' associations.

One result of the committee's study of the airlines industry has been the reinstitution by the Civil Aeronautics Board of its general passenger-fare investigation. The value of this investigation is demonstrated by the fact that in the 17-year history of the Civil Aeronautics Board there had never been a formal investigation of the level of airline rates and as a consequence, the CAB has lacked the detailed information necessary to determine whether or not the level of fares presently being charged the traveling public is unjust or unreasonable. At various times the CAB has started three such general passenger-fare investigations but for one reason or another none has ever been completed, notwithstanding the fact that passenger revenues account for 80 percent of all revenues received by domestic airlines.

Another result of the subcommittee's airlines investigation has been an overall reexaminaiton by the CAB of the procedures promulgated by the certificated airlines' trade association with respect to the qualifications and eligibility of travel agents to serve the airlines. The subcommittee found that although Congress has given no authority in the Civil Aeronautics Act to the CAB to regulate directly the travel agent business, in practice the airlines' trade association has inaugurated what amounts to a licensing system to control travel agents' business operations. At the present time, CAB is conducting an investigation into the necessity for, and propriety of, the trade association's activities in this area.

In its investigation of the television-broadcasting industry, the subcommittee has interrogated the Federal Communications Commission with respect to network pratcices which contribute to alleged domination by the networks in the production, distribution, and exhibition of television programs. The subcommittee has been particularly interested in the antitrust problems inherent in the network "must buy" arrangements with their affiliates which require advertisers to contract for a minimum television network of some 50 stations, as well as the so-called option time practice which secures to the network first refusal of the best hours of the affiliate's broadcasting day. In addition, the subcommittee has studied in detail the activities of the Federal Communicaitons Commission in discharging its responsibilities to maintain a competitive nationwide television industry in an effort to determine the extent to which the Commission pays heed to the antitrust considerations implicit in the Federal Communications Act.

As part of its investigation of regulated industries, a staff report has been issued which analyzes the general antitrust implications in railroad mergers and consolidations. This report, Merger in a Regulated Industry, is a case study of the proposed merger of the Louisville & Nashville and the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railroads. This case study provides a brief survey of the concepts, standards, issues, and arguments which are involved in considering a merger transaction in the railroad industry, which, upon approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission is exempted from the antitrust laws.

In conjunction with its investigation of regulated industries, and the Government agencies responsible for activities in the industries, the chairman introduced H. R. 9762 which would amend the Sherman Antitrust Act to have Congress declare it is the policy of the United States to maintain, to the maximum extent practicable, in regulated industries the American system of free competitive enterprise embodied in the antitrust laws. The purpose of this bill is to establish a guide for regulatory bodies and the courts in the exercise of their powers over business and arrangements involving exemption from the antitrust laws. In the investigation representatives from Government regulatory agencies and from the industries concerned have testified with respect to this bill.

During the recess the Antitrust Subcommittee will continue its study of the airlines and television industries. Representatives from certificated air carriers and varioius segments of the television broadcasting industry will be heard.

Summary of the Social Security Act as It Relates to Self-Employed Professional Groups Newly Covered by the Social Security Amendments of 1956

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HERMAN P. EBERHARTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, under general leave to extend remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I insert herewith the following summary of the Social Security Act as it relates to self-employed professional groups newly covered by the Social Security Amendments of 1956, which was prepared by the staff of the Committee on Ways and Means:

SUMMARY OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AS IT RELATES TO SELF-EMPLOYED PROFESSIONAL GROUPS NEWLY COVERED BY THE SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1956

I. INTRODUCTION

The Social Security Act Amendments of 1956 (Public Law 880, 84th Cong.) extended coverage under the Old-Age and Survivors Insurance System to substantially all self-employed professional groups except physicians. This part of the new law, which was merely one of many provisions contained in the 1956 Amendments which broaden and strengthen the Social Security program will be of particular interest to the estimated 200,000 additional people who during the course of a year are self-employed in the practice of certain professions. Because of the interest which this group will have in this part of the 1956 Amendments, this summary of what the Social Security coverage will mean to these individuals was prepared for use of Members of the Committee in responding to inquiries. It is not intended to be a complete statement in detail on this part of the new law, nor is it intended to cover other provisions of the law. It is merely a condensed outline applicable to these additional self-employed professional groups. Detailed information, of course, may be obtained by the individuals newly covered from the Social Security Administration or from the nearest local Social Security office.

II. SELF-EMPLOYED PROFESSIONAL GROUPS NEWLY COVERED

The 1956 Amendments extended coverage under the Old-Age and Survivors Insurance program to the following additional groups of self-employed persons:

1. Lawyers.
2. Dentists.
3. Doctors of Osteopathy.
4. Chiropractors.
5. Veterinarians.
6. Naturopaths.
7. Optometrists.

III. BENEFITS UNDER OASI

Benefits under OASI are related to prior earnings of an individual in covered, employment or self-employment and fall within four broad categories: (a) Retirement benefits; (b) Survivors' benefits; (c) Disability benefits; and (d) Lump-sum death benefits. A more detailed description of these benefits follows:

(a) Retirement benefits—These are payable to male workers at age 65, if they retire, and to female workers at age 62 (on an optional basis) or age 65, if they retire; to male workers between the ages of 65 and 72 when they do retire, and to female workers between ages 62 (or 65) and 72, when they do retire; and to male and female workers at age 72, whether they retire or not.

The following examples indicate the nature of these benefits: To one fully insured, whose annual average earnings have not been less than $4,200, there would be payable each month (at present benefit rates): $108.50, if the insured beneficiary is unmarried; $162.80, if he is married and his wife has reached the age of 65 (or slightly less if she is 62 and decides to accept a smaller benefit than she would receive at 65); and $200 if, in addition he has children still under 18 years of age. These retirement benefits continue until the death of the insured.

(b) Survivors' benefits—These are payable, on the death of the insured, to a person's widow (or dependent widower) or surviving parents or surviving children. As an example, where the person has enjoyed average annual earnings of not less than $4,200, a widow aged 62, or a widow of whatever age with a child under 18 years of age, would receive (at present rates) $81.40 a month; and a surviving family might be entitled to payments of as much as $200 a month.

(c) Disability benefits—The new law provides for the payment of benefits to fully insured, and otherwise qualified, workers at or after age 50 where the worker becomes permanently and totally disabled. This benefit is the same in amount, generally, as the retirement benefit, but is payable only to the disabled worker himself.

(d) Lump-sum death benefits—These are payable to the widow of an insured person or, generally, to anyone else who may pay the burial expenses. They are designed to defray such expenses, are limited to a maximum of $255, and are payable in addition to the survivor benefits.

IV. THE TAXES PAYABLE UNDER OASI

Self-employed individuals covered under OASI will pay annually, beginning with the taxable year 1956, 3⅜ percent of their first $4,200 net income from covered self-employment. This rate increases to 4⅛ percent in 1960, 4⅞ percent in 1965, 5⅝ percent in 1970, and 6⅜ percent in 1975 and after. There is no social security tax on any net income above the first $4,200.

The OASI taxes are payable at the same time as Federal income taxes are payable.

V. PRESERVATION OF BENEFIT RIGHTS FOR DISABLED

Periods of total disability of at least 6 months' duration are excluded in determining insured status and average monthly wage, provided the disabled worker has at least 6 quarters of coverage in the 13 quarters ending with the quarter in which he is disabled and at least 20 quarters of coverage in the 40 quarters ending with the quarter in which he is disabled. Determinations of disability are, in general, made by State agencies in charge of vocational rehabilitation.

VI. EMPLOYMENT PERMITTED WITHOUT SUSPENSION OF BENEFITS (CALLED "WORK CLAUSE" OR "RETIREMENT TEST")

A beneficiary can earn $1,200 in a year in any employment, covered or noncovered, without loss of benefits. For each $80 (or fraction thereof) of covered or noncovered earnings in excess of $1,200, 1 month's benefits are lost. In no case, however, are benefits withheld for any month in which the beneficiary's remuneration as an employee was $80 or less and in which he rendered no substantial services in self-employment. For beneficiaries age 72 or over, there is no limitation. If a retired worker's benefit is suspended, so also are the benefits of his dependents.

VII. EFFECTIVE DATES AND MINIMUM REQUIREMENTS FOR COVERAGE OF ELDERLY WORKERS AMONG NEWLY COVERED GROUPS

The coverage provided by the new law for self-employed professional groups will be effective beginning with taxable years after 1955 (the calendar year 1956 will, therefore, be the first effective year).

There is a special provision in the new law establishing special "starting and closing" dates intended primarily for persons first covered in 1956, whereby an individual who becomes entitled or dies in 1957, and has at least 6 "quarters of coverage" after 1955 can have a starting date of December 31, 1955, and a closing date of July 1, 1957, if that will yield a larger benefit amount.

Stated more simply, at least 6 quarters of coverage is required before those newly covered elderly persons now reaching retirement age, or who have reached retirement age, can qualify for benefits.

VIII. WHAT NEWLY COVERED PROFESSIONAL PERSONS SHOULD DO NOW

All newly covered professional persons should contact their nearest social security field office for details about the new law, to obtain full information and the steps which they should take. Included among these will be making an application for a social security card and account number. It is important for these persons to remember that the foregoing is merely a nontechnical, informative summary of some of the highlights of what the new law will mean to them.

New England Flood-Control Projects

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD P. BOLAND
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, as the 2d session of the 84th Congress comes to an end, I would like to just take a moment of your time to express my personal thanks and the deep appreciation of my constituents in the Second Massachusetts District, and of all of the citizens of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the New England region, for your generosity during this session in appropriating large and urgently needed sums for New England flood-control projects.

My distinguished colleague and friend, Congressman PHILBIN, who was the chairman of the Massachusetts congressional delegation committee on flood prevention and relief, has already summarized for your information just what these flood-control appropriations will do for our region in preventing disasters that we experienced last August and October.

Those disasters underscored the need for adequate flood-control projects in New England, and this body responded to our urgent requests by appropriating the largest sum ever approved in any one calendar year for our region, $34,436,000, in President Eisenhower's urgent deficiency appropriation bill, and $22 million for flood-control and water resource development programs in the public works appropriation bill. Also, congressional authorization of the Littleville Dam in western Massachusetts will speed up the planning and construction of this vital project. We also appreciate your adoption of a flood-insurance program backed by the Federal Government.

Republicans in the Senate Supported Eisenhower Program 90 Percent of the Time

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an analysis which I am having prepared of yea-and-nay votes in the Senate in the 84th Congress.

There being no objection, the analysis was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPUBLICANS IN THE SENATE SUPPORTED EISENHOWER PROGRAM 90 PERCENT OF THE TIME

An analysis which I have had made of rollcall votes in the Senate during the whole of the 84th Congress provides irrefutable evidence that Republicans gave far greater support to President Eisenhower's legislative program than did the Democrats.

The findings confirm statistically what I have stated before, that much more of the President's program would have been enacted and more of it in accordance with his recommendations had Republicans been in control of the Congress and its committees.

This is what the analysis shows:

THE REPUBLICAN RECORD

In the two sessions of the Congress there were 203 Senate rollcall votes involving the President's program out of the total of 230 votes recorded.

Fifty percent or more of the Republicans in the Senate supported President Eisenhower 183 out of 203 times, for a support record of 90 percent.

Fifty percent or more of Senate Republicans voted against the President only 21 out of 203 times, for an opposition score of 10 percent. (NOTE.—Support and nonsupport exceed 203 because in 1956 Republicans were split 50–50 on 1 vote.)

THE DEMOCRATIC RECORD

Fifty percent or more of Senate Democrats supported the President's program only 108 out of 203 times, a support record of 53 percent.

Fifty percent or more of Senate Democrats voted against President Eisenhower's program 100 out of 203 times, for an opposition score of 49 percent. (NOTE.—Support and nonsupport totaled 91 in 1955, and 117 in 1956 because 5 votes were evenly split 50–50.)

The above calculations are based on actual votes cast, exclusive of absences, nonvoting pairs, and announced but nonvoting positions.

The vote calculations for each session are as follows:

Out of 94 Senate record votes in the first session and 136 votes in the second session of the 84th Congress, 89 and 114, respectively, involved President Eisenhower's program.

Fifty percent or more of the Senate Republicans supported President Eisenhower 83 out of 89 times for a support record of 93 percent in 1955, and 100 out of 114 times in 1956 for a support record of 87 percent. Over half of the Senate Republicans supported the Republican program during both sessions of the 84th Congress 90 percent of the time.

Fifty percent or more of the Senate Republicans voted against the administration only 6 out of 89 times in 1955 and only 15 out of 114 times in 1956, for an opposition score of 10 percent for the 2 years. (NOTE.—Support and nonsupport total 115 in 1956 because on 1 vote the Republicans were split 50–50.)

Fifty percent or more Senate Democrats voted against President Eisenhower 29 out of 89 times for an opposition record of 32 percent in 1955, and 71 out of 114 times in 1956 for an opposition record of 62 percent. During the entire 84th Congress over half of the Senate Democrats opposed the Republican program 49 percent of the time.

Fifty percent or more of the Senate Democrats voted for the President's program only 62 out of 89 times for a support score of 69 percent in 1955, and only 46 out of 114 times in 1956 for a support score of 40 percent—a 53 percent support score for the 2 years. (NOTE.—In the case of Democrats, support and nonsupport total 91 in 1955 and 117 in 1956 because on 5 votes they were evenly split 50–50.)

Social Security: The Most Beneficial and Humane Legislation in This Century

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. LOUIS C. RABAUT

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, the 84th Democratic-controlled Congress has just seen enacted into law one of the most beneficial and humane pieces of legislation in this century—the 1956 Social Security Amendments. This law is an example of the continuing efforts of the Democratic Party to advance the lot of the average American—to assure him that, despite the tides of adversity that sometimes are part of the free enterprise system, he will be able to provide for self and family in a respectable, independent fashion.

It gives me great pleasure to bring to the attention of the American people who will be affected some of the more important and forward looking features of this vital legislation. While it is not as liberal as I think it should be, it is a very excellent foundation on which to build an expanded program.

An outstanding advance in the history of social legislation is the provision for insurance of the totally disabled at age 50. This is most appropriate and long overdue. In our land of plenty, it is a national disgrace to have helpless persons in desperate need. Heretofore, a working man or woman could pay into social security for years and then suffer a totally disabling injury and receive no compensation until age 65. The total disability payment was incorporated in the original House bill, but the Senate deleted it from their version. Fortunately, the House-Senate conference restored the disability clause to its rightful position in the new bill. It has been estimated by experts that 250,000 persons will benefit under the new law in the first year of its operation.

Another eminently just and necessary stipulation provides for retirement of widows and workingwomen at age 62. I have always felt that the age for both widows and wives should be lowered to 60. The average married woman is approximately 5 years younger than her husband, but cannot draw benefits until 5 years after the retirement of her husband. This is most unjust treatment of our senior citizens who are usually very much in need of the combined payments to keep abreast of modern-day living expenses. My Democratic colleagues and I voted in the House for uniform reduction of retirement age for women from age 65 to 62. As I previously stated, I have always favored retirement for widows and wives at age 60, but realized that age 62 would receive more favorable consideration at this time. The House approval of age 62 was altered in the Senate to read age 62 with full benefits for widows and an accrual reduction in retirement benefits for wives and workingwomen if they retire between 62 and 65. The maximum amount receivable by workingwomen at age 62 would be 80 percent of full benefits. Payments will not be increased at age 65 for those women who elect receipt of benefits prior to their 65th birthday.

The social-security bill of 1956 has pursued a most realistic course in widening its coverage to provide protection for an additional 250,000 workers. This number may be even further increased by local referendums. Many groups such as TVA employees, State and city employees, and practically all self-employed professional people except medical doctors are now included.

In a sharp departure from precedent, payments will now be made after age 18 to the dependent child of a retired or deceased worker if the child has been disabled since before the 18th birthday. The mother of the disabled dependent is also eligible for payment as long as she continues to care for said child. This provision took into consideration the mentally deficient children who must be cared for long after the normal son or daughter has ventured forth to make their own way in the world. A mentally incompetent child is an additional worry when the parents realize that financial reverses or death of one or both parents will create an even worse situation for a child who cannot protect himself from the normal dangers of everyday existence. I am sure this provision will remove a certain degree of concern from the shoulders of the affected parents.

In this connection, many improvements were made for grants-in-aid for public assistance. A new provision provides matching funds for medical care furnished those receiving old-age assistance from the States. Additional funds have been made available for use in aid to dependent children, aid to the blind, and aid to the permanently and totally disabled up to a maximum average of $6 per adult and $3 per child. In short, more national funds will be made available than ever before.

Mr. Speaker, while I am not a member of the Ways and Means Committee which worked so long and diligently on the new social security retirement bill, I have always been most keenly aware of the problems inherent in advancing years. I supported the original Social Security Act in the thirties and have fought to keep the program realistic and in step with the times. The statement of that great patriot, Thomas Jefferson, that "laws and institutions must go hand in hand with the progress of the human mind" was never more true than in the modern application of social security.

In this day of improved diet and medical advances, our people are living many years longer than was ever thought possible. While this is good news, it has created certain problems that must be coped with in the immediate future. Our older people with more leisure time than ever before are in what we might call a state of transition, facing a host of new problems, including boredom and financial difficulties. They are naturally self-respecting people who do not desire to be a burden to anyone—especially their children who are now busily engaged in raising their own families. Many of our retired citizens face a life of loneliness as a result of a lack of national planning in their behalf. Some progress has been made in housing for the aged in community-like hotels where those of common interest might gather to enjoy their remaining years with a minimum of worry. Wherever such endeavors have been tried, they have been a huge success. However, these projects have been the unselfish labor of public-spirited individuals and do not come close to filling the needs of an ever-expanding group of retired people. It is indeed regrettable that the provision for the creation of a commission on the aging was stricken from the social security bill.

In connection with my desire to assist the older people of our country, I introduced on February 16, 1956, a bill to provide that in determining income of World War I veterans and their widows for the purpose of ascertaining eligibility for pensions, payments under title II of the Social Security Act shall not be taken into account. Under the present system, if the total return from a pension and social security exceeds $1,400, the pension is discontinued. This bill did not fare well this session due to an unexpected legislative backlog. It is my hope that I will have the opportunity and privilege to reintroduce similar legislation in the 85th Congress.

In conclusion, I would like to say that I am confident that Congress will continue to adjust social security to meet the growing needs of an ever-expanding economy.

Record of the 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. HUGH J. ADDONIZIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. ADDONIZIO. Mr. Speaker, as this session draws to a close, it is time to take stock of how well the 84th Congress has met its responsibilities to the American people and to discuss briefly the problems confronting us in this challenging period of world history. In the words of a great American of revered memory, "Let us look at the record." That record discloses a gratifying lack of petty partisanship and obstructionism on the part of the Democratic majority in evaluating the administration's recommendations and the passage of a substantial amount of legislation for the public welfare. It is a matter of keen regret to me that certain vitally important measures of deep concern to me failed of enactment. If we are to build a better America, if we are to make American democracy more healthy, more effective, more genuine, we must have vigorous and forward-looking-Government dedicated to the public interest, not dominated by a single interest viewpoint.

The traditional concern of the Democratic Party for the ordinary men and women of the country, its championship of legislation for the greatest good for the greatest number, is reflected in its fight in the 84th Congress for legislation to help the consumer, the farmer, the working man and woman, and our elderly people. As a sponsor of legislation on the subject, I am proud that the Democrats in Congress were victorious, over the opposition of the administration and their Republican colleagues, in making another advance in humanitarian progress by the modernization of the Social Security Act. Social security represents one of the greatest single advances in the history of our Government—initiated and improved by the Democratic Party—and it serves a vital need that cannot be as well served otherwise. The extension of coverage, the lowering of the retirement age for women, the provision for disability benefits, and the liberalization of Federal grants for State programs will provide a greater measure of relief and freedom from anxiety for Americans throughout the land. We have not reached the goal of perfection—indeed, the newly approved amendments contain various inequities and defects—but we have made steady progress.

Another important achievement of the Democratic 84th Congress is the enactment of a vast program of health and medical research. I am pleased that Congress has extended the Hill-Burton Act for grants to hospitals, increased funds for research far above the administration proposals, and established a new system for Federal grants to private research institutes. While we spend billions of dollars each year for defense against the ravages of war, very little has been spent to find the defenses against the crippling and killing ravages of the body.

Our country's most priceless resource is our children. They are entitled to decent housing and to adequate education. As a member of the Special Subcommittee on Housing, it was my honor and duty over the past 12 months to participate in one of the most intensive studies and investigations of Government-assisted programs ever conducted. Our reports received general commendation for their thoroughness and objectivity and our recommendations were largely adopted by the full Banking and Currency Committee in the housing measure reported to the House. Republican opposition to the public housing program, including that for our elderly people, resulted in adoption of the pitifully inadequate administration proposals. I am pleased, however, that part of the fine program for elderly persons sponsored by me was saved, and I hope the relief provided them in the housing legislation will lead to further action in this important field in the next Congress. I shall continue my efforts to meet the many special housing needs of the American people, including rental housing at moderate rents in urban areas.

The housing problem of our elderly people and others on fixed income is complicated by the fact that living costs have climbed to a new peak within the past month with the end not in sight. The administration's boast of the increase in the profits of big business is small comfort to those faced with declining purchasing power. The cost of everything that goes into daily living has gone up, and this, of course, has particularly affected our low and middle income families. In this connection, more must be done to enlarge employment opportunities for older workers.

Even more regrettable than the housing outcome was the failure of the Republican Party to meet our educational needs, which is one of our greatest emergencies. How we raise our children will shape the future of our society, and yet the administration made no attempt to secure party support in final passage of this urgently needed school construction bill. As one who has been dedicated to the cause of civil rights, I resent the efforts made to place the blame for defeat of the school construction bill on this issue. The civil rights problem did not kill the bill; it was merely used by those who wanted to see the bill defeated. Ninety-five Republicans who voted for the Powell amendment then voted against the bill on final passage although the amendment had been adopted; a switch of 16 Republican votes would have cleared the measure.

Again, the Republicans attempted to make political capital out of the civil-rights legislation when it came to the floor after 3½ years of inaction by the administration. The fundamental problem of eliminating second-class citizenship and insuring equal rights to all Americans should be above politics.

I have sponsored legislation designed to establish an immigration program that is consonant with our democratic traditions and I have sought to secure the improvement of the Refugee Relief Act. I regret this humanitarian and long-overdue legislation has not been acted upon by the House. I have personal knowledge of many compassionate cases dependent upon this program, and I am confident the American people desire its continuation and liberalization.

Failure of the Congress, due to the administration and Republican leadership opposition, to enact legislation to help people and business in depressed industrial areas is most unfortunate. I cannot accept the Republican theory that the right to suffer is one of the joys of a free economy. The House Banking and Currency Committee, of which I am a member, reported a constructive measure to cope with this grave problem which requires decisive action. The same indifference and inaction have characterized the Republican attitude toward the problems of small business in the face of a drop in small-business profits of 66 percent between 1952 and 1955 and an annual rate of business failures almost twice as great as it was under the Truman administration. Small business needs a fairer share of defense and other Government contracts, tax relief, and fuller protection against monopoly. The backbone of our economic system is small business; we must preserve it.

The Republican philosophy that big business should be singled out for special benefits is exemplified in its tax legislation which gave 73 percent of relief to corporations. I supported the Democratic proposal in the first session to raise exemptions and thus aid the average taxpayer. I also voted for the Democratic bill to increase the amusement-tax exemption.

The bill reported by the House Banking and Currency Committee to create a Federal flood-insurance system was approved. Among other constructive measures adopted by the 84th Congress were an increase in the minimum wage, improvements in the civil service and railroad retirement systems, extension of the Salk vaccine program, initiation of a huge highway program, improvement in the budgeting and accounting procedures and methods, continuation of the World War II GI loan program, extension of reciprocal trade agreements and mutual security programs, simplification of customs procedures, various benefits to servicemen and their dependents, extension and enlargement of school lunch and milk programs, and numerous other proposals pertaining to domestic and international policy. It has clearly not been a do-nothing Congress, this Democratic 84th Congress now about to adjourn.

I shall continue to seek the protection of our natural resources and the development of the peaceful uses of atomic energy. Our public lands, national forests and wildlife refuges belong to all the people, and I deplore the administration's giveaway policies. I shall continue to support policies designed to overcome the weaknesses in our national defense and our foreign policy programs and to meet the Communist challenge throughout the world. I have complete confidence that with the kind of leadership under which we licked a depression and won a war we will devise adequate solutions to the pressing international problems confronting us.

One of the most gratifying aspects of public office is the opportunity to help others, both in the field of legislative proposals and in the area of human problems. It has been my good fortune to be able to assist numerous constituents, and for this purpose I maintain two district offices. I have followed the principle that the people I have the honor to represent are not interested in showmanship and ballyhoo, but in honest, sincere action.

I have been deeply conscious of the high honor that the people of the 11th District have paid me in selecting me as their Representative for the past four Congresses. I have conscientiously tried to discharge my duties to the best of my ability and to consider each legislative proposal on its independent merits and from the standpoint of the public welfare. It is gratifying to me that my name was included in the group of Members about whom Mr. Larston D. Farrar, in his recent Washington Lowdown, commented:

> There is a minority in the House of Representatives and, fortunately, it is a growing minority—of Members who understand their constitutional role in the scheme of things. They won their offices by getting out and debating the issues with the people. The names of these men, who are greatly to be admired, are a curious admixture, showing that second- and third-generation Americans are taking an increasing interest in political matters.

Mr. Speaker, it is my earnest hope and prayer that our Nation, blessed in so many ways, will realize its great destiny and that we will build a better America and a better world for our children.

President Eisenhower a Religious Man

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, one of the most gratifying conditions that has resulted since President Eisenhower assumed the Presidency has been the recognition that morality should have, and does have, an important place in determining the policies of Government.

In the earliest beginnings of our Government there was an unmistakable acknowledgment of dependence upon Almighty God. In fact, in the early days of the colonies there were statutes that required officials of Government to believe in God as a requisite to holding public office. This was no empty or merely formal requirement. It was based upon the deep religious convictions of the men and women of that time. They were putting into Government the same rules of conduct that governed their own individual lives. Thus, our Government was founded in a very real sense on religious principles and such fact found expression in every conceivable way.

To look back over the history of this Nation is to be impressed with the fact that a divine hand has constantly guided and directed our course as a nation. At times questions have arisen that were fundamental to our very existence as a nation. They have touched the very foundation stones of our Government. But in each such instance there has been evidence that the divine hand that guided us in founding this great Nation and supported us in its maintenance has also directed our course in successfully meeting and overcoming the numerous and varied difficulties which, at different times, have confronted us.

Our dependence upon Almighty God as the real source of strength of this Nation has been symbolized in the words—"In God We Trust"—stamped upon our coins. As a result of our dependence upon God we have been enabled to become the moral leader of the world. Today we stand preeminent among all the nations of the world. To maintain that position of preeminence it is necessary that we continue to recognize our dependence upon God and continue to follow His guidance and direction. Otherwise, we cannot hope to lead the world in the establishment of peace and good will.

The most encouraging sign in recent days that gives evidence of an intention to continue our recognition of God in the affairs of government was the incident that occurred at the inauguration of President Eisenhower. On that day when the President-elect was about to take the oath of office, an event occurred that astonished the whole assemblage present to see the inauguration, as well as the millions of people elsewhere who viewed the proceedings on television or listened to the radio. I refer to the request of President Eisenhower that he be permitted to offer his own little prayer to Almighty God before taking the oath of office. Never before in the history of our Government had such a request been made. The inauguration proceedings are always formal with outstanding religious leaders of differing denominational beliefs present to offer the invocations. But here, in addition to all the usual formalities in this respect, the President-elect in a spirit of humility and without previous notice to anyone made his unusual request. The request struck deep into the hearts of his listeners. It created a feeling that cannot be described. A pronounced quietness immediately took possession of all who were present. The people seemed to grasp the real significance and importance of the event and entered into it in the same spirit that dominated President Eisenhower.

The prayer that the President offered was one that left a lasting impression. It was so humble, so simple in expression, so lacking in ostentation, and so deeply sincere that it made an appeal and created an influence that cannot be adequately expressed nor estimated.

The offering of that prayer in public, in my opinion, had the immediate effect of recreating the religious atmosphere that was so important in establishing a religious foundation in the beginning of this Nation, and it left no doubt that the President was a deeply religious man who recognized his own deficiencies and the need of help from a divine source to fulfill the heavy duties incident to leadership in this great Nation.

Furthermore, it cannot be other than reassuring to realize that as the President was willing to pray in public for divine guidance at the very beginning of his term of office, so we can readily believe that he continues to pray in private as each new day brings new and difficult problems in these times of uncertainty. The example he has set in the matter of prayer together with his regular attendance on the means of worship each Sunday gives further and satisfying evidence that the words "in God we trust" as a national expression of faith is also the private and individual faith of President Eisenhower.

What could be more in accord with the high ideals and religious convictions of this Nation than to have a people, as well as a President, who by word and deed accept in its fullest significance the declaration, "In God we trust"?

Results of Annual Questionnaire Sent to Constituents by Hon. Wayne L. Hays, of Ohio

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WAYNE L. HAYS
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include the results of my annual questionnaire. The office has been swamped with questionnaires ever since we distributed them about a month and a half ago and I have been quite overwhelmed with the excellent results. That you were all willing to take the time to fill them out and return them has meant a lot to me. They have helped me in my job as your Representative and I am glad that so many people took the opportunity to express their opinions both in their answers and extra comments.

As of July 30, 1956, approximately 2,100 questionnaries have been returned. The results have been compiled and below you will find the statistics on how you "voted" on the various issues. By comparing with my voting record you can see how I voted on these issues that came before the House.

ANNUAL QUESTIONNAIRE

Many important issues are now before this session of Congress. This questionnaire gives you an opportunity to express your views on these issues and your answers will assist me in my job as your Representative. Please mail the completed questionnaire in the enclosed postage-free envelope. Thank you.

Report to the People of the 10th Congressional District of New York

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. EDNA F. KELLY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mrs. KELLY of New York. Mr. Speaker, the 84th Congress has joined the yesterdays in American history. Only in the passage of time can its accomplishments—or lack of them—be evaluated on the credit or debit side of the ledger. The basis for judgment here should be whether or not Congress met the challenge of the important issues in this decisive era.

It must be borne in mind that most of the major legislation is recommended to the House and the Senate by the executive branch of our Government. In the 84th Congress the Republican Party has been charged with this responsibility under the administration of President Dwight D. Eisenhower whose recommendations for legislation have been presented to Congress.

Programs, in the form of legislative bills, are introduced and then referred to the appropriate committees. The most important phase of congressional procedure is the action by these committees. Here is where the most intensive consideration is given to proposed legislation and where the people of our Nation have an opportunity to be heard. When a committee favorably reports a bill, it transmits to the House—or the Senate—a description of the purpose and scope of the bill and the reasons for its recommended approval. The final action—or lack of it—on the part of Congress is proof of the President's implementation of his own program.

In the Congress which has very recently completed its work, the Democrats were in the majority as a result of the elections in 1954. The Republican occupant of the White House predicted that because of this situation, "a cold war of partisan politics would develop." Events proved otherwise. As shown in the RECORD, on issues affecting the security and well-being of our Nation, the President received more support from the Democrats in Congress than he did from the members of his own political party.

The 84th Congress chalked up no great legislative experiments or major reforms. On the credit side of the ledger for the 84th Congress were a number of major achievements. These achievements will be discussed briefly in my report. On the debit side, were bills bottled up in committees, especially the Committee on Rules, and bills defeated on the floor. To a degree, this was due to the failure of the President to support his own recommendations, or to send at the last minute, supporting statements for legislation under consideration, thereby contributing to confusion and frustration. But—and this is even more important—this brought about a lessening of interest and vague support of legislation from members of the Republican Party and a lack of initiation of legislation by the Democrats due to the uncertainty of what the President really wanted, or would support.

I believe the foregoing will throw some light upon the report which I present to the people of the 10th Congressional District whom I am proud to represent in Congress. Although the record may not please every individual, I want my constituents to know that I have followed the dictates of my conscience and have tried to represent them to the best of my ability.

This is my sixth annual report to the enrolled voters of the 10th District. Any questions or problems within my jurisdiction will be taken care of through my Washington office which is open the entire year. A letter addressed to me at the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., will be given my immediate attention.

INTERNATIONAL

I am chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Europe, having been elected to this post by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs. In the fall of 1955, it was my duty, and I considered it also a privilege, to take my subcommittee to Europe in order to reevaluate the foreign policy of the United States in that area. The report of the findings of this committee is available to all who request it, either from my office or from the House Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The adverse effect of the Geneva Conference upon the nations of Europe was shocking to me and I conveyed this to the Secretary of State at the time of his Foreign Ministers Conference at Geneva. The Geneva Conference disunited the free world; it caused the rise of neutralism which now has Europe and Asia in its grip; it weakened NATO, SEATO, the Balkan Alliance, the Baghdad Pact, and other defense treaties. Under the guise of the friendly cooperation tendered the Soviet Union at this time, communism, in its Januslike character, slipped into the Middle East by giving advanced arms and war potential material to Egypt. The free world is now caught in the whirlwind as crisis after crisis continues to be the order of the day in this section. In my report to the Secretary of State, I had suggested that the United States withdraw from the conference and expose the dualism of the U. S. S. R. to the free nations of the world before it was too late.

Bearing in mind these facts concerning the European situation, the House Foreign Affairs Committee started its hearings on the mutual-security bill on March 20, 1956. The actual recommendations of the executive branch had not been sent to the committee until March 19. The recommendations carried the request for increased foreign aid to the amount of $4.7 billion, including $540 million for advanced weapons. We were told by the administration that this money represented the United States share of supporting the forces in being. The amount requested in the previous year, for the same purpose, was $3.5 billion. The original request contained a recommendation for the appointment of a commission to restudy the United States foreign policy. This provision was deleted from the bill because the power to appoint an executive commission is one of the prerogatives of the President, and further, the committee felt that its inclusion in the bill would weaken the measure. Later, the Foreign Affairs Committee adopted a separate resolution authorizing the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives to examine and reappraise the objectives, methods, and results of our foreign policies and programs involving the Mutual Security Act and related legislation. The committee will prepare its findings and recommendations not later than February 1, 1957.

The administration, however, claimed that our foreign policy was in a state of change and not yet formed. It is understandable why the House cut the President's request from $4.7 billion to $3.8 billion. Few, if any, Congressmen would authorize the expenditure of billions of American dollars without knowing the specific plan for the use of such funds.

In cutting the mutual security funds, the Congress initiated a thorough review of our foreign policy; prohibited the administration from sending further military aid to Yugoslavia, but refused to cut off undelivered military materiel from previous appropriations; adopted a series of resolutions reaffirming its opposition to colonialism and to the admission of Red China to the United Nations, supporting the right to self-determination of other peoples; urging that Spain be admitted to NATO; and stressing our determination to work for the unification of Germany, Korea, and Vietnam, and for the freedom and independence of the Communist-dominated nations.

The work of the Committee on Foreign Affairs was not confined to the foreign aid bill. A statistical record of the committee's operations is being compiled and it will be sent to those who request it. Of 39 bills and resolutions favorably reported by the committee and passed by the House, 37 were enacted. Among these was my resolution—House Concurrent Resolution 265—opposing the admission of Red China to the United Nations. This resolution passed the House by the vote, 391–0 and the Senate, 86–0.

In this session of Congress, the stamp of approval was put on a new scale of salaries for more than 300 Cabinet members, White House assistants, and other officials in departments, agencies, boards, and commissions. Also the Congress provided for the disposal of alien property seized during World War I.

The House adopted House Resolution 574 expressing the sympathy and encouragement of the House of Representatives for the people of Poland in their revolt at Poznan against Communist dictatorship and urging efforts to ship food to them. The Senate passed a similar resolution.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

In the field of national defense, the Democratic majority is disturbed by the dependency put upon the H-bomb for national protection. What will happen if the Soviet continues to nibble away at the territory of the free world, knowing we will not use the bomb? Is this administration placing the United States in a position where we will fight only the big war? The so-called Radford plan must be openly discussed. Should we keep nuclear weapons at the peak of development, involving great costs, together with the reduction of men under arms? Should we have the United States quotient so low we could not defend ourselves in a small "brush fire"? With these facts in mind, and taking its inspiration from Senator STUART SYMINGTON, the 84th Congress increased the administration's request for Air Force funds by $900 million. At the same time, it expanded research facilities in aeronautics, enlarged atomic energy projects, and increased funds for our aircraft control and warning system. It also reorganized our military Reserves, forestalled Marine Corps manpower cuts, raised the officer strength of the Armed Forces by 60,000, and enacted a $1.4 billion naval construction program which included an atom-powered cruiser and supercarrier.

In addition, the Congress renewed to June 30, 1958, the authority of the President to allocate and fix priorities of critical and strategic materials and to grant defense loans and subsidies under the Defense Production Act; authorized a $2.1 billion construction program at installations and bases of Armed Forces, including new housing facilities abroad; provided for housing for essential civilian employees of the armed services; authorized $295.2 million for acquisition and construction of property and facilities by the Atomic Energy Commission; extended to July 1, 1957, the authority of the Department of Defense to expand productive capacity of industrial facilities in emergency and to stockpile machine tools; authorized construction of prototype modern cargo vessels for mass production in event of emergency; strengthened penalties for seditious conspiracy and for advocacy of the overthrow of the United States Government; and granted Federal consent to agreements among New York, New Jersey, and contiguous States for mutual military aid in emergency.

PUBLIC DEBT

In commenting on our national debt, I quote from the remarks of the Honorable CLARENCE CANNON, of Missouri, the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations and the outstanding authority on appropriations and the budget. Chairman CANNON states—and we all agree—that "the size of the national debt is appalling. It is so huge as to defy comprehension. We are paying $7 billion a year just to carry it. But what is worse, it has consistently increased under the present administration despite repeated, categorial promises to the contrary in the campaign of 1952. These administration pledges have been broken. And they cannot possibly be redeemed in the few remaining months of the administration. In a speech at Providence, R. I., in October 1952, President Eisenhower said:

"Our children deserve a little better of us than to keep hanging bigger and better debts about their necks.

"The following facts conclusively show that bigger debts have been piled upon the American people during the present administration.

"The public debt during 3 fiscal years of this administration

[In billions]

	Beginning of year
"Fiscal 1954 (July 1953)	$266.1
"Fiscal 1955 (July 1954)	271.3
"Fiscal 1956 (July 1955)	274.4
"Fiscal 1957 (July 1956)	272.7
"Increase during 3 full fiscal years	+6.6

"CONTRAST WITH PREVIOUS ADMINISTRATION

"Mr. Speaker, the $6.6 billion increase is in sharp contrast to the record of the previous administration under similar peacetime conditions. During 4 full peace years—that is, fiscal years in which there was no war operation—under the previous administration, the debt was reduced by $12 billions, as follows:

	Billions
"June 1946	$269.4
"June 1950	257.4
"4-year decrease under previous administration	−12.0

"The administration, 2 years running, asked that the old debt ceiling of $275 billion be raised to $281 billion. Again this year, the request was renewed, this time for $278 billion."

BUDGET

In the 2d session of the 84th Congress, enacted appropriations total $60,573,217,590, which is a net of $570,260,947 below the estimates of appropriations submitted by the President, and rescissions of prior appropriations bring the total reduction of spending authority to about $1,470,260,947. The Republican Party is, therefore, taking credit for a budget surplus but it makes no mention of the fact that the foregoing reduction in requested appropriations and the largest national income in peacetime history together with heavy taxation account for the budget surplus. Incidentally, in 1951, under the Democratic administration, there was a surplus of $3.5 billion.

NATIONAL ECONOMY

One of the most important measures enacted by the 84th Congress was the law to amend the Social Security Act. Despite vigorous opposition by the administration, the new law contains provisions lowering the retirement age for women to 62; providing benefits for totally and permanently disabled workers at the age of 50; continuing benefits for physically disabled and mentally retarded children over 18; increasing grants for public assistance to the needy aged, the blind, and disabled, and extending social-security coverage to many professional groups including lawyers and dentists. Space does not permit a detailed explanation of this law, but I will be glad to send it to those who request it.

In the important field of public works legislation, a long-range program to build 41,000 miles of modern, interstate highways was approved. This is one of the most far-reaching actions taken by the Congress, benefiting the motoring public and commercial users of our highways. The new roads, costing $33.4 billion for a 13-year highway construction program, will be financed on a pay-as-you-go basis through increased taxation on motor fuels, trucks, trailers, and tires. The administration advocated a separate bond issue to meet this road construction cost, but the Congress dictated the pay-as-you-go plan for which it received the plaudits of the press and the public.

Other enactments affecting our national economy include the extension to April 1, 1957, of the existing excise-tax schedule and the 52-percent corporate income tax; the exemption from Federal admissions tax of tickets of 90 cents or less; the increase from $25 million to $125 million in the Small Business Administration authorization to make disaster loans and to liberalize terms; the extension of the Renegotiation Act to December 31, 1958, to provide for recovery of excessive profits from defense contracts; the construction of an atomic-powered merchant ship for operation in foreign commerce; the ban against the operation in coastwise trade of vessels rebuilt outside the United States; and the control and regulation of bank-holding companies with the requirement that they divest of nonbanking interests within 5 years.

HOUSING

Those of us who understand the housing needs of low income families are appalled at the inadequate housing program enacted in the final days of the 84th Congress. We who have supported the public housing programs of past years recognize in them their benefit to the Nation and we realize that a vast segment of our people are still inadequately housed. The housing bill presented to us in the few days before adjournment authorized a 2-year program of public housing construction at the rate of 35,000 units per year. The original bill proposed 50,000 units per year for a 3-year period but even this was nowhere adequate when we realize there are 15 million substandard dwellings now in use in this country. In voting for the 2-year program of 35,000 units per year, we did so rather than adjourn without a public housing program. While the need for public housing exists, I will continue my support of housing programs.

GOVERNMENTAL REORGANIZATION

Space does not permit a detailed explanation of the enactments in respect to changes in civil service employees' retirement benefits, but I will send a copy of this law and an explanation of such benefits to those constituents who request it. Briefly, the new law liberalizes civil-service retirement benefits, increases the number of scientific positions in defense agencies, and increases salaries of certain executive positions. Another law of importance to our civil servants, is that which protects their salaries against the downgrading in their job classifications. This subject had long been of interest to me and early in this Congress I introduced a bill to protect the employees' salaries against such downgrading. Late this session I introduced a similar bill to protect the "blue collar" workers against downgrading and I shall reintroduce this measure when the Congress meets in January.

Other enactments in the field of Governmental Reorganization include those to improve governmental budgeting and accounting methods and to simplify Government accounting practices; to increase annuities under Foreign Service retirement and disability; to make the United States Customs Court a constitutional court; to provide annuities for widows and dependent children of Federal judges; to authorize the sale of the Government-owned tin smelter, and to extend the Advisory Committee on Weather Control.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

Among the laws enacted in the 2d session of the 84th Congress under this title are the following:

Authorization of a training program to increase the number of public health specialists, aid to States for training nurses and practical nurses, grants for improved mental health administration, and the extension of the Hospital Construction Act to July 30, 1959;

Authorization of $378 million in Federal aid for school construction and maintenance and operating costs in districts affected by Government activities;

Authorization of $30 million annually for 3 years for construction of non-Federal facilities for research into various crippling and killing diseases;

Authorization permitting FHA loans for repair of homes damaged in floods and other major disasters;

Creation of a joint State-Federal flood insurance program under HHFA with the Federal Government paying 40 percent of the cost;

Fifteen million dollars for Army engineers to construct without further authorization small flood-control projects;

An extension to July 1, 1957, of the Salk vaccination program;

An increase in fund authorization and an extension of the school milk program and the inclusion of the program in camps and nurseries for underprivileged children and nonprofit child-care centers and agencies;

Authorization of a 5-year, $7.5 million a year program of Federal aid for State library services in isolated rural areas;

An increase in disability benefits under the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act;

An increase in benefit payments under the railroad retirement system.

Authorization of a survey by the Public Health Service of the extent and effects of chronic illnesses;

Imposition of discretionary death penalty or life imprisonment for illicit drug peddlers who sell to children, and a provision for more effective control of narcotics;

An extension to June 30, 1957, of grants to States to aid expansion of vocational rehabilitation programs;

Authorization of $4 million for new equipment and facilities for National Institute of Dental Research;

Requirement that river steamers carry life-preservers for all passengers and crew;

Authorization for FBI to enter kidnap investigations where victim has not been returned within 24 hours;

Requirement that safety devices be placed on inside doors of refrigerators shipped in interstate commerce;

Authorization of Federal assistance to States in establishing committees on education beyond high school;

Creation of a National Library of Medicine; and Consent to New York-New Jersey-Connecticut compact for study of air pollution control.

VETERANS AND SERVICEMEN

The 2d session of the 84th Congress enacted provisions to grant educational assistance to children of certain veterans who died in World War II and Korea; gave military personnel social-security wage credits and increased benefit payments to survivors of servicemen and veterans; increased the pay of trainees under the Reserve program; granted medical care for the dependents of members of the Armed Forces; extended the program of guaranteed loans for home purchase or construction to July 1958; authorized loans for the purchase of farm homes by veterans; extended to 1960 the unemployment program for veterans of the Korean war; increased the pay of medical and dental officers in the Armed Forces and in Public Health Service; and extended the mustering-out pay for Korean veterans.

AGRICULTURE

Although there is no agricultural production in my district, the subject is of very grave importance to consumers. Among the agricultural measures enacted in this session were:

The law which authorized $1.2 billion for the voluntary soil-bank program to reduce production acreage of crops in surplus supply; fixed feed-grain supports at 76 percent; encouraged disposal of surpluses at home and abroad;

Extension of the Sugar Act to December 31, 1960; fixing domestic producers' quota at 55 percent and foreign suppliers' at 45 percent of the market;

Repeal of the excise tax on gasoline and oil used only in farm machinery;

An increase to $20 million in the authorization for eradication of brucellosis and extension of the program through 1958;

An increase from $1.5 billion to $3 billion of the limit on sales of surplus commodities for foreign currency under the Foreign Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954. I am proud to state that Congress prevented the administration from selling surpluses behind the Iron Curtain to Russia and the satellite nations. This Congress sustained my amendment which embodies within the law a clear definition of "friendly nations";

A liberalization of terms of farm loans, authorization of aid to part-time and low income farmers under Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act; authorization of $50 million increase in the emergency-loan program and its extension to June 30, 1959;

A broadening of the watershed and flood prevention program; allocating a share of costs among Federal and local interests;

A broadening of the plan of payments to farmers for water conservation practices;

An increase in the borrowing capacity of Commodity Credit Corporation from $12 billion to $14 billion;

A broadening of the licensing power of Secretary of Agriculture under the Perishable Commodities Marketing Act; and

A provision for regulation of interstate transportation of migrant farm workers.

NATURAL RESOURCES

Among the laws affecting our natural resources, the Congress achieved the following:

An increase of $1 million a year of Federal research grants to States and an expansion of the water pollution control program to $50 million a year for 5 years.

An authorization of $87 million, 2½-year program of Government purchase of tungsten, asbestos, fluorspar, and columbium-tantalum to assure continued production.

In the field of power development, Congress approved the Upper Colorado River storage project which was forcefully supported by the President and the administration. This project, developed by private companies at public expense, will cost the Government $760 million. Politically, this will benefit the Republicans in Congress. On the other hand, the Senate rejected the development of Hells Canyon on Snake River in Idaho which is of far greater importance to this area. This project carried plans for growth such as TVA, and would have benefited the Democrats in that area. The Fryingpan-Arkansas project was rejected in the House during the closing days for lack of time to give it proper consideration. It was fully supported by the administration and would have assisted Republican elections.

The Niagara power project, long discussed and badly needed in New York, passed the Senate under the able leadership of Senator HERBERT LEHMAN, but it was blocked in the House Rules Committee by the administration who, no doubt, had an eye on the senatorial race in New York in November.

From this, we can see there was much needed legislation rejected by Congress, blocked in committee or killed for the session. This can be attributed to many reasons. The President carefully avoided any suggestion of pressure on behalf of his program. As a result, there was entire loss of important legislation, or such watering down of an issue that its sponsor could no longer recognize it. Another reason, called by many the basic reason, was that of partisanship in which the administration and blocs in Congress were equally involved.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS

One of my major concerns has been the passage of a law to guarantee civil rights to all Americans. At the beginning of his term of office, President Eisenhower promised a civil-rights program. He delegated the Attorney General to make recommendations covering this important legislation. At the end of 3½ years, there is no evidence of a specific program in this field.

A joint group of Democrats and Republicans organized in an effort to obtain recommendations and Representative HUGH SCOTT, Republican, and I were appointed to urge the administration to fulfill its campaign promise. Our many attempts to meet with the Attorney General met with refusal. Finally, in June recommendations were sent to the Judiciary Committee where, through the great and good help of Chairman EMANUEL CELLER, a bill was reported to the floor. This bill, inadequate though it was, passed the House but it was too late in the session to obtain action in the Senate.

A similar fate met our efforts to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act. I have introduced amendments to correct the inequities in this law. In my proposals, unused quotas must be redistributed to other nations in proportion to their quotas and in another amendment quotas would be based upon the 1950 census instead of the 1920 population figure, which is in current use.

The bill authorizing Federal aid for school construction was another important measure which failed of enactment in the 2d session of the 84th Congress. Although in his 1952 campaign speeches, the President pointed to the need for 340,000 new schoolrooms throughout the country, he did nothing to advance this legislation. The bill was defeated by the many crippling amendments which would have mad^ this legislation unwieldy. The Powell amendment to the bill is one which I supported.

Despite the campaign promises of the Republican Party, the administration failed to act on many other important issues involving the people of our Nation. The lack of action in amending the Taft-Hartley Labor Act is another excellent example.

It shall be my prime consideration in thc next session to force these important issues to the floor and to enactment. It it my duty to give undivided attention to each measure so that the common good will be served. In this way, I know I shall be protecting the best interests of my constituent and neighbors in the 10th Congressional District.

A Report to My Constituents

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES E. VAN ZANDT

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, following the policy of keeping the people of my congressional district informed of my activities as their Representative in Congress, I am submitting this brief review of some of the highlights of the 84th Congress. This brief report is a supplement to my weekly press, radio, and television reports presented during both sessions of the 84th Congress.

During the 2 years of the 84th Congress the authority and responsibility for the operation of the Federal Government were divided. The executive branch of the Government which administers the laws passed by Congress and operates the various governmental agencies was in the hands of a Republican President, Dwight D. Eisenhower.

The legislative branch of the Government is the Congress of the United States which is composed of the Senate and House of Representatives. During the 84th Congress the Democratic Party controlled both the Senate and House of Representatives as well as all congressional committees. With such absolute control over the legislative activities of Congress, Democratic congressional leaders were in position to place a life or death sign on legislative measures.

Against such a background, it is little wonder that, while the 84th Congress can be given credit as being a hard-working Congress, yet vital legislation encountered political roadblocks that were inexcusable even in a presidential election year when a display of partisan politics is not wholly unexpected. During the Democratic-controlled 84th Congress, political hypocrisy was developed to a degree the like of which I cannot recall in my public career.

There were more than 19,000 bills and resolutions introduced during the 84th Congress, the largest number since the 71st Congress of 1929–30. Of this number more than 800 were approved by the 84th Congress and became public laws. In order to consider legislation and handle other congressional matters, the 84th Congress was in session a total of 224 days which is somewhat below the record established by the 76th Congress of 1939–40 which stayed on the job for 366 days.

ATTENDANCE RECORD

During the 84th Congress, despite the heavy demands on my time because of committee assignments and visiting various Government agencies on congressional business, as well as the illness and death of my mother, I maintained a commendable attendance record by answering better than 95 percent of the quorum and rollcall votes. According to the minority clerk of the House of Representatives, my overall attendance record since coming to Congress in 1939 is one of the best in the history of the Congress of the United States.

COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENTS

I retained my membership of many years on two important congressional committees—the Congressional Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and the House Committee on Armed Services. Because of my length of service in Congress, my seniority on both of these important committees has classified me as a senior member of each. Both of my committee assignments, and especially my membership on the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, consumed a major portion of my time and to such an extent that literally for days I found myself behind closed doors involved in discussing matters pertaining to atomic energy, national defenses, and domestic and international affairs.

LARGE VOLUME OF MAIL

Throughout the 84th Congress, my daily volume of mail continued to increase to such an extent that it was necessary to reorganize and expand the clerical staff in my Washington and Altoona offices. In Altoona, because of the desire to provide greater service, new office quarters were obtained in the Central Trust Building. Following my usual practice, I personally read every piece of mail received at my Washington office. In the majority of cases, I developed the information to answer inquiries. My files are full of letters of appreciation for services rendered to my constituents. These expressions of gratitude for my efforts to truly represent at all times the people of my congressional district are deeply appreciated.

TAX LEGISLATION

With the Eisenhower administration continuing its program of economy in government, for the first time in years the national budget was balanced for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1956, and the surplus amounting to $1.7 billion was applied in reducing the national debt which as of August 1 was $272.5 billion. The action taken in applying the surplus of $1.7 billion as a reduction in the national debt, in lieu of a reduction in taxes, had the approval of both Republicans and Democrats. As a result, it was unanimously agreed by Republican and Democratic leaders in Congress that it was not possible to reduce Federal income taxes this year. Tax relief however, was provided to farmers by granting an exemption of the excise taxes on gasoline and other fuels used in operating farm machinery. During the closing days of the 84th Congress, legislation was approved which repealed the Federal tax on amusement admission tickets under 90 cents.

APPROPRIATIONS

The 84th Congress, in considering the national budget, appropriated $52.2 billion during its 1st session and $59.8 billion during the 2d session. This was almost $2 billion less than requested by President Eisenhower for the 2-year period. The reluctance of Congress to approve the $2 billion was due to the growing opposition to foreign aid expenditures.

To give you some idea of how the Government dollar is spent and using the fiscal year of 1955 as an example, 62.9 cents of the dollar was spent on national security. The remaining 37 cents was expended in the following manner: 7 cents on veterans' services and benefits, 4 cents on labor and welfare, 6.7 cents on agriculture, 1.7 cents on national resources, 2.5 cents on commerce and housing, 1.8 cents on general government, 10 cents on interest on the public debt, and 3.4 cents on international affairs and finance. Although figures are not yet available to show the breakdown of the 1956 fiscal dollar, it is expected to be similar to that of the 1955 fiscal dollar.

NATIONAL DEFENSE AND SECURITY

As a member of the congressional Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and the House Committee on Armed Services, I joined civilian and military leaders of Government in placing our national defense and security on a sounder and firmer basis. This is evidenced by my active support and my vote for the appropriation of $66.5 billion for the Defense Department and an authorization of approximately $5 billion for military and atomic energy construction programs. In addition, I supported the authorization to use United States troops to defend Formosa and voted to extend the draft law for 4 years and the doctor-dentist draft for 2 years. Congress also approved a Reserve program which had my support and which is designed to provide 2.9 million trained reservists by 1959. I also supported legislation continuing the President's power to allocate and fix priorities for critical and strategic materials. The authorization of $1.4 billion for naval construction and conversion program with emphasis on nuclear power had my support, as did the extension of the Defense Production Act and bills providing penalties for damaging aircraft, as well as strengthening the laws against sedition and conspiracy.

SOCIAL SECURITY AND OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE

Continuing my active interest in improving the Social Security Act, I voted for the new amendments which have become law and which provide additional benefits to 1,225,000 persons. The two major changes in the Social Security Act are, first, allowing physically or mentally disabled workers to obtain cash benefits at age 50; and, second, reducing the retirement age of women workers from 65 to 62. The disability plan will take effect on July 1, 1957, and make about 250,000 persons eligible for benefits. The lowering of the age limit for women workers will provide benefits for about 325,000 workingwomen and 275,000 wives of workingmen. The bill also will provide benefits to about 175,000 widows at age 62. The measure further extends old-age and survivors insurance coverage to about 200,000 lawyers, dentists, and other self-employed persons who have been excluded from social-security coverage.

The broadening and liberalizing amendments to the Social Security Act approved by the 84th Congress were in accordance with similiar amendments I have advocated over a period of years. This is especially true because of my efforts to reduce the eligibility age for retirement. For years, I have sponsored legislation designed to reduce the eligibility age to 60 years. I also strongly advocated payment of benefits to those disabled and unable to follow a gainful occupation. The reduction of the eligibility age of women to 62 years is in the form of a compromise since my amendment covered both men and women; nevertheless, it is a step in the direction of a more realistic social security program.

In regard to the need for an increase in old-age assistance benefits, the new amendments to the Social Security Act increased the Federal contribution to States by $5 monthly for beneficiaries of public assistance programs as administered in Pennsylvania by the department of public assistance. This increase of the Federal contribution will not become effective until the department of public assistance in Pennsylvania makes a similar increase of $5. In the field of old-age assistance, I continued my activities by cooperating with business, labor, and pension groups who are seeking a solution to what has become America's No. 1 problem—the adequate care and welfare of the Nation's senior citizens.

RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACT

I am greatly disappointed that the 84th Congress did not approve some of my proposals to liberalize the provisions of the Railroad Retirement Act and to increase benefits. There is no type of legislation in which I am more interested than amendments to the Railroad Retirement Act. As a matter of fact, I pleaded, prodded, and begged for action in my efforts to comply with the wishes of my constituents regarding their ideas as to how the Railroad Retirement Act should be amended. My proposed amendments were contained in 14 separate bills that I had pending before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. These bills expressed in legal language the views of my constituents regarding the manner in which they felt the Railroad Retirement Act should be amended. I was permitted to testify before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on behalf of my proposed amendments at which time it became evident that any amendments to the Railroad Retirement Act would have to be approved on a pay-as-you-go basis.

One significant development in the effort to liberalize the Railroad Retirement Act was revealed by the report of a board of actuarial experts which stated that the retirement fund was operating at an annual deficit of $86.4 million and any increase in retirement benefits would require an increase in payroll taxes to cover the cost. Confronted with this insurmountable obstacle, a bill was introduced which would increase benefits by 15 percent to about 65 percent of the present beneficiaries of the Railroad Retirement Act. The cost of the increase was to be met by increasing the payroll tax on the earnings of active railroaders and then allowing them credit on their income tax for the amount of the increase in payroll tax. The Democratic-controlled House Committee on Ways and Means refused to act favorably on the bill because of the income tax proposal, with the result that in the closing hours of the 84th Congress, in a desperate effort to increase retirement benefits, a compromise bill was offered providing for a 10 percent increase without any increase in the payroll tax. This bill was approved by Congress and signed by President Eisenhower on August 7. It is estimated that it will cost an additional $83 million making a total annual deficit in the retirement fund of $169.4 million. When President Eisenhower signed the bill, he stressed the point that when Congress convenes next January some means must be found to finance the deficit of $169.4 million and any future amendments liberalizing the Railroad Retirement Act that Congress may approve.

In reporting on my activities in the field of railroad-retirement legislation, I worked in close harmony with the 21 standard railway-labor organizations that endorsed the legislation and, therefore, I yield to no one in the effort I put forth during the 84th Congress to liberalize the Railroad Retirement Act and increase its benefits.

VETERANS AND THEIR DEPENDENTS

During the 84th Congress, I continued my efforts in behalf of the veterans of all wars and their dependents, an activity that I began after my discharge from World War I in 1919. Not only have I personally assisted hundreds of veterans and their dependents in obtaining benefits to which they were entitled, but I played an active role in securing congressional approval of bills, now laws, which provide an increase in benefits to the veterans of all wars and their dependents. While the 84th Congress enacted the Servicemen's and Veterans' Survivors Benefits Act and a bill providing educational assistance to children of veterans who died from service-connected disabilities, the Democratic-controlled Senate took no action on bills passed by the House which would have provided benefits to widows of World War II and Korea; granted a 10 percent increase to service-connected veterans; and provided a pension to the veterans of World War I. These bills, which we approved in the House, died in the Senate with the adjournment of the 84th Congress.

A SOUND NATIONAL FARM POLICY

During the 84th Congress, I joined with agricultural leaders in Congress in advocating a sound national farm policy for the country, the taxpayer and the farmer. The common objective was to relieve the Nation from the costly and wasteful burden of high rigid farm price supports and, at the same time, continue reasonable aid for American farmers. These rigid farm price supports were enacted in 1942 purely as a war measure at a time when the country was faced with a tremendous job of food production. The high prices were guaranteed as an incentive to the farmers to go all out in meeting the food needs of the Nation during World War II. From the very beginning of the 1st session of the 84th Congress, the Democrats persisted in disregarding President Eisenhower's urgent plea to not only maintain flexible price supports but also declined to adopt his 15-point rural development program. Following the courageous veto by President Eisenhower of the bill to restore rigid price controls and after weeks and weeks of stalling in the hope of making the farm issue a political football in an election year, Congress finally enacted the Eisenhower soil bank proposal—a two-part program to pay farmers to take land out of production. It approved other bills of benefit to the farmer, with the result that farm prices are increasing and the outlook for agriculture is more promising as the Eisenhower administration continues to make headway in its determined effort to curtail annual farm surpluses and, at the same time, dispose of the mountain of surplus commodities stored all over the country and which costs the American taxpayer $1 million daily for storage charges alone.

LABOR

My efforts during my congressional career to protect the welfare of American wage earners were continued during the 84th Congress as I actively supported the effort made to safeguard the jobs of American workmen by restricting the importation of cheaply manufactured foreign goods flooding the American market place. I also voted to increase the minimum hourly wage from 75 cents to $1 which legislation was enacted by the 84th Congress.

Except for the increase in the minimum hourly wage and a few other minor measures affecting special groups, the record of the Democratic-controlled 84th Congress is sadly lacking in its concern for the interest of the workingman. Despite the oft-repeated claim that the Democratic Party is a true friend of the wage earner and although it controlled all congressional committees, legislative proposals not enacted by the Democratic-controlled 84th Congress include: First, Taft-Hartley Act revisions—even those favored by organized labor; second, extension of coverage under the minimum-wage law; third, equal pay for equal work, regardless of sex; fourth, public disclosure regarding employees' pension, health, and welfare programs; fifth, Federal assistance to areas suffering chronic unemployment—area development program; sixth, grants to the States for industrial safety programs; and, seventh, revision of labor standards on work contracted or financed by the Federal Government to provide for time and one-half pay for all hours worked in excess of 8 hours a day or in excess of 40 hours a week as the work standard. It is a significant fact that most of these recommendations were originally made in 1955, and renewed by President Eisenhower in 1956, with several new ones.

HOUSING

I supported the multi-million-dollar housing bill which has been signed by the President and which provides for the construction of 70,000 low-rental housing units for low-income groups during the next 2 years. The bill provides in general for the homeowner, the home seeker, the slum dweller, and others. The bill sent to the White House represented a last-minute compromise and, while it included rental housing for elderly citizens, it did not provide for the sale of houses to them. The overall housing program is designed to stimulate the building and repair of homes, and provides disaster relief, hospital construction, college, and farm housing, and so forth.

HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE

The Democratic-controlled 84th Congress failed to approve a $1.6 billion appropriation of Federal funds to help finance new school construction. It did approve a bill which is now a law to train more public-health specialists, and to help States train registered and practical nurses and build hospitals. In addition, Congress approved bills subsidizing insurance against flood losses, extended the polio-vaccination program and the school-milk program. It also approved a 3-year program costing $90 million for the building of non-Federal facilities for research in crippling diseases, and appropriated additional funds to help States expand vocational rehabilitation programs and to conduct research in cancer, heart disease, and other ailments. I was happy to vote for all these programs, including the new school construction bill which was defeated in the House of Representatives.

HIGHWAYS

One of the largest public works measures ever presented to Congress and which had my active support was embodied in the Eisenhower highway program providing for a 13-year road-construction project involving a network of 41,000 miles of Federal interstate highways. The bill, which is now a law, provides that the cost of the new highway program, which will be in the neighborhood of $35 billion, will be financed from increased gas, fuel, rubber, and other related taxes.

WATER POLLUTION CONTROL ACT

To assist States and local governments in the prevention and control of water pollution, the 84th Congress enacted the Water Pollution Control Act. The law authorizes the appropriation of $3 million annually for the next 5 years to be expended in grants to the various States for their water pollution control programs. Similar grants are authorized over a 10-year period to aid States in the construction of necessary treatment plants to prevent the discharge of untreated or inadequately treated sewage or waste into any waters. The act establishes comprehensive programs for water pollution control and directs the Surgeon General of the United States to support and aid technical research through investigation, training and information programs.

THE ECONOMY OF MY CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT

It is gratifying that the Nation as a whole is enjoying unrivaled peacetime prosperity and that recent figures released by the United States Department of Labor disclose that over 66 million are gainfully employed. There are, however, pockets of unemployment in the Nation that are of grave concern. These labor surplus areas are victims of the scourge of unemployment which brings distress and unhappiness to good American citizens who are jobless through no fault of their own.

My congressional district for the past several years has been classified as a labor surplus area because of the loss of coal business which adversely affected our two basic industries—coal and the railroads. The use of substitute fuels, especially hydropower and foreign residual oil, has destroyed our eastern seaboard coal market with the result that the decrease in the sale of coal is reflected in the loss of freight revenue to the railroads for hauling coal, which is a contributing cause for unemployment in the railroad, coal, and related industries. In a determined effort to bolster our sagging economy, I have been active for the past several years in assisting local communities with their industrial development programs designed to attract new industries and thus diversify our economy. It is pleasing to report that practically every community in my congressional district has a live-wire industrial development committee and that thousands of dollars have been raised to finance the program of attracting new industries or expanding the facilities of existing plants. In this connection, I have worked in close harmony with these community groups, both individually and collectively, in the common effort to eradicate unemployment and rehabilitate the economy of the area.

In my efforts to be of assistance in building a strong economy in Blair, Centre, and Clearfield Counties, I have received the wholehearted cooperation of the United States Department of Commerce, the Small Business Administration, the Office of Defense Mobilization, the Department of Defense, and other Federal agencies. As a result, it has been possible for me to assist in securing the approval of loans for business firms from the Small Business Administration; to expedite the issuance of tax-amortization certificates totaling over $91 million for expanding existing industries and attracting new industries; to aid in obtaining the awarding of defense contracts to firms in my congressional district; to secure assistance of the Federal Government in surveying the needs and rendering practical aid in processing applications for flood control projects in DuBois, Tyrone, and Hollidaysburg; to assist in providing employment by securing the approval of my request to the Post Office Department and the General Services Administration to make needed repairs to post offices and other Federal buildings; and, finally, to secure approval from the Department of Defense for the construction during the next few months of five new military armories at DuBois, Curwensville, Clearfield, Bellefonte, and Altoona. In short, my activities are constantly directed in a sincere effort to provide employment opportunities to counteract the unemployment that is a menace to our economy which is based primarily on the coal and railroad industries.

As a supplement to my determined efforts to aid our depressed economy, for several years unemployed persons and their families in my congressional district have been receiving surplus food commodities as a result of my activity several years ago in arranging for the County Commissioners of Blair, Centre, and Clearfield Counties to qualify as sponsors in compliance with regulations of the Department of Agriculture regarding the distribution of Government-owned surplus commodities to the unemployed and their families.

MISCELLANEOUS

In addition to rendering service to my constituents, individually and collectively, my time was devoted to the study of legislation affecting my congressional district and the American people as a whole. When you consider the time required in attending daily sessions of Congress and committee meetings, as well as interviewing constituents and reading and answering mail, it is realized that the evening hours had to be used in studying legislation in preparation for hearings and debates on various measures. Frankly, I found myself constantly burning the midnight oil as I read volumes of the hearings on major bills pending before Congress. This action is mandatory if a Member of Congress has the best interests of his congressional district at heart and is conscientious in casting his vote in an intelligent manner.

PERSONAL SERVICES TO CONSTITUENTS

As Representative of the 20th Congressional District of Pennsylvania, I have always regarded my constituents as being in the role of an employer and that, together, we enjoy an employer-employee relationship. In an effort to give an account of my stewardship, I have tried zealously to keep in close contact with the residents of Blair, Centre, and Clearfield Counties by frequently informing them of happenings in Washington. As many know, when Congress is in session, I report to you weekly by radio and television in addition to writing a column for the daily and weekly newspapers. From time to time reprints from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of statements made by me in Congress have been mailed to many of you. Although my congressional duties kept me close to Washington on weekdays, I made a determined effort to spend as many weekends as possible at my Altoona office and in visiting communities in Blair, Centre, and Clearfield Counties. These weekend visits made it possible for me to be available for interviews with constituents interested in legislation pending in Congress, or who had problems affecting some agency of the Federal Government.

"THANK YOU, CONGRESSMAN VAN ZANDT"

Excerpts from letters of appreciation:

COAL CAR SHORTAGE

On behalf of the coal industry in central Pennsylvania, I want to thank you for your energetic interest in our welfare. The meeting with the executive officers of Government agencies, railroads, and others which you recently sponsored and organized in Washington, D. C., was very helpful and should contribute to a large degree to alleviate the serious railroad coal-car shortage which has caused considerable distress in our area. (Eastern Bituminous Coal Association, December 1955.)

EMPLOYMENT

In grateful appreciation for your untiring and devoted service in helping further the industrial development program which has already produced several thousand new jobs for our people. (Citation from the citizens of the Altoona area, May 1956.)

RAILROAD RETIREMENT

Hon. JAMES E. VAN ZANDT was employed with the Pennsylvania Railroad 22 years and understands our problems. He has never stopped fighting to get us the best retirement system in the world. He has introduced more bills to help rail employees than any other Congressman. (Rail Pension News, May 1956.)

LABOR

Permit me in behalf of the Railway Labor Executives Association and the millions of people affected by the Railroad Retirement Act to thank you for your assistance on our railroad retirement benefit program * * * undoubtedly by now you have been informed that your candidacy in the 20th District of Pennsylvania has been endorsed by our political league (comprising 20 standard railway labor organizations). (G. E. Leighty, chairman, Railway Labor Executives Association, July 1956.)

Labor's Nonpartisan League in endorsing JIMMIE VAN ZANDT for the 78th Congress said:

You voted against the crippling Smith amendments to the National Labor Relations Act. You voted against the amendments to the Wage and Hour Act, which would have excluded 2½ million workers from benefits of this act. You voted against the May-Connally antiunion amendments. You cooperated with the United Mine Workers to secure favorable House action on the mine safety bill.

HOUSING

The CIO News, in the July 19, 1948, issue on page 4 included JIMMIE VAN ZANDT on the CIO honor roll of Congressmen who fought for action on the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill for housing, awarding him an "A" for his efforts in behalf of housing legislation.

INDUSTRY

I would like to express the appreciation of Veeder-Root, Inc., for all that you have done for making steel available for our new Altoona plant on schedule. (Leon J. Dunn, Vice President, Veeder-Root, Inc., 1956.)

QUEHANNA CURTISS-WRIGHT CORP.

Much of the benefits that the area will receive from Curtiss-Wright's installation at Quehanna can be credited to JIMMIE VAN ZANDT's unifying efforts and counsel to the corporation as the representative of this congressional district. (Clearfield (Pa.) Progress, October 1955.)

VETERANS

As service officers of the American Legion we realize perhaps more than anyone else the great need for increased benefits due disabled and impoverished veterans to which you are constantly striving as a Member of Congress. (American Legion District Service Officers, 1956.)

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

You have helped us to expedite important electronic contracts for delivery to our Navy. It is our belief that the efforts that you and Mr. Sheridan exerted in our behalf must be considered not only a contribution to national defense but also to the unemployment problem in Pennsylvania. (Edward V. Little, Executive Vice President, Dumont Airplane & Marine Instruments Co., Inc., Hyde plant, Clearfield, Pa.)

A COURAGEOUS LEGISLATOR

ONE OF THE TEN

Selected as 1 of the 10 outstanding Members of Congress. Sponsored much veteran, military, old-age pension and social-security legislation. (Congressional Quarterly, Washington, D. C., 1949.)

MINUTEMAN OF CONGRESS

Representative JAMES E. VAN ZANDT is the "Minuteman" of Congress—whether one agrees with his political philosophy it would be hard to deny that he is one of the hardest-working Congressmen in history. (Richard H. Sarge, columnist, Harrisburg (Pa.) Patriot-News, 1952.)

CONCLUSION

My seniority on the congressional Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and the House Committee on Armed Services, together with my legislative and administrative duties as a member of the 84th Congress, fully occupied my time during the 2-year period. My congressional duties received my constant attention and wholehearted devotion as I sought to represent my constituents with fidelity, efficiency, and honesty. I have tried in a sincere manner to meet every issue fairly and squarely, and at no time did I permit narrow, partisan views to influence or hinder me in doing what I considered my duty. I gave my undivided attention to the needs of my congressional district and to rendering prompt and courteous service to all constituents regardless of their creed, political affiliation, or social position in life. To the many who over the years have written me letters of gratitude and encouragement, I gratefully acknowledge your kind expressions and thank you for your thoughtfulness. The residents of Blair, Centre, and Clearfield Counties have my assurance that I feel highly honored to represent the 20th Congressional District of Pennsylvania in Congress. The confidence you have manifested in me is accepted as a constant challenge to continue my efforts to justify your faith in my ability to represent you in Congress. I shall always strive to merit your prayers and best wishes.

President Eisenhower and Republican Congress Support Negro Citizens in Demand for Civil Rights

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, no one can successfully deny that there is a great need at this time for Congress to establish in plain, strong, and positive language the rights guaranteed by the Constitution to every race, color, and creed.

It seems strange that there should be any necessity for such. But that such a necessity does exist is made plain whenever a civil-rights bill comes before Congress. It is always a signal for an intersectional controversy. And, while such legislation always obtains favorable consideration in the House, notwithstanding opposition from the South, yet it can never overcome such opposition in the Senate. This is not because the majority of the Senate on a record vote would be opposed to a civil-rights bill, but because the rules of the Senate permit the opposition to talk as long as desired and thereby kill the bill by filibustering tactics without ever bringing the bill to a final vote on its merits.

The conditions that create the necessity for such legislation arise chiefly in Southern States that are unwilling to give the Negro citizens the same rights of voting as are accorded to other citizens. By one means or another the rights of Negro citizens to vote are curtailed or effectually denied altogether. This is accomplished by restrictive laws or direct intimidation. Notwithstanding, the legislation that is enacted for the purpose has always, or practically so, been declared unconstitutional by the United States Supreme Court. Yet the time that is consumed in fighting the issue though the several courts during which the restriction is enforced, or the continual enacting of new laws on the subject, thus creating new issues and new delays, has the effect of preventing the Negro voter in such States from exercising a free right of suffrage. This, in my opinion, is not only wrong from a legal standpoint, but it is un-American and subject to condemnation of the severest kind.

The need for legislation that will protect the rights of Negroes is not limited to voting rights. There is a Jim Crow attitude not only in the use of transportation facilities in certain Southern States, in fact it is almost general, but it finds expression in numerous and varied ways of discrimination against the Negro. It is shown in limitation of employment, use of hospital, school, parks, playgrounds, and many other civic facilities that should be on an equal and fair basis for all regardless of race, color, or creed.

During my service in the Congress I have never let an opportunity to improve the status of the Negro pass by without giving it to my full-hearted and sincere approval and unlimited support. I do not mention this with any thought that thereby I am entitled to great credit. I think that my Negro constituency is entitled to such. I would be derelict in my duty and obligations to them, as a Member of Congress, were I not in full accord with all such legislation. It has been a pleasure and a privilege to do so.

To me it has been most gratifying to see the progress being made each year by the Negro citizens of our country. Notwithstanding the obstacles they have had to encounter, they have been speedily progressing in matters of higher education, in the professions, in useful vocations, and in all that pertains to useful and influential citizenship. They have shown that when given the opportunity they can progress, achieve, and accomplish that which is worth while. It is our duty to assist in this endeavor by passing legislation of whatever kind is necessary to strike off the shackles that have too often bound them and restricted this upward movement, and to adopt such measures that will be most helpful.

The Eisenhower administration, and every Republican administration within my memory or reading, has been unqualifiedly friendly and helpful to the aims and aspirations of our Negro citizens. President Eisenhower, from the very beginning of his administration, has sought not only to establish all the civil rights of the Negro but has time and again shown his confidence in the ability and patriotism of the Negro race by appointing to high office recognized Negro leaders in the field of Government. In each instance the Negroes appointed to high office have justified the confidence placed in them by the President. There is no doubt in my mind that any future Negro appointments he may make will prove equally satisfactory. There are today innumerable Negro men and women qualified by training and character to serve with honor and distinction our Government in any position to which they may be appointed.

I consider it my continuing duty to be helpful whenever and in whatever way may be within my power. I will consider it a pleasure and a privilege to do so.

Legislative Record of the Honorable Irwin D. Davidson, 20th Congressional District, New York

OF

HON. IRWIN D. DAVIDSON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Speaker, the legislative session of the 84th Congress has come to a close. Before the record is completed, however, and because I feel that an accounting of my activities is required, I wish to take this opportunity to place before my colleagues in the House and before the people of my district, the legislative activities and duties that have occupied my time, and the bills and resolutions that I have introduced during the second session.

Since the 3d of January, 1955, it has been my very great privilege to serve as the Representative of the over 350,000 persons who reside in the 20th Congressional District of New York. The honor which they bestowed on me almost 2 years ago has given me the opportunity to render a great variety of services to my constituents. Since my term of office does not expire until the 31st of December, I wish to make it plain that I shall continue, until that date, to render such services as I am able.

Since this is the last opportunity that I shall have to address my colleagues, I feel compelled to add one personal note. As you know, I am not a candidate for reelection to Congress. Instead, I have been honored with the nominations of the Democratic and Liberal Parties of New York State for judge of the court of general sessions for New York County. If elected to that office, I shall again have the opportunity to render service to the people of my State, and I am confident that my experiences here in Washington during the past 2 years will be of great help to me. I wish to thank all my good friends who have made my term of office so pleasant, and I hope that they will find this report enlightening.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, the activities and duties of a Congressman are many. Each of us serves on committees of the House of Representatives. I have had the privilege during this Congress to serve on three of the standing committees: The Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and the Committee on Banking and Currency. In my work on those committees, I have attended hearings, questioned witnesses, written reports on legislation, and helped to decide whether legislation should be reported to the floor of the House. This is a side of our life of which few people are fully aware, and in which we spend a good number of hours each day. I mention it now as a part of the total picture of our lives as the representatives of our constituents, so that, when taken together with other phases of our activities, a complete picture of a Congressman's life may be painted.

Of course, the bills and resolutions which we introduce are a very meaningful part of our activity for they reflect the views which we hold and which we feel call for legislative action by the Congress. It is because of that picture which we draw of ourselves and of our interests that I reported to the House last August my legislative record for the 1st session. It is for the same reason that I desire to make this report for the 2d session. Again, as was the case last year, I make the report with some pride, for results have been accomplished. I will discuss first the public laws which I introduced, and for convenience I have listed them under their appropriate general headings.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS—WORLD TRADE

House Joint Resolution 604, introduced April 18: This resolution was ordered favorably reported by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs and was unanimously passed by both Houses of Congress. It was signed into law by the President on July 27, 1956. The resolution authorizes the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign nations to join and participate in the United States World Trade Fair to be held in the Coliseum in my district of New York in April 1957. The States and nations will exhibit and offer for sale their respective goods and services. This fair will make a major contribution to our foreign-trade policies and will be the cornerstone and foundation of economic self-reliance for our friends throughout the world.

HOUSING

H. R. 7881, introduced January 3: This measure provided for an additional 45,000 units of public housing to be utilized by July 31 of this year and for 150,000 units during the fiscal year 1957. In addition, the bill provided for preferences to certain elderly persons in obtaining low-cost public housing.

H. R. 10295, introduced March 29: This bill would establish within the executive branch of the Government a Department of Housing and Urban Affairs to aid in and oversee the national programs for housing.

H. R. 10296, introduced March 29: This is an omnibus housing bill covering all phases of the national program. It provides for low-cost public housing, for the construction of middle-income housing and for slum clearance and urban renewal. This bill would have provided for 200,000 units of public housing in each of the fiscal years 1957, 1958, and 1959. Because of the administration's opposition to an adequate housing program, the Congress was forced to accept an entirely inadequate public-housing measure, one not even sufficient for the needs of the city of New York. The administration's bill called for only 35,000 units of public housing in each of the next 2 years, and this was the bill that Congress approved.

TAXATION

House Resolution 385, introduced January 19:

This resolution authorized an investigation and study of the desirability and feasibility of allowing taxpayers to deduct for income-tax purposes the expenses incurred in traveling to and from their places of employment. The provision in the Internal Revenue Code which bars this item as an expense and as a deduction is manifestly unfair. The cost of traveling to and from work is a real business expense for every wage earner.

H. R. 9329, introduced February 16: This measure would amend the Internal Revenue Code to permit taxpayers with greatly fluctuating incomes to average their income for 2 or 3 years and thus avoid the harsh impact of a high tax bill in a low-income year. For thousands of persons who work on a commission basis, such as salesmen, this bill would provide much needed relief.

Though neither of these bills was acted on by the House, I have written to the chairman of the newly created Subcommittee on Internal Revenue Taxation asking that the subject matter of these bills be among those considered this fall by his subcommittee.

HEALTH ANI EDUCATION

H. R. 9803, introduced March 7:

This bill provides for the conveyance of Ellis Island to the State of New York for use as a clinic for the reception, care, treatment, and rehabilitation of chronic alcoholics and narcotic addicts.

House Joint Resolution 674, introduced July 6:

This resolution would set aside the 12th day of April of each year as National Health Day to focus the attention of our Nation on the great strides that are being made in the conquest of disease. The date, April 12, was chosen because it marks the date of the passing of our late President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who, perhaps more than any President in our history, recognized the significant part that the Federal Government could play in the conquest of disease and because it was on the 12th day of April that the wonderful results of the first field trial of the Salk antipolio vaccine were announced to the world.

House Joint Resolution 597, introduced March 29: This resolution would establish a joint congressional committee to study methods of improving and obtaining the greatest benefit from the international exchange-of-persons programs sponsored and conducted by the Federal Government.

DISASTER INSURANCE

H. R. 8664, introduced January 23: This bill would amend the War Risk Insurance Act to provide relief for victims of disasters resulting from the forces of nature.

H. R. 9072, introduced February 6: This bill would create a Flood Insurance Administration, to provide for the writing of insurance against flood damage.

Both of these bills were drawn up in the hope that they would help in the discovery of a suitable formula for insuring individuals and firms against the losses caused by floods such as those that occurred in the northeastern part of the country last fall. A formula was found during this session of the Congress and a bill was passed to provide a $7.5 billion dollar Federal flood insurance and loan program.

DEPRESSED AREAS

H. R. 8877, introduced January 30: This bill would have provided relief for conditions of excessive unemployment in areas which were economically depressed. This would be accomplished by loans to assist in financing the construction of industrial plants or other industrial or commercial facilities to provide employment to persons in such areas. A similar bill passed the Senate and was favorably reported in the House, but a rule was not granted for its consideration on the floor. Thus, the bill died.

RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACT

H. R. 10102, introduced March 21: This bill provided for an increase of 15 percent in the benefits paid to retired railroad workers under the provisions of the Railroad Retirement Act. Such an increase would have brought the pensions paid to these persons more into line with reality in light of today's cost of living. The Congress passed a similar bill, except that the increase provided amounted to about 10 percent. While that is less of an increase than I felt was required, it is a step in the right direction.

PUBLIC DEVELOPMENT OF NIAGARA POWER

H. R. 11299, introduced May 17: I introduced this measure to reaffirm my support of the principle of public development of the Niagara electric power potential. As you know, in the first session I introduced H. R. 5878 as a companion bill to S. 1823 introduced by Senator Lehman. When the Senator's bill was passed by the Senate in an amended form, I reintroduced my bill in the identical language of the Senate-passed measure. The failure of the House Rules Committee to send this bill to the floor of the House for consideration was a great victory for the administration which had sought from the beginning to give this great power potential to the private utility monopoly in New York State.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the public laws which I have introduced during the second session. There are, however, other phases of my duties as a Congressman which have occupied a substantial part of my time since I took office, and which, in order to make this report complete, must be reported to you.
